Said Keene, "I'm running because I believe I have the most intense desire, the better qualifications and the difference to set me apart from my opponent."

His opponent, Donald Bishop, a sophomore College of Arts and Science major, is already familiar with elections. Bishop ran last semester for Student Government Association President but said he "I got beat quite easily". He also ran for mayor in his home town.

Bishop, discussing the ISC, called it a "basically good organization" to get the senate to respond to student input.

Bishop focused his campaign on his wanting to be a representative of the students.

"I will be there as a representative, not as an individual."

Although now not a member of the ISC, Bishop said he would consider joining should he win the election.

World health organization

Smallpox strikes seven

GENEVA, Switzerland [AP] — Seven persons in remote Ethiopian desert villages are the only persons in the world known to have smallpox, and they may be the last, the World Health Organization said yesterday. Only nine years ago the disease killed two million.

Officials of the organization — WHO — said the last cases of the disease should be over in two months. Then, if no new breakouts occur in two years time, WHO will declare the plague officially eradicated, ending a massive worldwide campaign it began in 1967.

Medical laboratories throughout the world have already begun to destroy stocks of smallpox virus, used to make vaccine, to prevent an accidental revival.

The last seven victims are in three villages isolated in the desert region of Bale, some 200 miles south of Addis Ababa, WHO said. Hardly any one travels there, and the disease has not spread. The experts are confident it will not do so in its dying stages.

Experience has shown that once eradicated the disease does not reappear. But to make sure, WHO will conduct an extensive surveillance, including a house-to-house search in the three villages.

Smallpox is caused by a virus that is transmitted only by direct contact among persons. Before modern medicine brought it under control, waves of the plague swept through whole continents, decimating populations and leaving survivors marked with ugly pockmarks and sometimes blind.

There is still no known treatment for the disease, and its origins are a mystery. But it can be prevented by vaccination.

When the WHO campaign to eradicate the disease began in 1967, an estimated 10 million to 15 million persons were infected and two million died in 43 countries, mainly in Latin America, Africa and Asia.

Probably the most dramatic achievement of the campaign was in India, where the battle was hampered by the sheer size of the population — 600 million — and a religious significance of the disease for Hindus.

Officials hailed the eradication of smallpox in India in 1975 as "a genuine public health miracle." During an epidemic in 1974, in which 188,000 were stricken and 31,000 died, Indian and WHO officials sent "search and containment" teams through the countryside by helicopter, jeep and riverboat.

They would vaccinate everyone within miles of a known case and then take measures to isolate the diseased. If even one person escaped the dragnet, he could plant the disease in a new area.

Syrians hang three

DAMASCUS, Syria [AP] — Thousands of Syrians pressed around the gallows yesterday to see the bodies of three pro-Palestinian guerrillas hanged by the government in retribution for a bloody raid on a Damascus hotel.

Clad in white tunics, the bodies were left dangling in nooses for six hours in a public square facing the Semiramis Hotel, where four terrorists held some 90 hostages Sunday until an assault by Syrian troops. Syrians climbed onto balconies and rooftops to see the bodies before police removed them.

The government said one guerrilla and four hostages were killed and 34 hostages were wounded during the seven-hour siege and battle. The three captured guerrillas were executed just 24 hours after the takeover.

The guerrillas, who called themselves the "Black June" group, apparently were protesting Syria's military intervention in the Lebanese civil war. President Nafez Assad sent more than 12,000 Syrian troops into Lebanon last June to enforce a cease-fire but they eventually joined with Lebanese Christian militiamen fighting the Palestinians and their leftist Moslem allies.

The swift penalty — and the decision to make a public spectacle of it — underlined Syria's determination to crush any Palestinian attempts to take the dispute with Assad to the Syrian homeland.

"We will never go easy on such crimes," Assad said Sunday night. "We shall hit back very hard. We denounce this criminal action committed by a gang that acted as if it were in Israel."

Pound drops to alltime low

LONDON [UPI] — The battered pound plummeted below $1.70 to its lowest level in history yesterday, undermined by new worries about the British economy and fears that nothing could stem its slide.

"It's not a question of a crash," said one foreign exchange dealer," just a steady downhill descent to hell."

When markets opened, the pound plunged at once through the so-called "psychological barrier" of $1.70, lost almost 2½ cents in a few minutes and closed at an all-time low of $1.6810.

That was four cents less than a week ago and 10 cents less than its value at the beginning of September.

Financiers gave no single reason for the pound's debacle.

"Nobody wanted pounds, that's all," said a dealer for Barclays Bank International.

But bankers, economists and foreigners — including Middle East and African oil exporters who still hold hundreds of millions of pounds — have been increasingly worried about the shaky state of the British economy.

The government last year promised to push the inflation rate by the end of the year. But it still stands at 12 per cent, one of the highest rates in Europe, and economists now predict single-digit inflation is unlikely before late 1977.

Britain's jobless total hovers around 1.5 million and labor unions are resisting new anti-inflation curbs on pay hikes.

Two weeks ago, Britain's 38,000 merchant seamen were awarded "fringe benefits" which, it was widely predicted, would open the floodgates to across-the-board union demands for similar increases.

The governing Labor party began its annual rank-and-file congress at Blackpool Monday and leftists served notice they would demand cancellation or reduction of 1 billion pounds in public spending cuts announced by the government for next year as an anti-inflation measure.

Last June, the United States and other major Western powers granted Britain $5 billion "standby credit" to help steady the pound.

The Bank of England is widely reported to have spent more than $1 billion of this in a fruitless effort to bolster the currency. Recently, the bank appears to have abandoned efforts to shore up sterling by shelling out more of its dwindling reserves.

US plans to deport alleged former Nazis

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service yesterday announced it plans to deport seven alleged former Nazi collaborators on charges they concealed past war crimes when they entered this country.

The INS said it has 80 cases under "active investigation" to determine if there is sufficient evidence to eject the suspects from this country. The INS is set to bring its first actions in one or two months, officials said.

The seven — all men, mostly in their 60s, will be charged with violating immigration laws when they entered this country shortly after World War II by concealing murders and other atrocities they allegedly committed as Nazi collaborators, the INS said.

AROUND NEW ENGLAND

ROCKLAND, Me. — This new game is called lobster crate running. Here one of a group of youngsters, participates in the new sport. The consequence, even if one makes it to the finish line, is a dip in the chilly waters off Spruce Head Island. Eighteen of the twenty crates used for the track were filled with live lobsters. Twenty crates was the best effort. UPI

Few female bankers cited

NEW YORK [UPI] — Connecticut Gov. Ella T. Grasso told the National Association of Bank Women her state's banking industry has a "disappointingly low" number of women in top jobs.

Women fill 66 per cent of bank jobs but only six per cent are in executive positions, compared to 87 per cent in clerical positions, she said Sunday night.

Mrs. Grasso said she has made "a conscientious effort to appoint well qualified women to all levels of state service."

She said of the 880 appointments she has made in 18 months as governor, 200 of them have been women serving in top levels, including five women judges.

Besides bemoaning the fact there are few women banking executives in the state, the governor also said women often give away the power money represents.

Many women "know about money only in the narrowest of terms," she said. "Thev view dollars as a means for purchasing the necessities of life and occasional luxury," Mrs. Grasso said.

Women who earn or inherit money often do not chose to manage it, according to the governor. "They turn over such income to men and in the process give away the power that money represents."

There are inequities in salaries for bank officers as great as the overall inequity in positions, Mrs. Grasso said.

She gave as an example a state commercial bank, which paid a female assistant treasurer with the bank for 28 years $9,900. A male assistant secretary and treasurer with the same bank got $16,900 after seven years.

Books fail test

NEW CASTLE, N.H. [UPI] — Many children never read because of all the so-called scientific programs designed to teach them to read, according to English writer, editor and critic Aidan Chambers.

"The academic people who make their living talking about how children learn to read develop a lot of jargon and research which is a whole lot of rubbish," he said.

"Their guesses frequently produce dogma which says — this is the way to teach children to read. And they have failed," the Gloucestershire, England, resident said in an interview before lecturing at the three-day annual New England Librarians Conference.

Chambers, 41, has authored 26 children's books and edits two magazines on children's books. He said the trend of using only reading programs has not only discouraged many children from reading but also could handicap them as adults.

He said children taught under one reading program may find the books attractive but the content "dull and uninteresting. It may be designed scientifically, but the writing is usually pretty abysmal."

Chambers said American and British educators should draw on the wide variety of good narrative stories written by native authors. One Huckleberry Finn is worth mountains of reading programs, he said.

Employment division

Tight controls on unemployed

BOSTON [UPI] — A crackdown is underway by the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security on unemployed workers who are making no effort to find work. Officials say the effort is working.

The tight enforcement under the so-called "suitable work" and "availability" provisions of the state unemployment law, has given some unemployed workers "a rude awakening," according to one DES official.

Rick Anderson, ombudsman for the DES, said agency officials are now enforcing the suitable work provisions by interviewing those collecting unemployment benefits and finding out if they are really looking for work.

Anderson said statistics on the results of the effort are still being tablulated, but there are strong indications it is meeting success.

Under the existing state law, persons who refuse to accept suitable or comparable work are automatically disqualified from receiving any benefits for a four week period. In addition those collecting benefits must make themselves available for work or face the same penalties.

The effort apparently has not aroused any strong opposition in the labor movement. An official of the building trades council said he had received a few complaints, but not many.

"Our problem," he said, "is that there just aren't any jobs."

Anderson said that previously DES workers were unable to fully enforce the requirements that the unemployed actively seek work due to the long lines in local offices.

As a result most of the workers spend most of their time processing applications and giving out checks.

He said the improvement in the state's employment picture and legislation allowing DES to distribute checks every two weeks instead of every week has cut the lines significantly.

As a result, he said, DES workers have more time to interview individuals to determine if they have actually made efforts to find work.

The department's efforts to enforce the existing law come at the same time the Dukakis administration is making one last pitch for legislative approval of a bill which would tighten up the suitable work requirements and other aspects of the unemployment system.

Shell sees $ rise

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. [AP] — Prices for oil and gas may rise in New England even if they are discovered on the continental shelf offshore, a Shell Oil Co. executive has said.

Such discoveries will not do much for New England's economy either, said William R. Cobb, Shell's manager of exploration affairs for government and industry.

A geologist, Cobb has been aboard the MV Phaedra, a company-owned research vessel used to study the ocean floor of Georges Bank, a rich commercial fishing ground.

"Even with the potential of Georges Bank, we are going to have to turn to other energy sources such as coal, nuclear and solar energy," he said.

"The area just doesn't look as rich as the Gulf of Mexico."

It will be six to 10 years before offshore oil is developed and produced, he said.

Environmental impact hearings are scheduled in Providence in December, and the federal government is expected to begin auctioning areas to oil companies next spring.

Cobb said New England may develop support industries for offshore work, but platforms and crews for drilling and pumping oil probably will come from the South.

He said New England depends heavily on foreign oil because it accounts for one-third of the nation's energy consumption.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Taxes one topic of panel discussion

Massachusetts Representative James Collins is among the panelists on the second show in a weekly series to be cablecast Wednesday night at 8 on channel 8 in Amherst.

The panel, entitled Taxes and Services in Massachusetts: Who Should Pay What to Whom?, will address the problems in local and state tax systems.

Bruce Laurie, UMass Department of History; Maria Roberts, Amherst League of Women Voters; and Tracy Mehr, Amherst Taxpayers Association; will also participate on the panel.

These shows are presented by the Center for Community Access Television at Amherst in conjunction with the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities and Public Policy. The pros and cons of the issues discussed will be emphasized to provide viewers with a fuller picture of the problems directly affecting their lives.

Audience participation will be encouraged, and viewers watching on cable 8 will be able to phone in questions and comments. Anyone who does not subscribe to cable television is invited to come to the Town Room of the Amherst Town Hall.

Group to interview for faculty position

Tomorrow and Thursday the Bilingual Bicultural Education Search Committee will interview Ralph Orellanes for a faculty position in the School of Education.

The University community is invited to attend the open meetings to be held on Wednesday at the meeting of AHORA at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center 804 or at the Bilingual Collegiate Program office, 5th floor of the Goodell Library if there is no AHORA meeting, and on Thursday between 9 and 11 a.m. in Room 128, School of Education.

Liberation league slates meeting

The Young Workers Liberation League will be having its first educational meeting of the year in the Commuter Lounge at 8 tonight. The topic of the meeting is labor organizing.

Teresa Carr and Stuart Belkin, both members of the League and experienced organizers, will be delivering the talk. Discussion will follow the presentation.

Anyone interested is invited to attend.

Professor to speak at Campus Center

Prof. Gino Silvestri, President of the American Association of University Professors at the University of Rhode Island, will speak on "AAUP As An Autonomous Bargaining Agent" in Rm. 805 of the Campus Center at 4:30 p.m. tomorrow. Prof. Silvestri's talk will be preceded at 4 by a press conference in the same room.

Law school to meet today in CC

Harvard University Law School and Stanford University Law School will hold a joint meeting in room 904 Campus Center today from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m. No appointment is necessary. Admission to the schools will be the topic of discussion.

Registrar stresses early registration

"I cannot stress too strongly the need for an early inspection," Sabatino said. "Many times repair parts are difficult to obtain, and even when they are available, repair shops become bogged down with inspections and other work which prohibits them from completing repair jobs quickly."

All motor vehicles and trailers registered in Massachusetts at any time during the period from Sept. 1 through Oct. 15 must be inspected at an official station. These vehicles must display the new inspection sticker on the windshield on Oct. 16 to be legally driven on Massachusetts highways. The owner or operator or both can be prosecuted for operator or both can be prosecuted for operating without a valid inspection sticker after Oct. 15.

The sham of the presidential elections

Take the two parties, mister,
No difference in them I can see.
—from a classic labor song of 1932.

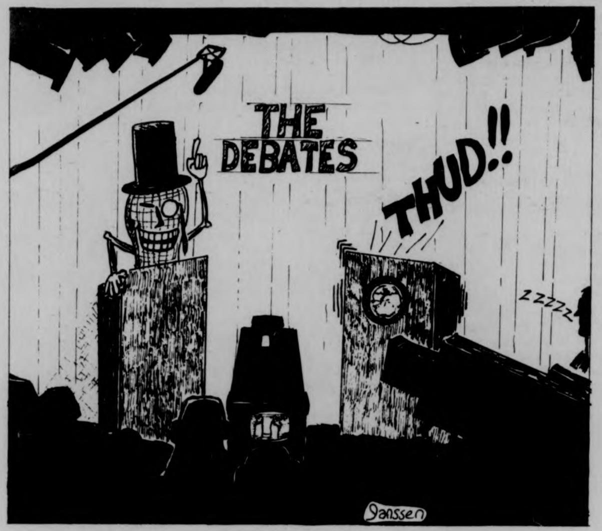
Despite the Bicentennial barrage, figures show that there has been a steady decline in the numbers of people participating in this year's election charade. Recent surveys indicate that for the first time less than 50 per cent of the electorate will turn out for the General election in November.

But the lower turnout may prove to be a much more significant political decision by the American people than the victory of one or another candidate.

It is clear that the reason people are abstaining from the ballot box is that they don't believe it really makes a bit of difference. A survey released last week further points out that there is little the two parties of the ruling class can do to remedy the situation. The Ford-Carter debates, they hoped, would make a dent in the trend. However, the growing crisis of confidence in our present "democratic" institutions will continue to spiral as more people become aware of the fundamental conspiracy of our two-party system. For the entire apparatus has been developed precisely to prevent the intrusion of any force that might require the two ruling class parties to abandon their democratic shell.

Perhaps the most skillful piece of political orchestration the ruling class has developed in this respect has been the artful division of labor between the parties. If one party duplicated the image of the other, after all, it would give the game away.

The very smoothness of the successive transitions of power from Republicans to Democrats and back again speaks volumes that at no point in this process did the monopoly capitalist class ever feel threatened by the changes in the administration.



So we see, over the years, the two parties have become identified with certain trends. Presumably the Democrats are concerned more with workers, are more "liberal", and have a greater concern for the oppressed minorities. On the other hand, the Republicans are more "conservative," they have a veneer of prudence in fiscal affairs and always seem to be extricating the country from wars that the Democrats have gotten us into.

When a dramatic change in policy is required, however, it is usually the party identified with the opposite view that effects the change. Thus, when the U.S. established relations with the People's Republic of China, it was Nixon — whose anti-communist credentials seemed above reproach — who made the move.

These exercises in meaningless choices are not merely the playing out of a carefully written script; Ford and Carter are indeed vying with each other — not because one has a better scheme than the other, but because each represents a sizable corps of office holders and seekers.

The deep inroads of the electorate's cynicism is just one expression of the vast reservoir of discontent that the rule of monopoly capital has created among the American working class. Maybe the day is not far off when the Democrats and Republicans will throw an election and no one will show up.

Punishing the Vietnam war resistor

By BRYANT M. JORDAN

Not all the deleted expletives on the White House tapes could possibly express my contempt for President Ford's stand on Amnesty for Vietnam draft evaders and deserters. In his first debate Thursday night with Democratic Presidential nominee Jimmy Carter, Ford stated that he gave the draft evaders and deserters an opportunity in September of 1974 to "earn" amnesty through the conditional amnesty program he created a month after coming into the Presidency.

But the man who pardoned "I - am - not - a - crook" - Nixon said he would not consider complete amnesty for the over 90,000 men who, rather than serve and perhaps die in a war that very few, including Ford, would not try to justify, are currently living in foreign exile.

If true justice had been served and Richard Nixon had gone to trial, there is no doubt, in the minds of many (including the Watergate Special Prosecutor, Leon Jaworski) that the former President would have been found guilty of conspiracy to obstruct justice while holding the highest office in the land. Here was a man whose contempt for the rights of people who were opposed to him spawned an enemies list and, subsequently, illegal wire-taps, break-ins, and who knows what else.

Yet — to President Ford — arrogant, self-righteous Nixon, who with his fanatical aides turned the Executive branch of government into something no better than a Capone-like mob, was deserving of a pardon because, in being the first U.S. President to ever resign from office, he had suffered enough. However, the draft evaders and deserters, those men made criminals only by their resistance to a policy and a war that was truly criminal and proven criminal, have not, in Ford's view, suffered enough to warrant complete amnesty.

Meanwhile, Nixon lives in comfort at San Clemente. Even now he is in the process of finishing up his memoirs of the White House years for publication; a book with which he will try to justify himself, no doubt. But there is little hope for him there. By accepting the Ford pardon, Richard M. Nixon intrinsically accepted and acknowledged his own guilt; for who, if he really believed himself innocent of a crime, would take a pardon for that crime rather than fight to prove he is guiltless? Certainly, no person of principle would. But then, no one shall ever accuse me of saying Richard Nixon was a man of principle.

However, the 90,000 plus Americans living in foreign countries because Ford refused to recognize that they were justified in resisting the draft and the war are men of principle. Realizing that to participate in Ford's conditional amnesty program and "earn" their way back into the country would amount to acknowledging they were wrong in their actions and that they were sorry, those men are willing to maintain their exile until the government acknowledges that it was wrong and grant them complete amnesty.

But who is President Ford that he should be the one to grant or withhold amnesty? Neither of his sons were asked to go to Vietnam.

During the Republican National Convention, a network news-commentator stated that if a poll was taken among the men who served in Vietnam, on whether or not a complete and general amnesty should be declared for draft evaders and deserters, the results would, in all likelihood, be overwhelmingly in favor of the plan.

Judging from my own experience, I agree. I am a Vietnam veteran.

The best interests

By DAVID LEAVITT

Government spending and taxation. Two subjects that are of high concern to the Presidential candidates and to the American people.

All during the primaries, all of the candidates complained of excessive government spending and over-taxation of the American taxpayer. The Democrats blamed President Ford: President Ford and Ronald Reagan blamed the Democrat-controlled Congress. What has become of their promises of Spring?

The Democrats, under the banner of Jimmy Carter, have been exposed in the post convention period as disloyal to their oaths. The facade has been dropped and Carter and his cronies are visible for all to see for what they truly are: excessive spenders themselves. They advocate funneling of massive amounts of money into efforts to make the Federal Government the employer of the last resort. Says Newsweek (not exactly what one would classify as a conservative magazine) in its September 13th issue of Jimmy Carter on government spending.

"...He is committed by his own word or by the Carterized Party Platform....to a potentially costly bag of social programs..."

Who will foot the bill for these costly programs? A hint is in the wording of the Democratic Party Platform which commits itself to a balanced budget. You guessed it, the American taxpayer. He will shell out millions of dollars to a virtual one party system in Washington chomping at the bit to spend should Jimmy Carter be elected and the current Congressional line-up remain the same. Could we afford four years of wild expenditures?

On the tax scene, Mr. Carter would shift the burden of taxes from families who earn under $14,000 per annum (the median income), to the families who earn over $14,000 per annum. He calls this "putting the tax burden on the rich." Mr. Carter clearly has a distorted perception of what is wealth.

The Republican Party on the other hand has remained true to the concept that the Federal government's spending policies have gotten out of hand and that the taxpayer is tired of expending hard earned tax dollars for some Congressman to pay secretaries that can't type. The Republican Party recognizes that tax policies and spending policies go hand in hand.

If government spending is not controlled, taxes will eventually rise; either directly, or by inflation. By failing to see the relationship between government spending and income, the Democrat-controlled Congress has been disloyal to the American people. Every American knows that he cannot continually live beyond his means.

The Republican Party advocates a legislative policy aimed at obtaining a balanced Federal budget and reduced tax rates. While realizing that the best tax reform is a reduction in taxes, the GOP recognizes the need for structural tax adjustments to help the working men and women of America. For example, President Ford favors giving greater tax relief to families earning between $8,00 and $30,000 per annum. The Republican Party also recommends tax credits for college tuition, post-secondary technical training and child-care expenses incurred by working parents.

The Republican Party supports economic and tax policies directed at ensuring necessary job-producing expansion of the economy. These include quickening capital recovery through new systems of accelerated depreciation, removing the tax burden on equity financing to encourage more capital investment, ending the unfair double taxation of dividends, and supporting proposals which would help working people to hold "a piece of the action" through stock ownership. When balanced by expenditure reductions, the personal exemption should be raised to $1,000 on the Federal Income tax.

In keeping with these policies, the Republican Party and not the Democratic Party, have the best interests of the majority of the American people at heart.

Abortion is real

Last Thursday night was one for issues. I sat in Mike's Bar in front of the television with my friend Jack, eagerly awaiting the start of the Great Debate, and hoping that the Greeks present would have some consideration for those concerned with more than the ass on the person who just walked by. Tension mounted as the noise level did, the television volume went up as the beer sales did. Good thing Jack was there to keep me sedated.

Meanwhile, back in Philly, Jerry and Jimmy were playing with their powderpuffs and neckties, while members of the National Organization of Women were outside the debate hall demanding that abortion be treated as the issue it ought to be. Carrying signs and chanting slogans, these women did their best to make the candidates aware that our need for abortion rights is real.

If Jerry and Jimmy had been at Mike's that night, they probably would have realized that abortion is real, and not something for a Presidential candidate to fool around with. Admiring someone's ass could get you in a lot of trouble ...

I was disappointed, but not surprised, that the contenders would not touch the abortion issue with a ten foot pole. I suspected that the questioners would steer clear of this issue at the first debate, because unfortunately, abortion is not a top priority this year for men. And why should it be? It's no skin off their backs if women are dying at the hands of butchers, or poor women can't receive abortions because Medicaid doesn't count, or that abortion clinics are cleaning up from desperate pregnant women. We all know that it is much easier to pay lip service to a cause than to participate in it.

Perhaps on October 6, the issue of a woman's right to abortion will come up and we will have the opportunity to attack the candidates' consciousness once and for all. Both Ford and Carter have addressed the issue, but only because they have been forced to, by women and religious-type nuts. I doubt that either of them have been able to reach the Pope for enlightenment on the issue, because last I heard, he was spending the greater part of his days punching holes in prophylactics.

Anyway, I wish those men in power would start taking us 'ladies' seriously for a change. Granted the women's movement has run into some organizational problems here and there, but so has the Republican Party. If it's our seeming disorganization that they are taking advantage of, then I almost wish that the next President would try to take away our right to control our bodies, bodies that are now at the mercy of doctors, rapists, legislators and the likes. Then all hell would break loose.

If people were nervous about the feminists who fought for the right to vote in the early 1900's, they should consider what would happen if anyone tried to tamper with the Supreme Court constitutional amendment. Buildings would explode, windows smashed, and the sky would fall on the poor souls who saw fit to fool with Mother Nature. There wouldn't be enough Jack Daniels to keep us sedated.

Feminism and American politics have not meshed up to this point. All that greasy kid stuff on politicians' hair makes for an impossible solution, and women's rights are as pure and simple as rainwater."

We are the river, we're gonna wash your levies down ... no dam the man can make will stand when the sea rolls into town."

Two columns in one

Editors Note: The following column is actually two columns. Since Column A deals with an immediate problem, read it first.

Column A

If you read the Boston newspapers, you must realize that all of Boston and the surrounding communities are being asked to reach into their pockets and contribute to a most worthy cause. The Elma Lewis School, one of the best things to happen to Boston, is going to close down for good if they don't get some cash fast — like by October 1. And if the school closes, I really hate to think what will happen, as it services so many needs. If it does close, it will be directly our fault.

You see, this kind of giving doesn't require any involvement, any moral thought. All it requires is any spare change we happen to have lying around. Anything will do, dollars, fifty-cents, a quarter. According to the Boston Globe they have a debt of $721,000 so they are really desperate for as much as they can get. Most of this debt is the salaries of all the employees (including Ms. Lewis) who have basically been working for free.

This group of people is not only dedicated to the fine arts, but to giving children, who would have nothing, a chance to see some beauty in their lives; to have a piece of that beauty; to learn to create that beauty, that art, themselves. However, the school didn't stop with the children, it housed many community events — many larger fine art events. So, when the school finally closes its doors, it will be closing the door on all of Boston, on a lot of our future. The school has been one of the most effective means of community self-betterment Boston has ever seen.

Right now, find an envelope, put some money in it, address it to:

ELSFA Fund
Unity Bank and Trust
Warren Street
Roxbury, MA 02121

and mail it today, before five o'clock, before you forget. Your future may depend on it! Without art, without children who have an alternative to the street, we are nothing, we are nothing.

Column B

Light slides under the shades and she rolls over, slowly opening her eyes. Quietly she watches him sleep. She sighs and dreads Sunday night when he goes back to his own apartment. She wonders when he'll suggest moving in together.

Nothing's really changed. The couples game has altered the rules, but not the object. The object being finding a relatively permanent mate and setting up another nuclear 'family'. Moving into the romantic ideal of the 'world of two'.

The whole late sixties idea of group living reached an unfortunate cul de sac and all we are left with is a slightly altered continuation of the norm. It makes me feel a little dispondant.

When a woman tries to be friends with a man there is this mutual fear that there is an ulterior motive. It is almost impossible for a woman to have a male friend who doesn't see her as a women-object at some time. (The reverse is also true.) Every time they have to get over that 'he's (she's) - gonna -make -this -more -than -it -is -and -try -to -sleep -with -me' hump and a lot of times they don't make it, destroying what could have been a great friendship.

And it seems to me that this could have been avoided if this law-of-two's norm didn't hold such a heavy hand. Because sex is a myth, a promise of emotional tie that doesn't necessarily exist, that has attached itself to the couples game.

The only altenative to the perpetuation of this myth is self-honesty. Ask yourself what you really want and what you really need, and whether sex and the couples game are more important than real friendship. Because the couples game really sounds like the dead end to me. Do you want to see people fall into little groups of two and stop, or do you want to see a more wide-spread friendship? Do you want a limited emotional base for yourself? Well, it's something we all need to be conscious of, as the couples game is pretty much the norm and it is hard to be different.

Bondage of the mind

By KEN FONDA

For many years liberation of one kind or another has been the topic of much debate. Serfs in medieval days struggled for liberation from the manor lords. When our country was founded the question was religious freedom. A question that almost tore this country apart in 1865 was, freedom for slaves. In the early 1900's the Russian people wanted freedom from the Czars. In China it was freedom from the emperors.

In the past few years the women's liberation movement has gained much support in legislatures around the country. The presence of groups on this campus such as People's Gay Alliance shows the growth that gay liberation has had. Add on "r" after that "g" and you have gray liberation, a matter of growing concern among our older people.

Every liberation movement has its leader of leaders. China's liberator was Mao. Russia's was Lenin. The Quakers have William Penn.

We can see from these few examples that man's basic desire is to be free. How many people really understand what freedom is? A few people do. Webster's Dictionary defines freedom as "the state or quality of being free." He defines "free" as "not in bondage." Man's greatest bondage is not physical, but mental. A person can be free to do what ever he wants, but, can be in bondage in his mind.

As students this bondage can be the worries we have over a ten page paper due the following week that we haven't started yet. Or it could be the fears we have about that Chemistry or English exam coming up too soon. In terms of interpersonal relationships bondage could manifest itself as a "what does this person think of me?" question. In each case the prisons that a person has put himself in or perhaps society has put them in is not one of steel and brick but, the mind.

What can students do about this bondage? Generally, where there is bondage a liberation movement arises. I advocate a people's liberation movement. I advocate freeing the minds that are clutched with fear, bound with worry, and encased in doubt. The words of our liberator ring clear across the centuries. "If you continue in my word, then are you my disciples indeed. And you shall know the truth and the truth shall absolutely set you free." My liberator is Jesus Christ, whose words I have just quoted. As the Psalmist said, "I sought the Lord and he heard me and delivered me from all my fears." True liberty comes when you seek the Lord through His Word.

Test to find baby normal

[UPI] — All pregnant women past the age of 35 face a high risk of mongoloid births and should be offered a test to determine whether their child will be normal, medical researchers reported Sunday following a five-year study.

The test should be given to expectant mothers of all ages who are Rh-negative, diabetic, have high blood pressure, or have a family history of defective children, according to the report published in this week's issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The test is known as amniocentesis. It is a highly accurate and safe procedure for both the mother and the unborn child, the researchers for the National Institute of Child and Human Development in Bethesda, Md., said.

Amniocentesis involves the extraction and analysis of fluid from the sac surrounding the fetus inside the pregnant woman. The test can predict many potential abnormalities and also can detect the sex of the baby some months before birth.

The institute's report said the test "served to provide reassurance, assistance in having normal children, and, in numerous instances, avoidance of abortion.

Build a New Ark

By KIT WALKER

Today is a Sagittarius moon — good for a twinkle in your eye if you don't take yourself too seriously. This morning our Libra Sun forms a 30 degree semisextile with Uranus in Scorpio — this means the sun is entering the 12th house of Uranus, the house where we clean up all the loose ends of the past Sun-Uranus cycle. The Sun and Uranus are a complimentary pair, ruling the opposite signs Leo (royalty) and Aquarius (humanity). So this angle will bring us back to our kingdom, to take another look at how well we shine on our people. We all have our own sphere in which we can spread light, but we have to kindle the fire first; and if we're hoping all along that someone else would do it for us, we may fall down in the dumps this morning.

But aside from that, the morning's lunar transits should keep a creative flow going if we ride the waves. Today looks like a good day to join in — to drop the movie techniques and get to the core of our relatedness. We each have a piece of the universal Sun Spirit between our lungs, a piece of gold not to be found in any bank.

It could well be that soon the rains of our past karma will begin to fall — it's time to forgive ourselves and each other for everything and build a new Art. We're all in the same boat, but you'd never know it — and what Uranus in Scorpio is telling us about this new Art is that it's our unconscious ties that bind us together. We all do happen to be human beings, lumps of blood and guts carrying Light around — vessels of new wine — but it's not until we climb down off our thrones, and put on the Emperor's New Clothes that we'll deserve the crown we were born with.

Tonight we'll have a slight preview of the coming conjunction of Venus and Uranus in Scorpio as the Sagittarius moon semisquares them both between 10:30 p.m. and 2:00 a.m. This conjunction on Thursday will bring together love and relatedness (Venus) with friendship and equality (Uranus); a tine when true love could be born. But in Scorpio both these panets feel a little out of place because Scorpio is by nature secretive and dark. On the other hand, the moon's North node (which symbolizes our positive direction) is also in Scorpio, conjunct Uranus, making it healthy for us to join together to exorcize our collective demons.

At worst, Thursday's Venus-Uranus conjunction will bring us a one night fling, a sudden grab for the booty — but at best it should ensure a firm foundation of friendship in our deeper relationships, as well as a deeper level of sharing in our friendships.

As we move out through the planets we go from Saturn, self-control; to Uranus, friendship; to Neptune, compassion; to Pluto, the unconscious Scorpio connection. But if we put the passion of Scorpio first, then we're going backwards; and then comes Neptune's disillusionment; Uranus' upheaval; and Saturn's constriction and melancholy.

So let's start with positive Saturn; patience and self limitation. Through accepting our limits we are taking the first step towards freedom, and True Love.

ERA primary issue on ballot in Nov.

The Massachusetts state Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) will be referendum question No. 1 on the Massachusetts ballot in November's elections.

This makes the ERA a primary issue this fall and a number of activities have been planned to gain support for the amendment.

The Action Coalition for the ERA has called a conference on Oct. 1 and 2 at Boston University to educate and organize for the ERA's October campaign.

A kick-off rally on Friday evening, Oct. 1, at 7:30 in Hayden Hall has been planned, and workshops on a variety of subjects involving the ERA are scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 2 in the CLA Building starting at 10 a.m.

The Action Coalition for the ERA was initiated by UMass-Boston ERA Committee that called a citywide ERA planning meeting last April.

Ratification of the state ERA will legally abolish discrimination on the basis of sex in Massachusetts. It differs from the federal ERA in that it is an amendment to the state constitution affecting only Massachusetts laws, and also that it will include the areas of race, color, creed and national origin in its statement of equal protection under the law. Another difference from the federal amendment is that our state ERA will become effective immediately upon passage in November.

The support for the state ERA in Massachusetts is overwhelming. Almost every union, political party, as well as church, civic, women's and student organization have endorsed the ERA. Yet, even though most people agree with the principle of equality under the law, passage of the ERA has been proven to require a tremendous organizational effort on the part of supporters of women's rights.

Anti-ERA forces have been mobilized to press for its defeat. They have managed to slow down ratification of the federal ERA, as well as cause the defeat of state referendums in New York and New Jersey last November with a well-organized and well-financed campaign.

ERA supporters in Massachusetts say they have learned from the defeats and have decided to launch the massive campaign of education and action essential to convince voters of the necessity of passing the amendment. In addition to their own rally in May, members of the Action Coalition for the ERA travelled 1,000 miles to attend the 1st National Mobilization for the ERA called by the National Organization for Women last May 16th in Illinois. It drew over 10,000 people from campuses, trade unions, national and local organizations from over 30 states.

The Action Coalition hopes to bring together the same kind of wide support with their conference on the ERA in October. Because of the general lack of interest in the presidential race, ERA activists feel that it is essential to make the ERA an issue people will understand the necessity of going out to vote for.

People interested in the ERA should contact the Action Coalition through the Boston University Women's Center, Basement of GSU Building, Commonwealth Ave., Boston, Mass. and talk to the campus Women's Center and Student Government about helping organize the conference and getting buses when necessary to get people to Boston.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, September 28 — Born today, you are one of those highly receptive individuals who is inclined to say yes not only when yes is indicated but also when a good, round "No!" would serve better. Gifted with tremendous understanding of your fellow man, with great compassion for the sufferings of others and great genuine joy that arises in the wake of their good fortune, you find it extremely difficult to watch anyone in the midst of any emotional experience without commenting in one way or another -- via aid if the emotion is a dark one, via a glad sharing of the mood if the emotion is a light, happy one. Only from amorous emotions of others do you attempt to stay unengaged, for in affairs of the heart, you find yourself generally at a loss.

Although you make an effort to keep to some business or professional routine, you find it difficult to fit into your schedule all that must be done -- or, if not "must" be done, at least could be done with great benefit to all concerned. You are, in general, wise not to try to do more than you comfortably can; on the other hand, the decision regarding which activities to include and which to leave out of any given day is often so difficult as to make inclusion of all activities almost preferable to the exclusion of any.

Patient and tactful, you find it a relatively simple matter to deal successfully with most people.

Wednesday, September 29

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — You may have to change your mind regarding another's chances for success once you see him in action. Be open-minded.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — This is a good day to meet the challenge of another's success. Determine what line you will follow -- and begin at once to do so.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Self-assurance makes it possible for you to complete assignments others thought you would surely desert or fail outright.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A chance to fulfill an ambition of long standing arises early in the day. Yo will have to be quick to grasp the opportunity.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Secure your best interests through an interest in another's financial dealings. You can prevent substantial loss at evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Consideration for a loved one be on the top of your agenda today. Don't become sidetracked by a youngster's insistence.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Unless you are willing to give your constant attention to a new project today, you would do well to put off launching it in the first place.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Appearances may not be everything -- but they count for a great deal today. Make the impression you desire on higher-ups late in the day.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Unfamiliar faces cause you more than a little concern during morning hours. All is well, however, by day's end. Drama in the morning brings benefit by evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — The tending of the old, the sick, the very young: this takes up your time -- and brings you tremendous personal satisfaction today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Persistence in the direction of a personal investigation underway for some time past should yield considerable rewards today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Protect your position on the employment scene. Otherwise, you may find yourself replaced before you are aware of change.

STREAKING is alive, though not too well, at Texas Tech. According to the University Daily, two male students were arrested when a group did their nighttime thing through a dorm.

While the page one piece did not identify the streakers by name, it did reveal that one of them was jailed and released upon payment of a $27.50 fine. The other was released to the Dean of Student Life, who will decide whether he will be expelled.

ADD STUDENT POWER ... as a result of a ruling by the Michigan Employment Relations Commission, Central Michigan U. may use student evaluations of faculty members in tenure, reappointment and promotion decisions, the CMU Life reports.

The ruling was precipitated by a charge of unfair labor practice by CMU's Faculty Association.

THE NUNS is a group of women residents of Van Meter South, at UMass. It was organized to hear grips and improve living conditions there.

CONFESSION TIME at Indiana U. reveals that in hiring profs there's no consideration as to whether (s)he has taken any education courses, or whether (s)he has teaching ability.

"They're basically hired on their credentials," says a college dean.

A 1976 Campus Report reveals that outstanding research appears to be more important than outstanding teaching, according to a story in the Daily Student.

MEANWHILE at Yale, the Daily News Magazine announces that a poll of one-quarter of the student body reveals that 25 per cent of the men and 36 per cent of the women undergraduates had lost their virginity after entering Yale. Of the 1,272 students questioned, one-third had had sexual intercourse with two or more persons during spring semester, 1976.

Ali predicts big KO victory in grudge match with Norton

NEW YORK [UPI] — Heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali ran around Central Park at four in the morning yesterday without getting mugged, then whipped his tongue into final fighting trim with one more exhortation on how he will "destroy Ken Norton."

Three years and a million or so words after their last encounter, Ali and Norton face each other in the chill night air Tuesday for the World Heavyweight Championship.

More than 250 million people around the globe are expected to watch the fight "live" via closed circuit or satellite-relayed television, according to promoters.

At Yankee Stadium, where the bout begins at about 10:30 p.m. EDT, promoters are hoping for a paid attendance of at least 40,000. That would leave almost 30,000 empty seats, but with tickets scaled from $200 down to $25 would assure a live-gate record of about $3.5 million, almost one million dollars more than the second Jack Dempsey-Gene Tunney fight at Soldier Field in Chicago 49 years ago.

Ali is expected to weigh in Tuesday morning at about 220 pounds, five or six more than Norton. Both fighters are in perfect physical condition after weeks of intense training. Norton sparred 225 rounds, while Ali boxed less than 100 rounds, but in their respective positions — Norton, 31 years old and still refining his boxing skills, Ali, 34 and fighting frequently — each may have chosen the best means of preparation.

Ali, a 2-1 betting favorite, said he would go for the psychological edge right from the start by making Norton wait five minutes in the ring in the expected 55 degree weather before making his entrance. From there, Ali said he will press the fight all the way.

"I'm predictin' a knockout over Ken Norton this time," said Ali, who divided two split decisions with Norton three years ago. "I'm ready now. The first time I was out of shape, had my jaw broken and still almost won. The second fight, my hands were hurtin', couldn't hit without pain and pulled out the decision. But now my hands are well and I'm in shape. The first five rounds he should be gone."

Norton, who has become a commercially successful actor since he became famous by breaking Ali's jaw, sees the fight taking a different course, naturally.

"It's gonna be a hectic fight," Norton said. "Ali's gonna come out punching early. He feels he's gained a bit of punching power, but he doesn't move around as much, his foot agility isn't as good. His hand speed is very good and he does punch a little better.

"So he's gonna set up more, use his hand speed and his added weight for extra punching power to try to take me out early. If that doesn't work, he's gonna bounce around a little bit, but he can't box like he used to for more than five or six rounds. And eventually, he has to come back down and go toe to toe. He was moving around a lot in his last fight with me and I had to go seek him out. If he's gonna be a stationary target now, I can hit him twice as much and twice as hard and I plan to punish him quite a bit."

'Don't count Steelers out'-Noll

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Pittsburgh Steelers coach Chuck Noll said Monday it's too early to panic over the Steelers' loss of two of their first three games.

"Things will even out for us," Noll said Monday, a day after the Steelers' 30-27 loss to the New England Patriots. "We aren't hitting the panic button yet."

At the same time, though, he can't quite pinpoint the cause of the team's slow start. He said it's by no means the effort put forth by the two-time world champions.

"There is no question of the effort on this team," Noll said. "We're making mistakes that we are going to have to work hard to rectify, but some of those mistakes come from effort...like an offensive player called for clipping when he's busting his butt to get downfield and do his job."

Noll said everything went against the Steelers after they built up a 20-9 lead in the third quarter.

"Our big plays in the second half ended up negating our early mistakes," he said. "their big plays ended up in points."

"We played excellent defense in the first half but our offense played giveaway," he continued. "New England changed some things, they made the big plays when they needed them, they gave the extra effort. You have to give them a lot of credit."

Bulls sign May to a multi-year contract

CHICAGO [UPI] —Scott May, college basketball player-of-the-year for Indiana's NCAA champions, and a star on the winning U.S. Olympic team, signed a multi-year contract with the Chicago Bulls Monday and said he wants "to be known as a complete player."

"I want to play," he said. "I don't care if I start. I want to contribute, and I'll do the best I can to help.

"I try to play defense the best I can. I try to do everything the best I can, rebounding, defensive, offensive. I don't know how I'll have to change my game in the NBA, but I'll do the best I can on every part of it."

May believed that his experence in the Big Ten, which plays a "muscular game," would help him adjust to the MBA and added he expected no trouble planning a fast break offense. "Basketball is a motion game, and we did kind of the same thing at Indiana."

He refused to discuss details of his contract, although it was believed to be for more than five years and for around $1 million.

"We figure Scott will fit right in our offense," said the Bulls' new coach, Ed Badger. "He's a shooting forward. Every college kid has to adjust to pro ball and I think Scott will take less time. He'll fit in our team defense and team offense.

"I don't worry about players starting. I worry about playing time, and Scott will get plenty of that.

"I know that people have said he doesn't put the ball on the ground and can't rebound in traffic, but I saw him with the Olympic team, and I have no worries about how he'll fit in. I wanted to sign him then."

Court sustains NCAA ruling limiting number of coaches

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. [UPI] — U.S. District Judge Sam Pointer Jr. Monday ruled in favor of an NCAA regulation limiting the number of assistants on coaching staffs.

Pointer upheld the NCAA rule, citing the lack of a written agreement between the University of Alabama and two assistant coaches.

The ruling means assistant football coach Larry "Dude" Hennessey and basketball aide Wendell Hudson will not be allowed to resume their positions as fulltime assistant coaches. The two men, reduced to part-time coaching status, filed suit against the NCAA challenging the regulation.

Pointer said evidence in the trial of the suit last month indicated Hennessey and Hudson had only verbal assurance from their respective head coaches that they could keep their jobs.

"That employment commitments were made by Alabama to its assistant coaches is clear," Pointer said in his ruling. "The NCAA asserts that the commitment must have been in writing and that the verbal understandings, such as those at Alabama between the head coaches and their assistants, are insufficient."

The NCAA bylaw sets the size of coaching staffs at a maximum of eight fulltime assistants, two parttime assistants and a student assistant for football and two assistants for basketball.

NCAA president John Fuzak testified at the trial that the regulation was necessary to ease financial burdens at some member-colleges.

Pointer agreed Monday, saying, "colleges with more successful programs, both competitively and economically, were seen as taking advantage of their success by expanding their programs, to the ultimate detriment of the whole system of intercollegiate athletics."

The judge said financial pressures upon many members to "catch up" and "keep up" with the more successful schools were beginning "to threaten both the competitive and the amateur nature of the programs, leading quite possibly to abandonment by many."

JV harriers seeking 2nd straight win

By DAVID RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Providence College and Harvard University will be the next challenges for the undefeated junior varsity men's harriers as they square off against the junior varsity Friars and Crimson in a 3:00 Franklin Park tri-meet.

Providence will be a good opponent for the Harriers as the often highly recruited Friar freshmen are often put on the J.V. team.

There were no surprises and no suspense on Saturday as the junior Minutemen defeated Brown and Boston College by sweeping the first six places.

The score was indicative of the quality of the teams involved as UMass totalled 15 points, second place B.C. 56, and Brown with 72 points.

Leading the way for UMass as expected, was a trio of harriers who covered the entire course in a convoy. Bob Martin, Jay Legere, and Mike Morris ran effortlessly to a time of 19:33. Trailing them by 18 seconds was Steve MacDougall, who was followed by the duo of Steve Hilyard and Craig Bloodgood. Also breaking into the top ten were Glen Lyle in eighth and Bruce Wenner who finished 10th.

Coach Arnie Morse expects even a better JV cross country team this year than last year's undefeated and winner of the JV IC4A championship.

Life of A. Typical Fan

Professional sports' busiest time is rapidly approaching us. Now that baseball season is nearing the playoffs, the footbaal season is in full swing. To further inundate the sports fan, the pro basketball and hockey teams are preparing for the start of its seasons, only a couple of weeks away.

There are always casualties during this annual sports deluge. Last year at about this time a "Typical Fan" was watching the Patriots on television, listening to the Red Sox on the radio, and reading about the Celtics and the Bruins in the paper. He suddently jumped out of his chair and started screaming uncontrollably, clutching his head in pain.

Fan then grabbed a baseball bat and smashed the television set, leaving shattered glass all over the living room. He then took a hockey stick and started to take slapshots with the pieces of glass. Still enraged, he kicked the radio through the window. Having now lost all self-control, Fan crumpled the newspaper into a ball and started to dribble it all around the house. He shot the paper ball into a waste basket and then made a spectacular flying tackle of the basket. Struggling to stand, he saw his reflection in the mirror. Totally out of his mind now, he picked up the baseball bat and shattered the mirror with one solid stroke.

Fan fell to the floor, unconscious. He was a horrible overdose victim of sports. Fan went into a coma. He remained in a comatose state through a World Series, a Super Bowl and countless playoffs. Only a couple of days ago did he awaken. I was fortunate enough to witness his revival.

Fan opened his eyes, looked around the room and asked, "What's the score?"

"The score of what?" I replied. "You've been in a coma for a year and you want to know the score."

"A whole year?" he asked in amazement. "Did the Red Sox make the World Series last fall?"

"Yes, and they almost beat the Reds."

"Oh, players like Fred Lynn, Carlton Fisk, and Rick Burleson must have been heroes this year."

"No, everyone booed them because they wouldn't sign contracts. They threatened to play for other teams and..."

"Now, wait a minute," he interrupted. "Tom Yawkey was going to trade the nucleus of the championship team?"

"No," I tried to explain, "They would have become free agents, eligible to sign with another team."

"What are you talking about?" he asked disturbedly.

"And Tom Yawkey died this summer," I added.

"That's too bad."

"And the Red Sox are in fourth place now."

"Stop!" he yelled. "How about the Patriots?" Is Plunkett doing well?"

"He's not on the Patriots anymore. They traded him for draft choices."

"They must have had a good draft then. Another good draft or two and..."

"The pro football draft was ruled illegal by the courts a couple of weeks ago."

"Huh?" he gasped, now sitting up. "What about the Bruins? Did Orr and Esposito lead them to the playoffs?"

"They didn't play for the Bruins last season."

"That's enough," he shouted rather angrily. "You must be kidding. What about the Celtics? Who'll be their top competition this year?"

"Probably the New York Nets," I answered.

"They're not even in the NBA," Fan laughed.

"They are now," I said, laughing along with him.

I noticed that Fan wasn't laughing normally. His laugh was uncontrollable, like that of a madman. I knew it was time for me to leave. Fan didn't stop laughing. His crazy laughter echoed throughout the hospital corridors. Meanwhile visitors and patients watched the television in the lobby as Catfish Hunter threw the first pitch of the '76 World Series.

Harriers challenge Harvard and P.C....

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The storm clouds hovering over Franklin Park in Boston this afternoon may not just mean rain. The UMass men's cross country team has been waiting a long time for this encounter with number one-rated in New England-Providence College. This tri-meet with Providence and Harvard University may be one of the most important tri-meets in N.E. and across the country.

Varsity meet time will be 3:30 with the preliminary J.V. contest starting at 3:00.

September 30, 1975 saw these same three teams meet at the scenic five mile course at Franklin Park. Providence beat the young UMass team by a score of 21-34 while UMass handled Harvard easily 19-44.

Last year, Providence's John Treacy, Stetson Arnold, and Mike O'Shea combined to go one, two, three respectively to squash any UMass hopes for an upset. This year, Providence is back with virtually the same team except Stetson Arnold.

Arnold, an All-American in cross country and a nationally acclaimed distance runner, transferred to UMass this year but must sit out a year due to NCAA ineligibility rules.

"Last year Providence was unbeatable with their trio of Treacy, Arnold, and O'Shea. But now this year without Arnold, they are more susceptible. And if any team is going to have a chance of beating them this year, it's either going to be UMass or Northeastern."

The outcome of this meet will be decided by the team with the greatest depth. If however, Providence finishes one, two, or three, the meet will be decided.

Providence's third man is John Savoie who is described by assistant coach Arnie Morse, as the "steady Eddy" of the Providence squad.

"Savoie, will always give you a steady performance, nothing spectacular but nothing bad either. He is always around a certain time and doesn't vary from it," Morse said.

For UMass, momentum is definitely on its side. The team is coming off an impressive tri-meet victory over Brown 23-36 and Boston College 23-40 without three of their top runners, and an unexpected fourth place finish of John McGrail.

Coaches O'Brien and Morse are not alarmed by the fourth place finish of captain and All-American McGrail. "John had stomach cramps during the race and didn't feel very well running Saturday. We told John before the race that it wasn't a do-or-die effort and if he saw that UMass was doing well in the meet, to hold back a little and save himself for Providence," O'Brien said.

The UMass win, Saturday, was highlighted by the first ever meet win by sophomore Mike Quinn. Quinn's winning time of 25:09 over the rugged Apple Orchard course was an indication of Quinn's potential.

When asked how Quinn would respond to the relatively flat Franklin Park course, coach Arnie Morse would not commit himself to a definite prediction.

"Quinnie could very well test Treacy and O'Shea and if he's feeling good, there's no way I could say what his time might be," said Morse.

It will be a type of meet where whoever runs well on that particular day will decide the meet. If we lose to them, we know that we will have a second and third chance in the New Englands and NCAA's. All we are looking for is a good hard effort and if we get that, we will be very happy."

Women duffers turn tables with victory on home course

By BETTY LOU CLANCY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's golf team came out on top in the UMass Invitational yesterday and defeated Mt. Holyoke and Cortland State from New York at the Hickory Ridge Country Club.

On Sunday, the first day of play, the four low UMass scores were held by: Debbie McCulloch, a junior and number one player on the team, with an 84, Elisa Romano, a sophomore with an 84, Joy Little, a freshman with an 86 and Joanne Smith, a senior with a 91. The first day total for UMass was 345, with Mt. Holyoke a close second with a 349 and Cortland State third at 388.

UMass held its lead throughout yesterday due to a remarkable score for Debbie McCulloch, a 78. The UMass total for both days was 695. Mt. Holyoke followed with 709 and Cortland State finished in third with 750.

The conditions for the tournament were very bad both days. The players finished soaking wet on Sunday, however, the rain only threatened on yesterday.

"The conditions of the course really didn't play that big a part in the competition because everyone was playing in the same situation," said UMass coach Jane McGahan.

Obviously, the Minutewomen's defeat in the Mt. Holyoke Invitational didn't affect their motivation, "They went out in the rain for this tournament and, for many of the women, played the best they ever had. "I'm very proud and happy for my team," stated Coach McGahan, "they were very disappointed when we lost the Mt. Holyoke match, but came right back by winning this one."

When asked how she felt about the win, Debbie McCulloch replied, "I felt I could have played a lot better, but everyone came through with more effort than usual. I give a lot of credit to Joanne Smith and Meg Groden; both of them played very, very well.

The Minutewomen will travel to New York this weekend for the EAIAW tournament. This tournament will be hosted by Brockport State at Bristol Harbor Country Club in Canandaigua, New York. Approximately 20 teams throughout the Northeast will participate, the biggest tournament the women have played in this season.

...while women meet Brandeis once again

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team will take the next step on the way to a perfect season this afternoon when it takes on Brandeis and Radcliffe at Franklin Park in Boston.

The biggest problem facing the women may be overconfidence, as they have already run and defeated Brandeis this year, and, as a first year team, Radcliffe shouldn't present too much of a problem.

After a ten day layoff which coach Ken O'Brien called "ideal", the women should be ready and willing to go both physically and mentally. The team is intact, as the runners who were injured earlier have healed sufficiently to compete, and no one has been hurt since the initial race.

Despite the unpredictable nature of cross country, and its failure to come up to expectations in the first race, Brandeis should have a good trio of runners challenging up front. Mona Millstein, Donna Randall and Robin Snyder should improve on their dismal showing in Lowell and push UMass' top people.

"I think Brandeis will be tougher in the dual meet than they were in the invitational," said O'Brien. Their top three should be a little tighter and a little closer since at that time they had only been in school a week."

For UMass, Johara Chapman will once again probably be out in front. Jane Welzel will be able to push her after recovering from a tough first week of double practices — both swimming and cross country.

After these two runners, it is difficult to predict any definite order of finish. Sue Swartz, Maggie Crowley and Julie Lafreniere will be right in the thick of things. Not far behind this group will probably be Debbie Farmer, Barbara Callanan, Diane Perry, Anne Bradshaw and Monica Scott.

The meet will be run on the fairly quick Franklin Park course which is 3.1 miles long. The terrain includes sidewalks, dirt paths and parts of a golf course. Two hills located at the two and three mile marks make the course difficult, but not as much as the Minutewomen's home course through the apple orchard.

"We'll be looking for two things," said O'Brien. "First, we'll be looking for our own progress as far as this year's team goes — the time split between our top five-seven runners. At the same time, we'll be trying to compare ourselves with last year's performance. I expect we'll notice a consistent improvement in performance between this year's and last year's team," O'Brien concluded.

So, it seems as if the women will have to keep their confidence under a tight rein to avoid being surprised by Brandeis. However, a two week head start isn't overcome in ten days, and Brandeis may have to wait till season's end to have a real shot at the Minutewomen.

Alston resigns

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Walter Alston, manager of the Los Angeles Dodgers for 23 years, will retire at the end of the current season, the club announced Monday.

Dodger president Peter O'Malley said at a clubhouse news conference in Dodger Stadium that the 64-year-old Alston insisted on stepping down as manager and will be given another job in the baseball organization.

O'Malley said no decision has been reached on a successor.

Veeck 'clowns' with Chisox

All in all, the 1976 baseball season won't rank among one of the most exciting in recent memory.

Oh sure, the Pittsburgh Pirates made a late run at the Philadelphia Phillies, but a 15½ game lead in late August is almost impossible to overcome. But you'd have to agree that the Phillies tried their best to blow it. And yes, the American League West race is yet to be officially decided, but a 4½ game lead with only seven contests remaining is more or less secure.

So what did 1976 offer baseball fans in terms of interest? Most of the controversy took place off the playing field, what with the Fingers-Rudi-Blue mess, all of those unsigned players, and the annual Dick Allen desertion.

But, lest we forget, on the field the big story in an otherwise drab season were the exploits of Mark "The Bird" Fidrych. But even that tale will have a wilted ending, as the Bird won't win 20 games and thus become the first rookie to accomplish that feat since Bob Grim.

Thankfully, there was some relief for baseball fans during the season past. To put it plainly, the Chicago White Sox.

Need I say more?

Ah yes, those marvelous men of Bill Veeck, the one-legged wonder of the big leagues.

Bill Veeck, the man who brought us exploding scoreboards, orchid day at the park, and the only midget major leaguer in history, was up to his old tricks again.

When Veeck finally bought his way back into baseball last winter, he knew he wasn't exactly inheriting a powerhouse. After all, a team that employs the likes of Pete Vuckovich, Francisco Barrios, and Jerry Hairston doesn't exactly match up with the Kansas City Royals. So Veeck knew he had to do something a little different to lure the crowds back to Comiskey Park.

He took the CVE perfectly. First, of course, Veeck outfitted his squad in new uniforms. The dapper duds (and you can take that a couple of ways) looked strangely like those of either a prison team out on furlough or the Cinciannati Red Stockings of the 1870's.

The clincher came when the Pale Hose displayed their short pants for all to see on national television. The appearance they put forth prompted NBC analyst Maury Wills to say, "They don't look too bad, but don't look at first baseman Lamar Johnson. He wrecks it all for them."

So much for ol' Lamar.

Next, Veeck activated first base coach Minnie Minoso. When Minoso was in his prime, he was a real joy to watch. But honestly, can a 50 year old man really play baseball anymore? Compared to some of his teammates, definitely, but then again, they aren't exactly among the cream of the crop.

Upon hearing about Minoso, A's owner Charlie Finley wanted to make himself a designated hitter. It figures.

Veeck also hired one of the few Geritol managers in baseball, 67 year old Paul Richards. He may be one of the few managers in baseball history to never emerge from the dugout during a game.

But the clincher was yet to come. Just last week, Veeck hired baseball clown Max Patkin to be his first base coach. (Filling in for Minoso?) With his hat askew, eyes crossed, and mouth ajar, Patkin was a person with which his counterparts on the field could really identify. After all, you know the old saying. Like seeks like.

Along with these gimmicks, Veeck continued his regular promotions, which included such extravaganzas as "Beer Barrel Stacking Night" and the like. But all this aside, Veeck's most appropriate move was not of his own doing.

In this year of the Bicentennial, the Chicago White Sox were baseball's Bicentennial Team. Take a look at the roster. It is graced with such names as Hamilton, Johnson, Jefferson, and Monroe.

So although the Chicago White Sox are 25 games out of first place, they have still drawn over a million fans to see them in action. They may not have been the best team to watch, but they have the most entertaining owner in baseball.

And, after all, they were the Bicentennial Team. Last in the American League, but first on the Fourth of July.

Health Services may be probed

Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — "Illegal or improper conduct" by some UMass Health Services employees was alleged in a number of statements written by health services employees, and turned over to the Hampshire County district attorney's office yesterday by a group of students involved with the Student Health Advisory Board.

James H. Starr, a student Legal Services Office attorney who helped the individuals gather the information in the statements and put it in a proper form for the district attorney, said the main charge was the existence of "a conflict of interest".

A statement issued to the press after Ellen M. Gavin, Vincent J. O'Connor and Susan R. Woskie met with an employee of the district attorney's office, stated the conflict of interest existed in hiring and promotions, competitive bidding, and the awarding of overtime pay and that there were "possible corrupt gifts" made.

> 'I've done nothing nor has anybody on my staff.'

Gavin is a former Undergraduate Student Senate co-president, O'Connor is a former member of the advisory board and Woskie is a former member of the Faculty Senate Health Council.

Starr said "tens of thousands of dollars over a course of three to four years" were involved in questionable purchases of services and supplies.

Michael R. Federow, Graduate Student Senate president, said the possibility of kickbacks and bribes existed in the purchasing of contractual services.

O'Connor also explained that it seems employees were receiving overtime pay when they were not working the overtime hours, and in many cases not even their regularly scheduled hours. Federow stressed that there were no "no-show" jobs, however.

The individuals refused to present specific information on what criminal charges might result from an investigation by the district attorney's office.

Federow said they were "not in a position to say" what future charges might be, and had simply brought information from health services employees to the district attorney's office so that an investigation could be undertaken if necessary.

Barry W. Averill, director of the health services and the president of the National College Health Association, said the accusations are "categorically untrue" and that the statement contained only "vague accusations".

"I've done nothing, nor has anybody on my staff," Averill continued, "Everything we have ever done has been in accordance with proper University channels, that's for sure."

He said the only instances when supplies might be purchased without following a bidding procedure would be if an instrument or pharmaceutical was needed immediately.

He said he had checked with his "business people" and "was not aware of anybody who's received any gifts. That's ridiculous".

He characterized the statement as part of a "smear campaign" and expressed regret that "one of the top ten health services in the country" had to receive attention in this way.

Neither District Attorney John M. Callahan nor any of his assistants were available yesterday to meet with the group but Starr said the statements and a list of other health services employees who would be willing to testify in an investigation were left with an employee of the office who is in "direct contact" with Callahan. Callahan received the information a few hours later.

Federow explained that they expected the district attorney's office to have a professional firm undertake an audit of payrolls and books in the health services. He also said they would like a "professional investigation" conducted by a committee of students, faculty and administrators.

Starr said that he expected the district attorney's office to take steps to secure whatever evidence supporting accusations might be presently within the health services in books and records. He said that this included having the campus police prevent tampering with those books and records.

The names of the employees writing statements and the contents of their statements were not revealed for fear of retirbution. O'Connor said the employees had gone to administrators in the health services and were "scared into silence." He said they then went to members of the student advisory board that they felt they could trust. This happened last spring and more investigations were conducted over the summer.

Woskie said they didn't want to reveal what departments the employees worked in because that would allow administrators to pinpoint many of the employees who have written statements.

She explained, "We didn't bring in a bloddy knife."

Starr said, however, that there are enough people to bring the matter to the district attorney.

Board co-chairperson William Kober said he had no knowledge of specific wrongdoings.

He continued, "To my knowledge no employee came to a meeting of the Student Health Advisory Board about these charges. People who were contacted did not come to the board at large or me and say that they were approached."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has said the University will conduct its own investigation through the office of the vice-chancellor for Student Affairs. He said he couldn't judge the charges on the basis of the released statements that he received, and was disappointed that the employees had not used proper University channels.

Editor's convention postponed

The first annual national student editors convention scheduled to be held here Oct. 7-9 has been postponed until next semester, according to a spokesperson from the Society for Collegiate Journalists.

The Society was sponsoring the convention in conjunction with the Collegian, but the Society decided to postpone the convention because of poor student response.

Plans are already in the making to hold the convention in the spring. Students interested in planning that convention should contact William Mills at the Collegian.

Heavy voter turnout surprising

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

Results of the Undergraduate Student Senate elections were only partially complete at press time last night, as student government volunteers worked to complete the results of the dormitories on campus.

The Sylvan Area Government requested that they be given an extra day to complete the elections for senators in their dorms, and the request has been granted.

Student Trustee Paul M. Cronin said the voter turnout in Southwest residence area was heavier than he expected and said that voter turnout on the whole was "heavier than I thought it would be."

Competition for the senate seats varied, depending upon the constituency with competition heaviest for the Third World constituency and the commuter seats. The dormitories vary however, with some dorms not running anyone for the posts.

In these cases, senate seats will be filled by appointment from the area governments.

Steve Latter, who assisted in collecting and counting some of the ballots said some hindrances prevented the dormitory ballots from being collected at the same time as those of the Commuters and Third World students.

"All of the work in collecting the ballot boxes and counting the votes," explained Latter, "is done by volunteers, and there aren't enough around."

Latter said the ballot-counters were given "only" two vans from the Senate Transit Service with which to collect yesterday's ballots, and only one van was provided on Monday night.

He also said some of the volunteers had difficulty in location the ballot boxes in MacKimmie, Coolidge, Kennedy and the lower part of John Quincy Adams tower, all in Southwest.

In the race for Third World senate seats, 21 persons competed for 15 of the available positions. Robert Earl Brown, who is currently serving a three to five year sentence for his alleged part in the armed robbery of the Rte 9 McDonald's, led the group with 30 votes, Raoul Roach finished second and Carolyn Lee finished third.

Others gaining seats were Kwaku-Leon Sanders, Donald Byrd, Sook Nam Choo, Adrianne Hunte, Donna Byrd, Paul Wong, Russell Chim, Marie Roberts, Donna Epps, Harry Yee, Deborah Mahley, and Menloo Samison.

All twenty-two students listed on the commuter ballots were elected, leaving three seats unfilled. A write-in campaign qualified one more commuter, and 8 more write-in

Low turnout expected for Sylvan runoff election

By KEVIN CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

A special runoff election for the presidency of the Sylvan area government will be held this evening in the three Sylvan dormitories.

The initial election, held last Wednesday, failed to supply any of the presidential candidates with the necessary 40 per cent majority.

The runoff pits William T. Shewchuk, a senior majoring in chemical engineering against eleventh-hour write-in candidate Gail N. Syphers, a senior French major.

In last week's election, Shewchuk netted 150 votes, Syphers had 114 and a co-presidential write-in team of Brad Goverman and John Braverman drew 73 votes.

The remaining 79 write-in votes were spread among a number of candidates, according to Bruce E. Belcher, former Sylvan area treasurer.

The runoff balloting will take place betewen 4:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. in the lobbies of Brown, McNamara and Cashin dorms.

In the first election, Mark Nachle ran unopposed for the Sylvan vice-presidential post and John Jacobs, a sophomore civil engineering major, ran unopposed for the treasurer's office.

Both were elected by wide margins.

The first balloting drew 416 of the 1300 Sylvan residents to the polls. Tomorrow's elections are not expected to draw more than the initial 31 per cent turnout, Belcher said.

The Sylvan area government is responsible for overseeing Sylvan's radio and television stations; the Parchment, an area newspaper; the Craft Shop; the Women's Center; and the Cultural Society.

Sex discrimination cited by faculty organizations

By BILL PARENT

Both the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) took steps yesterday to insure equity for women faculty members here.

AAUP and MSP are currently locked in battle for the right to represent faculty members in collective bargaining and the formation of a faculty union.

The AAUP action was in the form of a letter from society president Joseph S. Larson, to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, citing the need for immediate action regarding faculty sex discrimination.

At the same time, the MSP Women's Caucus held their first meeting since their release of a report last week, which statistically cited pay differences between woman faculty members their male counterparts. The report was based on a dissertation done last year by Emily Hoffman of the Economics department, entitled "An Econometric Study on Faculty Pay Differences at UMass-Amherst.

The AAUP Larson letter said in part that "The AAUP survey and the Hoffman dissertation provide evidence that there are gross inequities present in the salaries of woman faculty members," and that, "equity cannot be properly attained by simple across the board solutions. We suggest that rather than applying financial resources to ranks of faculty, that the effort be directed to the achievement of equity on an individual basis."

The letter concluded by citing the problem "as an immediate need and not one that can be delayed on technicalities or by reference to the collective bargaining election."

Larson also mentioned in the letter the problem of assistant professors "of both sexes" being underpaid.

Meanwhile, the MSP Women's Caucus discussed steps to be taken beyond the Hoffman report on discrimination.

OHAG approves Black funding

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

The $2700 Third World budget was passed by the Orchard Hill Area government last night amidst cheers and smiles from government members and onlookers who packed Dickenson lounge for the meeting.

The $2700 budget, a decrease from the $3340 originally requested but up from the $1500 the Finance Committee recommended, created a large controversy within OHAG, and has been discussed for three weeks. The money will go to the Third World Center to fund various programs and pay for the costs of running the center.

A presentation was made by the Third World before the vote was taken. Representatives of the Third World stated that in keeping the figure of $2700 for their budget they felt that they had made a "sincere and legitimate concessions."

Representatives said the money was needed in order for the Third World Center to grow closer to their goal of presenting Orchard Hill with cultural and educational programs concerned with the current and past issues faced by Blacks.

The presentation included references to past instances of low money allocations to the Third World Center and problems involved with past programs. An article from a Third World community newspaper was read during the presentation which criticized last week's Collegian article as "slanted".

The presentation ended with questions about budget misunderstandings. A motion was then made to vote on the $2700 budget.

The motion, which only needed a majority to pass, was passed with 19 voting yes, 18 no, and 3 abstentions.

The meeting was begun with a speech made by Debbie Love, president of OHAG. In it, she expressed "sadness" at the outcome of the last meeting, which was adjourned amid shouting and yelling. The important issue was "not a budgetary issue" Love said.

Love stated that the core of the problem was "structural racism in the body of OHAG." She explained that in a minority — majority body there exists the problem of a minority becoming alienated with anger and frustration as the result.

ORCHARD HILL

Love suggested a "strong, objective look" as the answer to the existing problem. The Third World has only eight representatives to OHAG. Love pointed out that no matter how hard the Third World tries, they are a minority.

Love then discussed the split between social and cultural, educational programs sponsored by OHAG.

"If emphasis is placed on social events the Third World loses out," she said.

Love then made a suggestion, to be discussed at a later time, that a group be brought into OHAG to observe objectively the group. This group would have access to all past and present records of OHAG.

Rhode Island faculty happy with AAUP

By BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

Gino Silvestri, president of the University of Rhode Island, chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) said yesterday, people are very happy at URI with AAUP's performance in bargaining for the faculty."

AAUP is currently vying against the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) for the right to represent faculty in collective bargaining at UMass. The faculty will vote on representation in an election this fall.

Silvestri was invited by local AAUP president, Joseph Larson to discuss AAUP activity on the URI campus with local faculty members, since the faculty there voted for the AAUP to represent them in 1971.

Addressing about a dozen faculty members in the campus center, Silvestri said, "Over the past five years AAUP has represented the URI faculty in bargaining and has had tremendous support with about two thirds of the faculty members of AAUP."

Silvestri outlined the achievements of AAUP on a number of levels. First, he said that the AAUP has negotiated faculty pay increases of 10, 8, and 9 per cent in the three contracts they have negotiated with the state. AAUP has also been successful in dealing with the URI administration on such issues as tenure and sick leave. Other issues which AAUP has dealt with include faculty participation in selection of deans,

'Contract meals' exempt

Meal tax to benefit Greeks

By STEVEN POLANSKY
Collegian Staff

UMass Greeks stand to benefit from a possible state meals tax break currently under discussion by the Massachusetts State Legislature, according to State Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst).

For the past two years, both public and private institutions of higher learning have been required by law to pay the meals tax, which was recently raised from five to eight per cent by the legislature. At that time, the legislature also dropped the exemption on meals costing less than one dollar, Collins said.

Under the new bill, both public and private institutions will be exempt from the tax, and this includes the Greek area, Collins said.

According to Arthur H. Warren, director of the University Food Services, UMass and several other public institutions have not agreed to pay the tax, and he said the UMass food services has never paid.

Warren said, "Being a state public school, we should not have to pay this tax, and we aren't."

"All cash meals are being taxed, and rightfully so," he said. "Only the contract meals are exempt."

However, the Greek system has been taxing area residents in compliance with the law, according to Collins. He said the chances of the new bill passing in the legislature seem good, although the state 2ill lose $10 million in revenues if the governor signs it.

The legislation, in its original form, was to take effect in July, 1976, but now the date has been moved up to January, 1977.

According to Collins, there was no meal tax for public or private schools prior to the current bill taking effect two years ago. The state's public schools are either not complying with the law or are paying a partial tax, Collins said. Only the private schools are paying in full.

But Tax Commissioner Owen L. Clark, in a telephone interview yesterday, said that both public and private institutions must pay the tax as the law now dictates.

"We've been collecting from both," he said.

When asked how the University would possibly pay off this debt should the tax commission pressure food services, Warren said, "We'll seek legal action to stop the pressure."

"I'd like to see this bill go through," Collins said, "It's about time the private and public colleges were treated equally."

It's not an assault—just a fun jump

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

If you happen to go between classes between 1 and 2 p.m. tomorrow and spy some parachutes gracefully descending towards Whitmore Hall, relax it is not an airborne assault on the Bursar's Office. The men dangling at the end of those parachutes are members of the UMass Sport Parachuting Club, who with the co-operation of the University, are sponsoring the event to attract new club-members.

In all, eight men are scheduled to jump tomorrow afternoon. Of the eight, only two, Kevin Richardson and Ed Tompkins, are actually members of the club. One, John Sandell, was formerly a president of the club.

David Strickland, Bernie Yon, Tom Oborne, Peter Kramer, and Ken Benson, though not members, have continually lent their support to the club and, according to Richardson, it is through their support that the club has been kept alive.

Parachutist Ken Benson is the owner and operator of the Pioneer Valley Sport Parachute Center which has donated the aircraft and pilot-time for today's demonstration. The pilot, Ken Preble, is also a highly skilled parachutist.

At approximately 1 p.m., the plane with four of the sky-divers aboard, will pass over the Hagis Mall landing zone (the area in front of Whitmore Hall) at an altitude of about 1,000 feet. At this time the ground control station, manned by Dave Letters and Josh Wolfe of the parachute club, will communicate to the plane the situation below.

If the landing zone is clear and the ground station marks no other difficulties, the plane will make a second pass, this time at 2,500 feet, and drop a wind-drift indicator. About 20 feet long, this yellow paper is lightly weighted at the bottom. By seeing where it lands in relation to their target area, the parachutist can determine where, during the planes next pass over, they should quit the plane in order to descend onto the mall.

On this third pass, the plane will be at 5,000 feet, unless there is a marginal wind or low cloud formation, in which case its altitude will be lower. At the calculated jump-point, the first two parachutists, Richardson and Strickland, will jump. During his descent, Strickland, with the square parachute, will ignite a smoke bomb-like flare that is fixed to one of his boots. In this way also, the winds activity can be observed.

Upon landing, Richardson will move to the ground control station. There he will relay to the sky-divers still aboard the plane the condition of his descent.

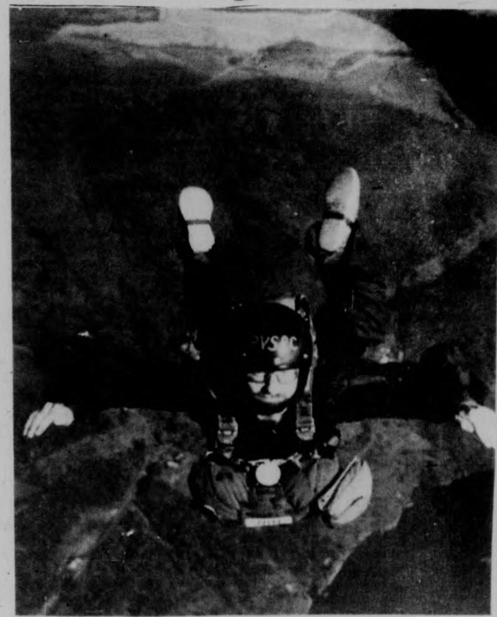
On its fourth pass, the plane will drop the second pair of parachuters and then return to LaFleurs airport at Northampton to pick up the remaining four.

According to Richardson, the plane should be over the University again by 1:40 p.m. Barring any sudden change in weather conditions, the third and final sets of sky-divers will probably follow the same jump-pattern as the previous jumpers.

Parachutist Ed Tompkins will be one of the last two men to jump. Fixed to his helmet will be a camera with which he will take pictures of the University area. He suggests that any person wishing to get together to spell out a message gather on the grass in front of the school of Business Administration. And don't forget to smile.

However, University safety officials, David L. Johnston and Saul L. Chafin, as well as the parachute club, wish to stress that it is very important to keep the immediate area of the Hagis Mall landing zone clear. Also, if winds are gusty, it may be necessary for any of the parachutists to make a spontaneous landing in the nearby parking lot or, possibly, in the area around the pool. Students are requested not to converge on these sites, and to listen for the instructions of the ground control station.

In an interview Monday, Richardson emphasized that the clubs first rule is "always safety".



Kevin Richardson, a UMass parachute club member, is shown flying high over Turner's Falls airport. Watch for him tomorrow over Whitmore administration building.

AES seeks student volunteers

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

The Arts Extension Service (AES), a non-University organization, is seeking student involvement, as workstudy, interns or volunteers, in community related activities, according to Arts Resource Coordinator Robert L. Lynch.

"We want as much student participation as we can get. There are opportunities for learning, work and programming experience here at the Arts Extension Service," said Lynch.

AES is devoted to providing information and consulting services to the University and to communities in the New England area.

Though originally funded by the Division of Continuing Education, AES is now funded by the State Arts Council, the National Endowment for the Arts, and the William H. Donner Foundation of New York.

"Anyone who wants to help, or whom we can help, is welcome to come in," Lynch said. "Students do not need to be in the arts, at the present time we could use someone in business with marketing expertise."

AES has been providing community services for the past three years, Lynch said. Among the services available through AES are on-campus tours of the various arts facilities for area residents organizing an Arts Festival each May which was attended by over

Colonial Village tenants unionize

By RICK GUREGHIAN
Collegian Staff

Residents of Colonial Village in Amherst, who have formed a tenant's union, are contemplating a rent strike in response to what one member termed "indifference by the owners in maintaining the living quality" of the apartment complex.

Citing a list of grievances which they submitted to Kamins Realty, the rental agents for Colonial Village, the union is demanding maintenance upkeep; a rollback in rent, which was recently raised from $5 per month on one-bedroom apartments, to $20 per month on two-bedroom apartments; and payment of interest on security deposits held over one year, which is required by law, the union charges.

A spokeman for the union said that representatives last week met with Patrick Kamins, owner of the realty firm, and Allen Cohn and Robert LeClair who have financial interests in Colonial Village. The spokesman, who preferred not to be identified, said that during the meeting, they had raised the list of grievances with the three men present, but "nothing concrete came from the meeting."

Specifics mentioned during the meeting centered upon open drainage pipes on the complex grounds, lead paint peeling, broken glass and failure to repair shattered windows, cockroach infestation, and "one or two other problems".

One source said the realtor and owners present "promised" to investigate these problems, but had remained adamant in refusing to discuss the lowering of the recently raised rents.

The spokesman said their request for interest on the security deposit was "taken into consideration", adding that they have retained legal counsel in the event of non-compliance.

He said that Kamin's referred to interest on the security deposit as already being in effect, but the spokesman said they had found numerous instances where the only people who had received interest on their deposits, were those people who had complained or threatened legal action.

Also, one source alleged that Kamin's told the union representatives, "I'll discriminate if you want," referring to problem tenants, and adding "If there's someone you don't like, tell me, and I'll get rid of them.

Kamin was unavailable for comment.

In an effort to raise funds for their union, and any legal expenses incurred, the tenants union will be holding a bake sale on Saturday afternoon from 10 a.m.to 4 p.m. on the Unitarian Church lawn in Amherst center.

Chancellor Bromery returns from Far East

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

Bearing good news about the future of educational and cultural exchange, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery returned to the campus this week laden with ceremonial gifts from foreign dignitaries, after a two week good-will mission to the Far East.

Bromery's journey took him to Hokkaido University in Sapporo, Japan and to Soodo Women Teachers' College in Seoul, Korea, where he met with educators and government officials.

At Hokkaido, Bromery, along with UMass President Robert C. Wood and Professor John Maki of the UMass political science department, joined Japanese educators for the centennial celebration of the educational exchange program between the two schools.

In three days of formal ceremonies at Hokkaido, gifts were presented, a formal pact encouraging the continuation and growth of the educational exchange was signed, and honorary doctoral degrees were conferred on all three members of the UMass party.

During the celebration members of both schools made speeches, but without translation – though this caused neither the Japanese nor the Americans any difficulty in understanding the affable nature of the messages.

Bromery noted the feeling of hospitality and good-will that prevailed during the meeting, and he said unless something was mentioned of supreme importance "intended for everyone present to understand clearly and fully," direct translation was unnecessary.

The ties between the two schools go back to 1876 when William S. Clark, then president of Massachusetts Agricultural College (now UMass-Amherst), went to Hokkaido at the invitation of the Japanese government to found an agricultural college there.

Clark helped establish Sapporo Agricultural College, which later became Hokkaido University, owned and nurtured by the Japanese government that has encouraged the school's growth into what it is today – a large metropolitan university with 15,000 students and an operating budget of $100 million.

Within the University there is a medical school, a new Polymer Science Research Institution, and a Cold Studies Research Institution where physical studies are done under conditions of extremely low temperatures.

The ratio of students to faculty is considerably low for a state-owned university of Hokkaido's size, about 6 to 1.

Most of the buildings on the campus are 30 to 40 years old, while there is about 30 per cent new construction there now.

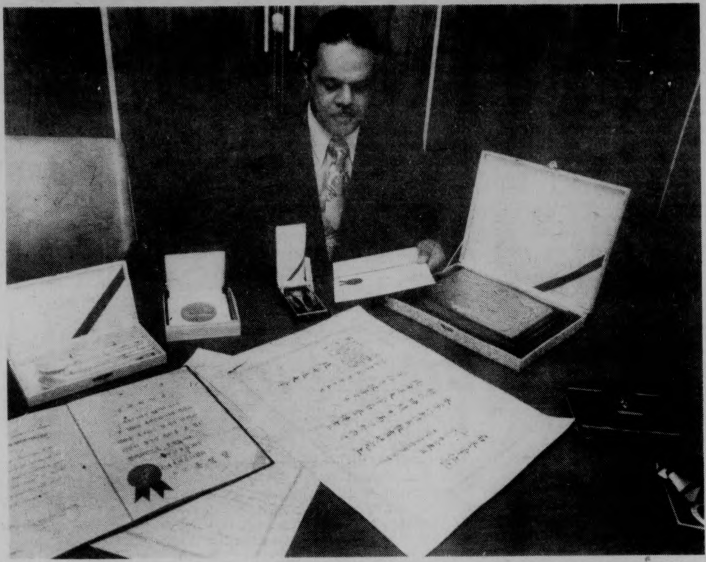
There are no dorms at Hokkaido, students all live in private dwellings and apartments.

The main campus is situated in the heart of Sapporo, a city of 5 million people, and the school's agricultural studies are now conducted on acreage in outlying regions where farms are located.

Conventional farming never existed in Japan before Clark arrived there, he is thought by the Japanese people as the man who brought agriculture to the small islands of that nation. He bears a status today similar to that of a national hero, according to Bromery.

"Everyone knows his name," said Bromery, "throughout the country ... even waiters and waitresses in Tokyo restaurants, so far to the south of Hokkaido."

A color movie depicting the history of Hokkaido was shown to the American visitors, which impressed Bromery so that he is now trying to attain from the Japanese government a copy of the film for the University here.



Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery with ceremonial gifts he received on his recent trip to the Far East. Included are an honorary degree from Hokkaido University; several medallions; a key to the city of Seoul, Korea; a solid silver set of chop sticks and spoons; and a miniature replica of the Korean crowned jewels.

The major thrust of the movie pointed toward the "significant" influence Clark had on Japan," said Bromery.

From Sapporo, Bromery travelled to Soodo Women Teachers' College in Seoul, Korea, where he tested the waters for a cultural and educational exchange program with that school. The response he received was favorable, to the extent that he feels the climate is right for such a relationship to grow.

There are no plans being laid however, Bromery said, because before any definite steps could be taken "planning would have to involve discussions with faculty, and students, and the governments of both nations."

Bromery was encouraged by what he saw as concurring feelings on the part of Korean officials and educators toward the development of an exchange program.

Whether the shape of the exchange is confined to the two educational institutions or goes beyond to include some larger segment of the two nation's populations, Bromery is pleased by the reception he received.

He said the idea of a cultural exchange is in the air, "and it may take place far beyond my Chancellorship here."

You can't drink or plant in the Mississippi

They left Springfield, Mass. on May 26 and expect to reach Portland, Oregon in the summer of 1977. Old Town Canoe Company donated the use of a 17-foot ABS plastic canoe, which was dubbed "Joie" for the expedition.

Duke, a Collegian staff reporter, will be relating his adventures weekly in the Collegian as he canoes across the United States.

"Joie"
Mass. to Oregon
MJ

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

"Too thick to drink and not thick enough to plant" is one of many sayings about the Mighty Mississippi. We slid into the swift, muddy river, looking at 184 miles to St. Louis and the Missouri River. To avoid the faster water of the channel (we're now going upstream), Stan steered to the right of Wolf Island. The water here was wonderfully slack. After a few miles of gliding along, we discovered why.

Before the Civil War, the Army Corps of Engineers built rock dikes along the river to "preserve a channel in the Mississippi". One of these dikes was slowing the water for us, but also blocking our way. A mile before we reached the offending pile of stone, we ran out of water.

"Joie" only drafts four inches of water, but we need three or four feet to propel her upstream. The only logical thing to do when you run out of water is get out and walk.

Stan laughed as I pulled off my jeans (to keep them out of the river slime) and hopped over the side, wearing just an overlong T-shirt. He vowed to avoid getting out when he saw me sink up to my thighs. Up to my knees was mud, only the top few inches were water.

I towed and he paddled. As we got closer to the dike, the water got more shallow. Sroka rolled up his pants (to no avail) and jumped into roughly two feet of ooze.

We found the dike guarded by dozens of gar sliding along on top of the slime to the water beyond. A gar is a long, snouted fish which fear nothing. They kept ramming "Joie" with their heads as we slogged along. Reaching the dike, we dragged our craft over the six inch rise and back into the water.

Our walking wasn't over. At the end of the island was another dike. Between us and the dike were two deep pools of water separated by a half mile of mud and sand bar. A trickle of water ran through the sandbar.

Paddling to the sand, we started towing in three inches of water. Suddenly, something flashed by our legs. Silver streaks, curiously flopping along to the next body of water. Schools of white perch (or drum) moving downstream. The water was too shallow for them to swim upright, so they swam on their sides.

Anxious for some sport, we started "fishing". Like two Kodiak bears, we scooped fish out of the water barehanded. Since they couldn't maneuver quickly, we caught several.

Unfortunately, we couldn't keep them. It was too early in the day to save them for supper. Since Stan had decided not to use the dropline we had, we had jettisoned the stringer long ago. Thinking back, I could have improvised one, but it's easy to second-guess yourself.

We dragged over the second dike and went back to fighting the current. Finding out early that we made better time lining (towing the canoe with ropes from shore) or walking in the shallows along the many sand bars, we walked whenever possible.

The idyllic side of river life showed through on these nights. We camped on the larger sandbars, the sun setting blood-red behind the trees. Powerful towboats plowed strings of barges towards either St. Louis or New Orleans. After dark, millions of stars shone brightly, unaffected by city lights.

On one particular beautiful night, Stan walked a half-mile to the end of the sand bar and bellowed "It's a beautiful night. Too bad my partner's not FEMALE!" I burst out laughing and roared "I've got the same PROBLEM!!"

We passed a few river towns of little consequence and many tow boats on our way to Cape Giradeau. Like many river cities, Cape is walled off from the river that gives it life.

We run into a small problem in cities. We can't just camp anywhere. Since Cape is too small (40,000) for a YMCA, so we searched out the Salvation Army.

FBI spies on New England

NEW YORK [LNS] – Political activist Danny Schechter, WBCN radio's "News Dissector," received a surprise visitor in late August – a disaffected Boston-area FBI informant by the name of Ulick "Yuie" Mahoney who proceeded to spill the beans on agency activity in the area.

"Mahoney's story confirms for the first time the existence, in the Boston area, of a network of government agents and informants who have been burrowing around virtually every citizens' political movement for at least the last five years," writes Schechter in the September 25th issue of the Boston Real Paper.

"And Mahoney confirms that, despite Clarence Kelley's assurances to the contrary, domestic spying by the FBI is still going on in Boston."

Since 1971 Mahoney, known to the FBI by the pseudonym Hari Seldon, has spied on more than 33 New England-area organizations, informing on or identifying at least 900 people. Mahoney told Schechter that he thinks there were nine other similar informants in the Boston area.

Nationally, the Senate (Church) Committee's final report on the FBI states that "the FBI has compiled at its headquarters over 480,000 files on its 'subversive' investigations and over 33,000 files on its 'extremism' investigations.

"During the twenty years from 1955 to 1975, the FBI conducted 740,000 investigations of 'subversive matters' and 190,000 investigations of 'extremist matters.'"

"Debriefing Mahoney was both fascinating and frustrating," writes Schechter. "It took hours and hours to get his story into some basic chronological order ... But as we continued to meet over the weeks, the accretion of detail in his rambling narratives became more and more compelling. And although verifying most of his story was difficult, I was able to find individuals who could confirm elements of it."

An agent at Boston FBI headquarters has also acknowledged contact with Mahoney but refused to answer any further questions put to him by the Real Paper.

Schechter found Mahoney to be "the classic psychological profile of an FBI informant," at 25, an alcoholic and a deeply troubled young man. From a lower-middle class Irish-Catholic family in Boston, Mahoney went to Norwich University in Vermont, the country's second oldest military college. There, reports Schechter, he met a small group of political activists and "quickly fell over his political head, getting involved in half-baked conspiracy fantasies about blowing up highway bridges and violent bombing campaigns. None of these schemes ever came off."

The FBI first contacted him in 1971 and told him they knew he had plotted illegal acts. They let it be known that any potential charges would be dropped, that his problem with the draft would be settled, and that the agency would help pay back his Defense Loan – all for a little information. Mahoney agreed.

"The first agent I worked with knew I had many problems with my family," Mahoney told Schechter. "As I reflect upon the experience, I think the Bureau was using my alcoholism as means to keep me on the payroll."

Yule Mahoney's job consisted of going to meetings, picking up leaflets and keeping the FBI informed on who was doing what. At least 80 per cent of intelligence agency information comes from publicly available material. So Mahoney became a systematic reader of "subversive" newspapers and one of Schechter's most faithful radio listeners. He made no close friends and gained little responsibility in the organizations he was assigned to cover. His "intelligence" was transmitted to the Bureau by phone or in face-to-face meetings with his agent "handler."

"They always thought of Boston as one of the hot spots," he says, "right behind San Francisco, but definitely one of the big centers of the left ... (In) every New Left group in Boston (there is) someone – male or female – working to gather intelligence – They (the FBI) have people, plenty of people, and they pay. They pay well."

Mahoney sais he has received more than $9,000 for his part-time spying services over the last five and a half years.

"They would always be calling me up, and asking me to pick up one publication or another," he said. " 'Go down to Red Book,' (a Cambridge political bookstore), they'd say, 'and get me a Claridad or an Osawotomie.' And so I would go bring it to them, stopping at other groups like the Indochina Peace Campaign or the Law Commune on the way. We would call this 'the round robin.' "

The FBI wanted Mahoney to get more deeply involved in various organizations and told him that his payments would be increased if he rose to a leadership position. But Schechter said Mahoney "never did manage to penetrate any one group for too long. He lacked the temperament and disposition to do so, preferring his more freelance arrangement." Said Mahoney recently, "I just couldn't do it. What I was doing was bad enough."

In the summer of 1972 Mahoney actually revealed his FBI connections to several people at a meeting. ("I just couldn't do it any more," he recalled. "I was drunk out of my mind") and told them "everything" about his FBI work.

But after a short disappearance from the scene, he resumed his FBI activities in the Boston area, intensifying them over the next four years.

"Among Mahoney's most bizarre assignments," writes Schechter, "was his involvement with the National Caucus of Labor Committees, the crazoids who most people on the Left have long believed to be an FBI front." Mahoney describes it this way:

"NCLC was a group of fanatics and provocateurs against all others in the 'movement.' Their insanity and mine mixed well. In 10-73 I went to New York to an NCLC convention – stayed with the head of the N.Y. campaign. Violence by NCLC against black, Hispanic and Jewish groups was the prime reasons for infiltration."

Mahoney described NCLC actions that provoked racial conflicts. "NCLC struck against many minority groups, accused many persons in the NAACP-DeMauMau as being CIA funded," said Mahoney. "Information I supplied in 10-73 and 11-73 could have prevented violence that could and

Somerville hurt economically by First National Stores move

SOMERVILLE, Mass. [UPI] – First National Stores, Inc., announced yesterday it will move its regional dry grocery warehouse and distribution center from Somerville to Windsor Locks, Conn. Some 300 workers will be affected.

Mayor S. Lester Ralph said the move "would have a terrible impact on the city. First National is our largest employer and taxpayer."

The Massachusetts Department of Commerce and Development immediately announced it has begun looking for a new industrial tenant for the Finast warehouse.

"This is a difficult business decision dictated by the realities of the business we're in. But to remain competitive and to provide better service for our stores from New Jersey to Maine, the consolidation is necessary," said company president Alan L. Haberman.

But Haberman said from a New England standpoint, an equal amount of jobs will be preserved and possibly more created by the move. Facilities from Kearney, N.J., will also be consolidated at Windsor Locks, he said.

First National is a 260-store retail supermarket chain headquartered in Somerville, employing 17,000 persons in an eight-state Northeast region. Sales is fiscal 1976 topped $970 million.

Haberman said the firm will set up a "job hunt" center for First National employees affected by the relocation which is expected to take six months to complete.

State Commerce Commissioner John J. Marino said his department's "main thrust will now be to find a suitable industrial tenant" for the real estate in Somerville.

"There are 25 acres there. It is located right next to Rte. 93; it's ten minutes from Logan International Airport and five minutes from downtown Boston," and adjacent to a major subway terminal, Marino said.

First National's new facility in Windsor Locks – under contract to be bought from the U.S. Steel Carnegie Pension Fund – is a 456,000 square foot warehouse located in the center of the company's retail operations.

Juror excused in Saxe trial

BOSTON [UPI] – The judge in the Susan Saxe bank robbery-felony murder trial yesterday without explanation excused one of the 16 jurors hearing the case and ordered the trial's lawyers not to discuss the reasons with the press.

The excused juror was Debra Fuller, 23, a dress shop saleswoman. She did not file in with the remaining jurors when the fourth day of the trial began after a three-hour closed door session in Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin's chambers.

"I have done it for reasons that are sufficient to the court," McLaughlin said, adding the reasons satisfied prosecutor John T. Gaffney and defense lawyers Nancy A. Gertner and Thomas Shapiro.

Ms. Gertner and Shapiro said transcripts of the meeting with McLaughlin were ordered impounded and attorneys were forbidden to discuss the reasons with reporters.

Because of McLaughlin's order, Gaffney said he was forbidden to comment on reports by WNAC-TV's Jack Kelly that the Suffolk County district attorney's office was investigating the possibility a woman juror was involved with her husband and another woman in the armed robbery of a drug store several years ago.

He acknowledged that Ms. Fuller was "not under indictment" and several calls to District Attorney Garrett Byrne's office and the Boston Police Department resulted in nothing that would indicate she was being charged with a crime or had ever been charged with a crime.

When the trial finally resumed, Gaffney's first witness, Bernard Becker, testified he saw William A. "Lefty" Gilday, while seated in a parked car across from the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co., fire several shots with an automatic rifle in the direction of the bank.

Becker said he did not see Schroeder or anyone else during the shooting.

Youth arrested for assaulting Boston teacher

BOSTON [UPI] – A black student who allegedly assaulted a teacher was arrested at South Boston High School yesterday and racial tensions continued at Hyde Park High School with the walkout of 30 white students.

School Department spokesman Thomas Loftus said a 15-year-old black student at South Boston was arrested shortly after classes began. The teacher was unharmed.

Loftus said the 30 white students left Hyde Park High and had to be dispersed by police. The school has been the scene of a series of racial incidents over the past two weeks, spurring extra police patrols there.

Boston is in its third year of a controversial school desegregation program ordered by federal Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. The program affects an estimated 67,000 students in 153 schools.

There were 24 suspensions throughout the system, including 15 at South Boston, where there were several separate fights between white and black students throughout the day, school officials said.

Faulty ballots hamper Palmer election results

PALMER, Mass. [AP] — Election officials here report that five persons were handed incorrect primary ballots that failed to list two candidates who now are only six votes apart in a recount.

Trailing in the race is State Rep. Steve T. Chmura, D-Ludlow, the House Vice-Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

The outcome could remain doubtful even after tonight's recount of votes in the Three Rivers section of this town, the only part of Palmer in the 20th Hampden District.

Town Clerk John T. Brown said yesterday 16 ballots that did not list Chmura and opponent William D. Mullins, a Ludlow selectman, were delivered to Precinct C.

Five of the incorrect ballots were cast in the Democratic primary this month, three were retrieved from ballot boxes by poll workers and eight were returned to his office, Brown said. The three voters who realized they had been given incorrect ballots voted again.

Before the recount started, Mullins held a 17-vote lead over Chmura. A final check of ballots was scheduled today. Results of another western Massachusetts Democratic primary contest remained in doubt yesterday as congressional candidates Edward McColgan and Edward O'Brien awaited recounts in 49 cities and towns.

Unofficial estimates in the 1st District gave McColgan a lead of about 10 votes, a reversal of original results. Before recounts began, O'Brien appeared to have won by 46 votes in an election in which about 39,000 ballots were cast.

The largest community in the district using paper ballots, Westfield, scheduled a recount for today. North Adams' paper ballots also were to be checked today.

did cause racial incidents — unfortunatwly the information — NCLC plans to leaflet canvas in Roxbury — provocateuring tensions between white and black was used. The FBI loved the idea of racial violence — the more the better — white against black."

Mahoney could document no instance in which the FBI actually urged him to provoke or lead violence, says Schechter. "In fact, he could cite no examples of FBI break-ins or disruption programs in Boston of the kind documented elsewhere in the country. He says that on one occasion, he did urge 'militant action' at a group which was planning a low-level protest. 'They loved militance,' he says of his FBI liaisons, 'the more militant the better.' "

Mahoney's last assignment was to report on Puerto Rican groups and on the Puerto Rican Socialist Party's mobilization for July 4 in Philadelphia. In August, he received his last stipend. The Boston office told him their relationship was off due to FBI reorganization, although Mahoney says the amount of money he was paid had been cut back since November of 1975. He thinks that was because the FBI had developed better sources of information, and Schechter speculates that it might also have been because of Mahoney's heavy drinking.

Schechter asked Mahoney for verification of his story and on August 25 Mahoney called the agency. "While I listened on the extension," writes Schechter, "Mahoney pressed Smith (agent Robert Smith) to be honest with him. 'I worked for you guys for five years," Mahoney was shouting. "I deserve to get a straight story about what's going on.' "

Smith replied, " ... the pressure (criticism of the FBI) has grown so great that they don't want us into the internal security field. They are not going to let us get involved in these organizations anymore ... I don't know if we can even investigate Weathermen any more — that's how bad it is. There is nothing we can do ... We are out of the domestic intelligence field..."

In the course of the conversation, Mahoney told Smith about the Women's Equality Demonstration slated for the next day and asked if he should cover it. Smith said no.

Since 1971, FBI informant Yule Mahoney says he has collected intelligence on the following New England organizations:

American Indian Movement

Telephone Co. 'gouging' Massachusetts customers

BOSTON [UPI] — A private consumer watchdog group yesterday charged New England Telephone Co. is "gouging" Massachusetts consumers $125 million a year through inflated residential phone rates.

Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group said residential phone rates in Massachusetts were increased $360 million since 1969 to fund research, hold down prices on competitive business equipment and pay dividends to stockholders of NET's parent, American Telephone and Telegraph Co.

A spokesman for New England Telephone Co., Peter Cronin, said MassPIRG's study is a "collection of distortions. It's charge of anti-consumer expansion and pricing policies is hogwash."

Cronin said MassPIRG would better serve its constituents if it supported pending federal legislation which would control competitive pricing of telecommunications equipment.

Stephen Morgan, executive director of MassPIRG said a one-year study by the Ralph Nader inspired group concluded that "Massachusetts consumers are being gouged by New England Telephone up to $125 million a year."

"Consumers are paying excessive rates to pay for the marketing of equipment that is underpriced for competitive reasons," he added.

Morgan said it is no accident that the $360 million rate increase has occurred in years following a U.S. Supreme Court decision which allowed non Bell system companies to compete with Bell companies in the selling of business switchboards and equipment.

Since 1969, Morgan said the rates for non-competitive residential service have increased 193 per cent while the rates for competitive business equipment has increased 72 per cent.

Morgan said a three-year study by the New York State Public Utilities Commission found that business equipment in that state was underpriced by $329 million. He said a similar situation exists in Massachusetts and should be stopped.

Jonathan Souweine, MassPIRG staff attorney, said, "Effective regulation of a giant corporation like the New England Telephone Co. will not occur until we develop a review process capable of regulating effectively.

Police, firemen leave Ohio city vulnerable

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio [UPI] — This city of nearly 140,000 population had a total of six firemen and 43 police officers yesterday to fight its fires and crime. The rest were on strike for more money.

Garbage collection also was becoming a problem.

A total of 240 of the city's 283 policemen and 254 of its 260 firemen walked off the job Monday night in a dispute over a new contract.

Fire Chief George Panno described the situation as "extremely bad." Twelve of Youngstown's 13 fire stations were closed, and the 13th was manned by Panno, two battalion chiefs and three rookie firemen.

By midday yesterday, Panno said, his small band had made one fire run, investigated an explosion at a downtown restaurant and answered three false alarms.

Strikers set up picket lines which were hindering other city services such as garbage collection, authorities said.

Panno said he would hesitate to ask for help from nearby communities. "If they do come in with assistance," he said, "we would just be jeopardizing the men from the other departments because they would have to cross picket lines."

"I would caution people to be extra careful as far as fires are concerned, because we don't have the manpower to go out and answer the calls," Panno added.

Democracy 'giver'... ...wants to take it back

CINCINNATI, Ohio [AP] — The man who brought democracy to the 277,000-member United Mine Workers union now says he must have more power as president if he is to bring peace to the nation's coal fields, traditional battlegrounds in labor disputes.

UMW President Arnold Miller, the 54-year-old disabled miner from West Virginia who deposed the dictatorial W.A. "Tony" Boyle in 1971, is facing a divided membership at the union's 47th constitutional convention here.

The convention, held every four years to revise the union's constitution, began last Thursday and winds up on Saturday. So far, the 1,800 coal miner delegates have shoved back several of Miller's proposals, and his critics — including the union's vice president — have said openly that he is not fit for the presidency.

Supporters are now warning Miller that he had better crack down before it is too late — if, indeed, that time has not already come and gone.

Miller has fought bitterly with members of the UMW International Executive Board — which must approve his policies — and has seen repeated wild-cat strikes across the country erode his leadership.

UMW Secretary-Treasurer Harry Patrick, Miller's chief union ally, lays the blame for dissension and strife at the feet of Vice President Mike Trbovich and Lee Roy Patterson, an outspoken Kentuckian who heads UMW District 23.

Patrick says the two have deliberately spread false information about Miller's programs to further their own political ambitions.

Both men have accused Miller of surrounding himself with radicals. Patterson, an announced candidate for the UMW presidency, has even said that Miller encourages the spread of Communism within the union.

Miller rejects their arguments, saying they are power-hungry men who would wreck the UMW rather than accept hard-won democracy. He also says central control is essential to a strong union.

"The most important thing to come out of this convention," he said in an interview, "will be to give the international president some authority to deal with those elements who want to be president and who would divide our union.

"I plan to personally take the floor and ask the delegates to give me the constitutional authority I need to lead this union."

Explosion misses Dole

QUINCY, Ill. [UPI] — An explosion, the latest of five during and after a visit by Sen. Robert Dole, ripped through a compressor plant yesterday killing one person and injuring at least one other.

The dead and injured were members of a team investigating a series of bombings which were detonated during the visit of the Republican vice presidential candidate.

Sadat scorns Syria

CAIRO, Egypt [UPI] — President Anwar Sadat yesterday said Syria will face the "punishment of history" for its action in Lebanon and questioned whether Syria itself staged the terrorist attack on a Damascus hotel to provide an excuse for its attack on Palestinian forces.

In an emotional speech to a gathering of political leaders marking the 6th anniversary of the death of Gamal Abdel Nasser, Sadat denounced the Syrian military offensive launched with Christian forces yesterday, against Palestinian and Moslem leftist troops entrenched in the mountain passes of central Lebanon.

Nasser died of a heart attack the same day he arranged a cease-fire between Jordan's King Hussein and Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to end the 1970 civil war between Jordan and Palestinians.

"Syria is a loser no matter what results she achieves," Sadat said. "Lebanon is also a loser and so are all of us Arabs. The only winner in all this is Israel."

"Syria's aim, of course, is to destroy completely the Palestinian resistance the Palestine Liberation Organization and the Lebanese nationalist movement led by Moslem leftist Kamal Jumblatt on one hand and to sabotage the joint Arab effort we must have been making to stop the bloodshed," Sadat said.

Sadat said Syria "will not escape the punishment of history" for what it has been doing in Lebanon.

Rhodesia notes U.S. acted in 'bad faith'

SALISBURY, Rhodesia [UPI] — Rhodesia said yesterday the United States had reneged on promises it made to the white minority regime and acted in bad faith in winning Prime Minister's Ian Smith's acceptance of the principle of black majority rule.

However, a government statement indicated Smith's white supremacist regime was willing to go through with promised discussions aimed at creating an interim half-black, half-white government leading to majority black rule within two years.

The dispute centered over varying interpretations of the proposals for a peaceful transition to black majority rule put forward by Secretary of State Henry Kissinger on his African shuttle.

A statement by the Rhodesian government yesterday said the United States had indicated that the proposals laid down by Kissinger were "part of a package deal" and had received the prior approval of black African leaders. Rhodesia said Kissinger had assured Smith "no new demands" would be made.

However, the black African "frontline" presidents of five nations which border on white ruled southern Africa issued a statement Sunday taking exception to parts of the proposal as announced and accepted by Smith last Friday.

In an effort to halt any collapse of the effort for a peaceful transition to black rule before it started, Kissinger and the State Department said the proposals were simply a basis for future negotiation. They said the black African leaders' statement was not a rejection of the proposals.

On Monday, to assuage the black leaders' demands and forestall outright rejection or a collapse of the talks before they start, U.S. Under Secretary of State William Rogers said that what Smith depicted as Kissinger's proposals amounted only to a Rhodesian negotiating position.

Singling out Rogers for criticism, the Rhodesian statement Tuesday "expressed surprise at some of the statements reported to have been made by Mr. Rogers...."

The statement said the terms Smith announced Friday came in a document he received from Kissinger during their meeting in South Africa Sept. 19.

"The Prime Minister Smith was informed that the proposals had been drawn up in consultation with the British government and had been agreed by the black presidents whom Dr. Kissinger had consulted," it said.

Students must sign up today at 4 p.m. in the Hillel office 302 Student Union. Meal ticket booklets must be brought in at time of sign-up.

Alliance holds meeting tonight

On Labor Day, 25 Amherst-Northampton people joined with an equal number from Springfield in a 15 hour bus trip to Raleigh, North Carolina to participate in the National March for Human Rights and Labor Rights.

Freedom was demanded for Rev. Ben Chavis, the Wilmington Ten and all political prisoners. An end to the racist death penalty and the repression of labor was also demanded at the march.

The march was called by the National Alliance Against Racist and Political Repression. The Amherst Branch of the Alliance will begin its third academic year by holding an organizational meeting tonight in room 808 Campus Center at 7:30.

This year the alliance hopes to connect more emphatically the cases of political prisoners across the nation and the cases of political prisoners in the Amherst community. The Alliance believes that mass action can free individuals.

All members of the University community and the surrounding communities are urged to attend.

Lisa Selkirk of the Women's Caucus said the report was the first in a series of three being prepared by the caucus addressing the inequity problem. Subsequent reports "will deal with the University's affirmative action procedure and the inadequacies of that procedure," according to Selkirk.

Selkirk also said, "We are going to initiate a fight against the inroads in federal affirmative action laws which have recently surfaced." Lately, legislative action has been taken to dilute affirmative action through such methods as increasing employe requirements, according to Selkirk.

The Women's Caucus will also be preparing a list of concerns to be included in a collective bargaining proposal.

One of the major problems, according to Selkirk, is that "women in one department never know what women in another department have been thinking and doing."

No date has been set for the next meeting of the caucus.

affirmative action policy, and providing a "general clearing house for information on all faculty issues" according to Silvestri.

"We have been remarkably successful and very democratic." Silvestri said.

After Silvestri's address, the floor was open for questions. One local faculty member expressed a concern about merit increases. Silvestri replied that this was a "very volitile issue at URI and one defended by AAUP, however. Despite the success AAUP has had in dealing with this issue, it is still being debated".

Another faculty member expressed a fear that a bargaining agent would produce negative feelings between the administration, the state and the faculty.

Silvestri responded by saying that there were no bad feelings at URI dispite the often adversary role of the association.

When asked about the set up of the AAUP on the URI campus Silvestri presented an outline of the expenses and the structure.

About half the budget, which is obtained from dues, goes toward salaries. A large portion of the remainder pays lawyer fees during contract negotiations and the rest of the money is spent on office rent and supplies.

AES also acts on booking agency for performers of the UMass community and places the artists with or refers them to community service organizations.

The service also sponsors and coordinates a seminar series. The next seminar will be on Oct. 30 and its topic will be "Arts and the Senior Citizen".

Other upcoming seminars will discuss fundraising, women in the arts, promotional tips for the performing artist, and how to organize an arts festival.

Student involvement in AES has mainly been with work-study and interns. One of AES' interns from last year is now the Executive Director of Kulturama, the city of Holyoke's Arts Council.

Students are also needed to help coordinate the Arts Festival which will take place on May 7-8, to volunteer as performers in community settings such as nursing homes and schools and to help with the publications of the AES.

Honors deadline

Students currently engaged in their Senior Honors Thesis Projects are reminded that the deadline for returning Senior Honors Thesis Proposal forms to the Honors Office, Machmer E-23, was Sept. 17.

Due to a lack of public notice on this deadline, the Honors Office will accept proposals through tomorrow. Students are strongly encouraged to come by and notify the Honors Office of the names of their Honors Thesis advisors and the other members of their committees by this if they have not already done so.

Requests for financial support for thesis work for this semester will be accepted through Oct. 15 with no extensions.

Health Advisory Board reacts

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

By a 16-2-0 vote, the Student Health Advisory Board passed a motion at its meeting last night expressing concern about the way in which allegations of "illegal or improper conduct" within the University Health Services were brought to light.

The statement said in part: "The Student Health Advisory Board... strongly objects to the fact that it was not informed of the allegations against the University Health Services... before the press and other agencies (inside and outside of the University were notified."

Yesterday, two former members of the board and one former member of the Faculty Senate Health Council brought written statements from some health services employees to the Hampshire County district attorney's office, and requested an investigation.

Neil T. Katz, a former chairperson of the board, said he could "personally understand" why the individuals involved acted as they did, but that "people got upset" at the board meeting when they were read a statement by Graduate Student Senate President Michael R. Federow outlining the action taken at the district attorney's office.

Both Katz and present board co-Chairperson William H. Kober said they wished the employees had come to the full board earlier.

There was also a motion passed establishing a committee of two (co-Chairperson James Nesti and Finance Committee Chairperson Louis Grillon to look into the bases behind the allegations and make a recommendation to the board as to whether it should make an investigation of its own.

The board was assured by Federow that the two would have access to the employee s' statements presented to the district attorney but they may be requested not to divulge what is in the statements.

Project Self offers women's workshops

Project Self is once again offering a series of over 40 different workshops. All University and community women are welcome to participate in the eight-week long workshops. Registrations are being accepted through Wednesday. All workshops cost $25 unless otherwise noted, and registration can be done by mail to Everywoman's Center (EWC), Goodell Hall, UMass-Amherst, or call for more information: 545-0883. EWC hours are Mon., Tues., Wed., Fri.,; 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday 1 to 4 p.m. and Wednesdays 6 to 8 p.m. For those interested, academic credit for workshops can be arranged. Workshops start meeting the week of Oct. 4.

Workshops which still have openings include:

— RUN FOR FUN: an individual jogging workshop where each participant will set her own goals and work on meeting these with group support. Emphasis will be on running as a free form, self-discovery activity. Beginners through superstars welcome. Workshop will meet on Monday, Wednesday and Fridays 7:45 to 8:30 a.m.

— THINKING ABOUT OPEN RELATIONSHIPS: To discuss our own feelings and those of our partners, as well as the difficulties and benefits of open relationships. Each participant will attempt to form her own definition of the kind of open relationship she might want. Workshop meets on Mondays 9 a.m. to noon.

— FEMINIST DANCER'S WORKSHOP: A dancing and sharing space to explore skills and make connections with others and our environment. We will create and work collectively on pieces reflecting our ideas and feelings. This workshop is specifically for women who have been actively involved in developing dance skills and have begun or want to begin developing a political framework to communicate dances to an audience. Workshop meets on Mondays 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

— WEIGHT CONTROL: to examine feelings about ourselves and our bodies and the way that society has portrayed and defined the ideal woman. We will discuss approaches to weight control and try to understand the roles that anger, passivity and assertiveness have played in our successes and failures with controlling our weight. Meets Tues. 5 to 7 p.m.

— PROJECT ADVENTURE: a series of activities and physical competency exercises for women. Participants will share physically and emotionally challenging experiences and develop an increased confidence and knowledge of our physical selves. There are no physical requirements for the work-

Holly Near: Entertainer with a message

Introductory note: Holly Near and Jeff Langley will perform in a benefit concert for the Native American Solidarity Committee tomorrow night in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are on sale for $2 at People's Newsstand in the Student Union Building, outside the Hatch and at the door.

My first exposure to Holly Near produced a deep and lasting impression.

In late January 1975, venerated journalist I.F. Stone was speaking to participants at the Indochina Peace Campaign's conference in Washington D.C. about how we must begin to design new modes of mass transportation and cease our abuse of the automobile. But since the aim of the conference was to end aid to the puppet governments of South Vietnam and Cambodia (Ford, Kissinger and Schlesinger were then beseeching some $700 million from Congress), old Izzy Stone's remarks, though poignant as always, were off the mark.

Later, a young red haired woman assumed the podium and proceeded to berate Stone for his wandering remarks. Now Stone was the evening's keynote speaker, and to most in attendance, Holly Near was an unknown quantity. Yet Holly asserted herself. Most there felt it was a necessary rebuke, but few would have had the courage to criticize such an esteemed individual before an audience of thousands.

Holly then moved into an intense acappella rendition of "Hang in There," perhaps the most appropriate song ever written for such an occasion.

Several times since, I have seen Holly Near perform, and she has sung always with a hope, a vitality and an energy that brings audiences to their feet in standing ovations.

Holly Near is unique in that none of her talent is squandered on trifles. Her music is didicated to reaching people and the raising of consciousness — specifically that of women. What John Coltrane is to the jazz idiom, Holly Near is to women's music.

At Holly's concerts, there is, sadly, an under-representation of men. Sadly, because it is we who most need to free ourselves from the traditional dominant, competitive and violent roles we have allowed ourselves to fall into.

As a fervent political activist, Holly, who defines her profession as a "cultural worker," feels her major purpose is to entertain. In a recent interview with Win magazine, she commented: "Entertainment takes on a different connotation because it gives spirit and courage. It makes people feel good and strong."

While she provides entertainment that makes people feel strong together, Holly is devoted to increasing people's political understanding. Her struggle against sexism, racism and classism is reflected in her lyrics.

Entertainers like Holly Near can be very effective in introducing new ideas to Americans. She understands that if real change is to take place, it will require many people's active participation in organizing community projects that will enable people to gain control over their daily lives. Over the last few years, much of her work has focused on issues related to our Vietnam experience.

As she told Win magazine: "Every American needs to understand why that war happened... and why we must have unconditional amnesty. Unless people understand these things they will continue in Korea, the Phillipines, Puerto Rico and Chile and the same mistakes will be repeated."

First encounter with a cop

To the Editor:

Late this summer I had my first personal encounter with the UMass Department of Public Safety when I received a parking ticket. I was rather upset and immediately went to the department and filed an appeal. There I encountered an officer of the law who was large, loud, brusk, and generally obnoxious: the kind of policeman who deserves the name pig. But what the hell; I'm of a forgiving nature [he might have had a bad day or maybe he was the department's one and only black sheep]. I didn't condemn anyone.

Yesterday I received the denial of my appeal in the mail. I wasn't too upset because I rather expected a denial. But on what is a standard bureaucratic form with a checkmark in the appropriate box there was written in the comment section — in red — underlined in blue and double underlined — capitalized — and with an exclamation mark: "Pay Ticket or Await SUMMONS". The total impression on the reader was not only one of rudeness but one of antagonism and belligerence as well.

I can come to only one conclusion. The University of Massachusetts Department [what a fantastic euphemism] Public Safety is.... Piglike.

Third world concern

To the Editor:

In whose interests are the unfair election procedures of the Student Senate? Certainly not the Third World Students.

We maintain that the overwhelming majority of Third World students were not informed of registration and voting procedures for Third World representatives. In fact, there was NO official publicity submitted by the Senate election committee regarding Third World registration in the three weeks prior to the elections. A mere 75 students, or approximately 3 per cent of the total Third World population, were actually registered and eligible to vote.

Special procedures of registering to vote as a Third World student are unfair in light of the fact that none of the other constituencies have to follow the same procedures. If a Third World student identifies himself as Third World and wants to vote, why then does he have to pre-register as such? Doesn't a Third World student look more obviously Third World than a commuter does a commuter?

The Student Senate constitution, [Chap. 10, Para. 1, Sect. B., Subs. 1] guarantees the right to an "efficient and equitable election." We feel that it is time for the Student Senate to reform its procedures and policies regarding the Third World community. We hereby challenge the elections and encourage the Brothers and Sisters of the Third World community to attend the Student Senate meeting tonight at 7:30, Campus Center — refer to Information Desk for room number. Your support is needed.

Rhetoric of wonder

To the Editor:

Beggin' Your pardon ... so far I have listened to the rhetoric of the whole United States of America, from Presidents to students. I wouldn't care if you were black, white, green, or any other color you can think of, that wouldn't justify to me the bullshit going down.

Election time — time to put on your best behavior. I thought I wanted to be a ComStu major but now I just don't know. Saturday Night Live never had such technical difficulties. There was no great camera movement, no special effects. What's the problem? Bullshit! Right up to our knees, and wondering if this will be printed.

So far I'm not impressed with UMass either. Four wallin' it. I wonder? Bury me heart at toll plaza cause this ain't the right way either. No wonder I can't get a BEOG.

Liven-up Saturday

To the Editor:

UMass football returns to Alumni stadium on October 23 when the UMass Minutemen battle the Huskies of UConn. Saturdays are going to be pretty boring unti then, right? WRONG!!

The BELCHERTOWN VOLUNTEERS are stuuents from UMass who spend their Saturday afternoons volunteering at Belchertown State School. Why not come and JOIN US! To be a Volunteer you will have the opportunity to cooperatively share your time, energies and skills with persons living at the State School. More importantly, by volunteering as a Saturday Volunteer you'll be introduced to the field of human services and meet lots of other UMass students who have similar interests as you. You will also have the option of attending volunteer workshops which will assist you in your volunteer experience.

As a Volunteer we need your enthusiasm and fresh ideas to provide the people living at the State School with some positive shared relationships.

The first bus leaves this Saturday at 12:30 on the Whitmore side of Haigis Mall. It will return from the State School at 4:30. Come along with us.

For further information please call Mary Jane at 545-2303 Rm. 316, Bill at 253-5750 or Gerry Morrisy at Belchertown State School at 323-6311 ext. 296.

Our energy policies

By BOB BICKFORD

In the beginning, the Utilities created energy in the image of Federal Policy ...

And He said "Let there be Light" ...

This story is intended to shed some light on the future of nuclear power, and how the Federal government insures its staying power.

The Federal Government no longer allows the oil companies a depletion allowance on money invested in development. Among other things, this has the effect of slowing the flow of private money to this area.

At the same time, the government is guaranteeing a 6 per cent return on nuclear power plant investments. In a system that revolves around the principal of investment and return on investment, this incentive provides the utility companies and the large investors, like the banks, with economic encouragement for nuclear power development. The stimulus is not in developing alternative forms of energy, but in expanding on the present nuclear framework.

On May 27, 1976 Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO) told Fair Share, a public interest group, that it generates 75 per cent more electricity than its customers can use.

The Federal Power Commission (FPC), suggests that a power company have the capacity to produce 15-20 per cent more electricity than its customers would normally consume. This is to avoid power shortages in the event of excess energy demand. This means that WMECO makes 55 per cent or 2-3 times more electricity than its customers could ever use. With this in mind ...

Earlier in May, WMECO requested a 17 per cent, 20.3 million dollar rate hike. Of that, 18.5 million was to go toward the construction of the new Millstone nuclear power plant in Waterford, Conn. The remaining 2.8 million was to be used to raised the profits of their stockholders.

In light of these facts, why does WMECO wish to build a plant to generate electricity that is not even needed? Why not reduce its excess capacity to a reasonable 15-20 per cent, and put the other 55 per cent on line?

One reason is the investment incentive. The more plants the utility companies build, the higher the investment, and the larger the guaranteed return. In this manner, the government lubrciates the economic machinery that creates irresponsible energy decisions.

One of the main points on the nuclear power calling card is that it is a necessary form of energy until more desirable sources, such as solar energy, can be developed and become economically feasible. Government policy is working against this concept totally.

Governor's new clothes

Many years ago there was a beneficent and happy Governor who lived in the southern portion of a far-away kingdom. This merry Governor lusted for only two things in life — the emperorship of the kingdom, and women. But of the latter, another time.

At any rate he went about the kingdom decrying the wickedness and incompetence of the emperor and his rich vice-emperor. Many imprecations and accusations were exchanged. The vice-emperor took no part in these goings-on however, except to flip the occasional royal bird. But of this, another time.

Resuming our tale of the merry Governor, he promised love and peace and prosperity to the ravaged kingdom. And he held up his proposals for all to see. Now there was something very curious about these proposals. They appeared non-existent to the naked eye (a regrettable figure of speech but, one I'm sure, for which the Lord will forgive me).

The merry Governor explained that his proposals had the peculiar quality of becoming invisible to those who were either very stupid, or Republican. Not wishing to be thought of as either of the above, the people of the kingdom admired these pretend proposals and proclaimed to one another "They are sound proposals. They are emminently practical proposals," all the while thinking to themselves that the merry Governor held up nothing but thin air. Often they would go off alone and say "Why I can't see a thing. But surely I am neither stupid nor Republican."

And so it came to pass that the merry and clever Governor was made emperor of the vast kingdom. A general clamor arose for a great procession to honour the Governor's ascendancy to the throne. The Governor sat up the whole night before the day of the great procession, burning seven candles; so that his subjects might see how anxious he was to ready his proposals, which were, of course, quite non-existent.

The next day the Governor walked along in the procession, accompanied by his many ministers who held up the emperor's minor proposals and plans for everyone to see and admire. "What foresight! What probity! What ingenious!" cried the befuddled people. Nobody would let it appear that he saw nothing, for fear of being considered either very stupid or, worse yet, Republican.

"But he carries no proposals with him" said a little child.

There was a general silence.

And then a great whispering began. "A child says the Governor carries nothing" said each person unto the next. Until at last all the people cried out at once "He has nothing!" But it was too late for them to do anything about it, for the Governor had just been made emperor! And he gave all his subjects a big smile, just to show them who was in charge. And the little child was whisked away and never heard from again.

ISC: The same old hacks?

By RICK GUREGHIAN

The chaos of student government at the University re-materialized last week with the announcement that a new political organization, the "Independent Student Coalition," would be sponsoring the candidacies of over 50 student senate hopefuls.

Although politically opposite the Unionist coalition that garnered most of the election news last year, the ISC is basically a re-hash of anti-Unionist forces, drawing their strength from the summer defections of various union leaders, and the factionalization of a senate disarrayed.

The reasons behind the Coalition are hazy at best. Steve Goldberg, a student senator who announced the forming of the ISC in a press conference last week, stated that the present senate "is not a functional student senate right now." He added, "the administration does not know what student needs are because of the ineffectiveness of the Senate. The purpose of the Coalition is to define these needs and let the administration know that the students are behind the senate."

But are the students behind the senate? That question alone exposes the irrationality of the Coalition. The students tired of John O'Keefe as President in early 1975, grew disillusioned with the Unionist co-Presidency of Ellen Gavin and Henry Ragin, and simply turned away in disgust from the over-compromising Presidential duo of Paul Cronin and Jay Martus. As it stands today, the new Coalition, which was recently backed by Cronin and Martus, is just an extension of the Presidential failings that have characterized student government here over the last two years.

Yet the campus politicians, of which there are many, continue to dream up new organizations in which to gain unabridged senate control. It gets tiring watching the back-fighting that pervades the senate, and one cannot fault a justifiably skeptical student population for not supporting the present scheme.

The most recent rumor concerning the ISC is that it contains the more conservative members of the senate, a group that mostly fought and bickered with the Union members last year. If so, the students are getting fooled once again. The Unionist control in the senate brought about a virtual stalemate last year, and if the ISC is indicative of past senate performances, the students may rue the day they ever cast their ballots.

One perceptive campus politico put it this way concerning the ISC, saying "It appears as though its new name, new people, and new ideas, but all it really is, as usual, is a new name." He went on to liken it to a builder whose performance in building houses was not too adept. "Instead of going out of business because of people bad mouthing his product, the guy simply changes the name of his company. People assume its a new builder, but really, it's the same old hack."

That's what the students have been saddled with: the same old hacks. If you look down the list of the candidates running under the ISC banner, you'll notice a goodly number of names which are already enrolled in senate membership. So whatever new ideas, new leadership, and new promises come forth from the ISC, they will most likely be new in the sense that they are new for the present school year.

It may seem unfair to criticize the ISC prior to its official inception, but one judges organizations on past performances. And if past performances are any indication of the ISC's future; as usual, the students are the losers!

Where's concern?

Sooner or later, one of the objects thrown from Washington Tower by person or persons unknown will land not on a car windshield, but on someone's head. The damage done, however, will be just as severe, and while someone is rushed to the hospital with a smashed skull, all the authorities connected with trying to find out who's responsible will each have something to say.

The three heads of residence for Washington will shake their heads and reiterate the need for co-operation of everyone in the tower to catch whomever is doing this. They will call another meeting of the residence assistants, at which they will beg them to keep their eyes and ears open for a clue of identity. Everyone will be reminded that Washington is getting a "bad reputation" on account of one, or several "sick people."

Maybe the petition that was circulated last week asking for "greater concern" on the part of "the Administration, Campus Police, Physical Plant personnel, and all other University staff ... before someone is killed" will be re-circulated. The heads of residence will try as hard as they can to catch the culprit, because they are concerned for human life.

Here at the Collegian, the board of editors will write an editorial deploring the incident. They will urge that anyone who knows anything about it step forward, so that Southwest will once again be safe for its residents. They will hope that their message will reach the right people.

Students will read the editorial, and discuss it over lunch, or in their lounges after dinner. Most will agree with the editorial, and promptly forget it; a few will cheer on someone whom they think is outwitting the University; a few will wonder what kind of a lunatic would do such a thing, and wonder how they might be able to stop him or her.

But somewhere in Washington Tower, one person or group of people, will remain deaf to all this urging, and will keep silent about what they actually saw being thrown from the window. They will be afraid to step forward, because that would make them "tattlers", and would mark them for revenge by someone who "didn't really mean it."

Right now, anyone who knows who's responsible for endangering human lives by senselessly throwing things out of upper story windows in Washington, is, by his or her silence, as criminal as the person who actually hurls the object. When someone has been seriously hurt, or killed, speaking out will only punish the guilty person, it will not protect the innocent ones. Whoever is doing this is sick. Whoever is protecting that person by silence is running a close second.

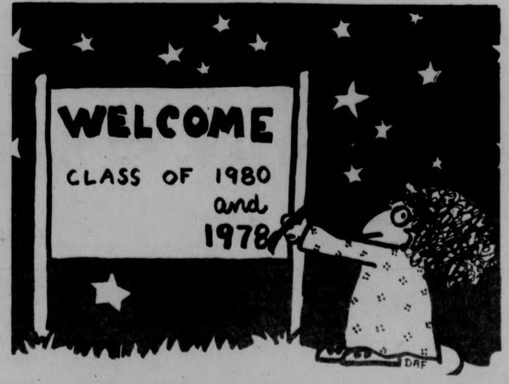
Transfers: A special breed?

"Welcome Class of 1980" — is what the sign reads outside Memorial Hall. But what about the class of 1978? There are more than 1,000 transfer students who are just as scared, confused, and bewildered as the freshmen of this giant organism known as UMass. Yet, the sign outside Memorial Hall is typical of the attitude reflected towards transfers, that is, "ignore the transfers and maybe they'll go away." After all, who wants to sit down for more than 15 minutes to discuss what credits will be accepted, what requirements have been satisfied, and what courses must be taken to graduate from UMass?

As a transfer in my first semester at UMass, I had encountered great frustration. I had been lost in a LIMBO since my indoctrination at summer orientation spanning to the mass hysteria of August 31 — September 3, otherwise known as the week before Labor.

First of all, Summer Orientation marked my debut as a small-time college transfer ready to exchange blows with a machine called OSCAR. Oscar won the battle with 2 stunning lefts and 3 over-subscribed's. Then came the re-match on September 1 where I valiantly cursed and threatened professors to sign me into their courses. Fortunately, I emerged with a "2 courses added" decision.



Secondly, part of the blame lies with my summer advisor, whom I'll designate as Professor X. Professor X was a carefree-type that wandered about 10 minutes late into my major's meeting room. Half asleep, distraught, and wilting in the 90 degree heat, Professor X proceeded to whip each and every person out of the room as fast as Detroit produces cars. Perhaps he was in a rush to return to his pink lemonade beside an icy, cool pool. Whatever his reason, the end result was 12 transfers lost in a LIMBO. All twelve (including myself) were baffled by the computer sheet and none of us knew where we stood academically in our major.

Finally after one week of hair-pulling and contemplating the thought of swallowing 10 Bayer aspirins, I found out where I stood academically at UMass. I did so by my own perseverance and NOT from summer orientation. I'm not advocating the abolition of summer orientation but I am complaining about the month that it took place (the middle of July). I lost a PAY DAY to be subject to mass hysteria in sweltering 90 degree heat (who can think in hot weather?). Perhaps the summer session could be moved to a "cooler" month and Professor X might be more willing to look at my transcript rather than a tall glass of pink lemonade. Maybe then, the transfer student will find the adjustment easier and won't be lost in a LIMBO.

Hey! Will someone paint 1978 on that damn sign outside Memorial Hall?????

shop. Specifically, women who feel negatively about past physical activity experiences are encouraged to join. Meets on Monday and Thursdays 3 to 5 p.m.

– WOMEN IN LITERATURE: a workshop based on books, poems, and short stories by and about women. It will be a chance to develop close reading skills and to make connections between literature and one's own life. Meets Mondays 5 to 7 p.m.

– HOMESTEAD SEWING: to explore inexpensive, alternative method of dressing ourselves and our children. Clothing will be a personal expression rather than a commercial compromise. Tools necessary are scissors, material, needles, thread and you. Meets Tues. 7 to 10 p.m.

– CREATIVE WRITING: LEARNING TO SEE: this workshop will attempt to demystify the art of writing, making it a more personal experience through emphasizing individual styles. Focus will be on exploring various ways of becoming a better observer of our internal and external worlds and seeing the causes-effects-dynamics and changes of human relationships more clearly so that these observations can be expressed through a written medium. Meets Tues. 7 to 10 p.m.

– WOMANSPIRIT RITUALS: to discuss traditional rituals (communion, confirmation, Bas Mitzvah) in order to discover what we as individuals and as a group need from rituals, and how to create them. We will experiment with new rituals for health-energy-guidance-blessing. Workshop meets on Tuesdays 6 to 8 p.m.

– ASTROLOGY: a basic introduction to astrology covering such topics as the meaning of planets, signs, houses and methods for constructing a natal chart. The interpretation will be a Feminist one in that the traditional male-female distinctions, which dwell on stereotypes, will be re-explored and discussed. Meets on Tuesdays 6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

– ART OF BELLY DANCING: to learn exercises, steps and movements basic to belly dance. Belly dancing is a creative and fun way to exercise, gain control and realize the full potential of our bodies. Intermediate and beginning students are welcome. Meets Wed. 7 to 9 p.m.

– INTERMEDIATE PHOTOGRAPHY: a workshop for women who have had some experience in a darkroom and-or extended experience with a camera. Focus on translating creative ideas into photographs, as well as fine points of process in terms of composition, design, film development and print making. Meets on Wed. 7 to 10 p.m.

– DORIS LESSING: THE PERSONAL, THE POLITICAL AND THE APOCALYPTIC: to explore Lessing's works which include women in every stage of life, and travel from colonial Africa to post-Imperial Britain. Lessing remains one of the most important writers to define the problems of modern women within the home and within society. Meets on Tues. 7:30 to 9:30 p.m.

– WOMEN'S PRACTICAL SELF DEFENSE: the emphasis here is on learning practical self-defense techniques which do not require years of practice to be efffctive. Discussion will evolve around the psychological aspects of self-defense as well as practical physical techniques. Workshop meets on Tuesdays 7 to 9 p.m.

– THE DYNAMICS OF SYLVIA PLATH: to explore our own lives and ambitions through Plath's expressions. Plath represents the tragic heroine which is a part of us, often felt but misunderstood. Her life as well as her work articulates the unheralded feelings that many have, but are unable to express. No previous familiarity with Plath is required. Workshop meets on Wed. 7 to 9 p.m.

– LEARNING TO DRAW WOMEN: to extend our ability to see and improve technical skills and coordination. This workshop will be a place for communicating with other women through drawing each other and talking. Workshop meets on Wednesdays 7 to 9:30 p.m.

Non-traditional student numbers grow

More and more people who are over 25 and employed are becoming part of the student population at institutions of higher learning throughout the country. At UMass the Division of Continuing Education is the main channel through which evening, part-time, and non-traditional students can work on undergraduate degrees or take courses simply for personal enrichment.

As the number of non-traditional students grows, so too, expand the opportunities for study on a part-time basis, both on and off campus. To help students keep up with the variety of possibilities and resources available to them, the Student Services staff at the Division offers assistance in planning educational and-or vocational goals.

A recent addition to the staff of Student Services is Garrett McAuliffe who was previously at Greenfield Community College where he counselled both individuals and groups in personal problems and career decision-making. McAuliffe joins Joan P. Eignor, director of Student Services at Continuing Education and counselors Harry Neunder and Bernadine Young Freese.

McAuliffe became involved with continuing education because of his strong desire to help non-traditional students achieve their educational goals.

"Many older people with family and job responsibilities are unable to find the time to attend college full-time, even though they would like to benefit from what a college education offers. I believe that continuing education (i.e., part-time study, evening classes, and open admissions) is an essential vehicle for these people," he stated.

McAuliffe will advise students regarding courses, degree programs, and financial aid; evaluate transfer credits; help arrange independent study projects with appropriate faculty members; and clarify options which are designed to open all of UMass' resources to the non-traditional student. These options include UMass undergraduate degrees as well as the Division's Bachelor of General Studies (BGS) degree. The BGS allows specialization in areas not offered in regular University programs, such as Criminal Justice and Fire Science. The BGS degree requirements are individually designed by the student, the Division's counseling staff and faculty members.

The Student Services staff encourages non-traditional

Licenses needed for moto-bikes

The clarify the law relating to operation of motorized bicycles, Registrar of Motor Vehicles Robert A. Panora, said today that operators of motorized bicycles must be at least 16 years of age and be in possession of a valid driver's license or a learner's permit.

To be operated, motorized bicycles must have a sticker issued by the Registry of Motor Vehicles affixed to the rear fender. Stickers may be obtained by applying in duplicate to any registry office upon payment of a $3 fee. The sticker will remain valid to the end of the calendar year following the calendar year in which it is issued or until the ownership of the vehicle is transferred, whichever occurs first.

A motorized bicycle is defined as, "A pedal bicycle which has a helper motor rated no more than 1.5 brake horsepower, a cylinder capacity not exceeding 50 cubic centimeters, an automatic transmission, and which is capable of a maximum design speed of no more than 25 miles per hour."

The registrar also pointed out that operators of motorized bicycles are subject ot the traffic laws, rules and regulations of the Commonwealth including the use of hand signals.

Motorized bicycles may be operated on all public ways except on limited access or express state highways. They may be operated on bicycle lanes adjacent to the various ways but not on off-street recreational bicycle paths.

Importance of relations stressed

The Moon is finishing up in Sagittarius (expanding wisdom) this morning, having formed a difficult square angle with the unpredictable Mars in Libra (relationships). This means that we may have woken up in a mental knot, but the energy is there to rise above it with a chuckle at ourselves, as reflected in the mirror of our partnership with an Other.

The general flow of the week may center on finishing-up readjustments in our partnerships in preparation for the conjunction of the Sun (heart) and Pluto (rebirth) in Libra next Monday. By then our hearts should be speaking to us about the formation of new partnerships. If we face our fears we will receive new strength from our primal foundations. A change is taking place now with regard to the universal purpose behind our relationships. Our selfish motives are losing their importance in the face of the almost inevitable upheaval that is to come before the year 2000. Relationships in which people tear each other apart are now self-destructing, and new ones are forming, all powered by something beyond us. In Noah's Ark, it's two-by-two. The only relationships that survive and grow are those that serve the Purpose that moves us all. The person with whom we have to work towards our own mutual enlightenment may be staring us right in the face, but we may be so blinded by our need for immediate gratification that we completely miss countless opportunities to grow, to transcend our TV consciousness, and to share the divinity that is ours from birth.

Tonight at 6:14 the Moon will move from Sagittarius into Capricorn (the Mountaingoat) moving through the last part of its "crescent" phase and into exact "first quarter" by 7:12 in the morning. Crescent time is a time for breaking free from the ghost-patterns of the last (lunar) month, so that we can begin to build toward the fulfillment of the new (Libra) month's theme. During the day with the Moon in Sagittarius, it could feel easy to break free, to be on top of it, and to be able to forgive ourselves or others for whatever ways we didn't live up to last month's Virgo theme of efficient purity.

But by tonight, as the Moon moves to Capricorn, the action will shift. Capricorn (organization) is the first quarter of Libra, 90 degrees ahead in the circle. In relationships the sense of adventure and optimism is always followed by a crisis of action, a challenge to discipline or organize the relationship into a common will which is capable of struggling toward a goal. (The practical necessities of life are tests of our togetherness, our ability to unite rather than just balance.) If we can use the night to finally drop some old shyness or criticism, to really begin to unite, we'll be ready to deal with tomorrow's quarter-moon "challenge-to-act" in terms of mutual values and mutual goals. By tomorrow, if we've really been sharing deeply, we may be rewarded by some unexpected favorable changes. Otherwise, if we've been selfish, we may suddenly get knocked off balance.

So now's the time to screw up our courage, find our partner, and join the dance.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, September 29 — Born today, you are one who relies for happiness upon the healthy condition of your friendships. You cannot bear losing touch with old friends, no matter what the physical distance between you or the length of time you have been apart. On the other hand, you are quick to understand old friends who fail to keep in touch with you, who fail, in short, to keep up their end of the friendship bargain. You are quick to forgive the behavior of friends that in some way causes you pain, whether physical or emotional, whether brief or of a lengthy duration. Your need for companionship — even companionship through letters or telephone — is too great to be overlooked; therefore, indulge it.

You enjoy the challenge inherent in competition, especially should it arise as a result of the good work you have been doing in the first place. Inspired to your best efforts by the best efforts of others, you should over the years develop a hide somewhat akin to that of an elephant: thick and very nearly impenetrable. This does not mean that you are insensitive, only that you are capable of producing even when under great pressure or the victim of extremely critical remarks of an adverse nature.

Never envious of those who move ahead quicker than you do, you are quite satisfied to do your own work in your own way to your own specifications. However, you must realize the importance of a period of training, of preparation for whatever you desire to do; otherwise, you are bound to enter too soon into activities at which, because of lack of preparedness, you can only fail.

Thursday, September 30

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take care that your regular routine is not disrupted by another's efforts to earn more for less. Keep to your own concerns.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Business partners may be causing you more distress than you can handle without help. Call upon one who has aided you in the past.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Unexplored territory yields upon inspection tremendous possibility for gain. Don't be afraid to study the situation in depth.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — The flaw in your present plans makes itself known with a bang this morning. Correct the error and you create new possibility for gain.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Take major steps against a minor failure in plans. Otherwise, you will feel the failure fast taking on major proportions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — If you hope to improve the popularity of your present project, stress the benefits to be gained, not the hard work involved.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — There is more than one way to gain your objective. Don't be so insistent upon your own method that you fail to see the good in another.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — This is a day when you should enjoy more than ever the overcoming of an obstacle of long standing. Rest content at evening.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Religion plays a large part in your life today — whether as a result of zeal or of complete lack of belief. Rest on your laurels in the evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Business or domestic partnerships take on an excellence of quality early in the day. Don't expect the young to understand your point of view.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Versatility is the key to the aid you can give others today. Don't expect to gain much without giving much.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your view of your present situation may differ from that of loved ones. Expect some argument — but don't expect to give in.

Batsmen turnabout; Ciccone leads attack

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Talk about a turnaround.

After being whipped by AIC a week ago, the UMass fall baseball team put everything together yesterday and trounced North Adams State, 9-3, in a game played at Lorden Field.

The MInutemen unleashed a 10-hit attack upon two Mohawk pitchers and put together a seven-run third and two-run fourth to gain the win. Meanwhile, UMass pitchers Jerry Erb, Dave Stoller, and Jim Cullen gave up nine hits but were helped out by three double plays from their infield.

The hitting hero of the day for the Minutemen was catcher Charlie Ciccone, who went two for four, knocked in four runs, and scored once. Leftfielder George Kelley chipped in with two RBIs to help out the attack.

UMass chased North Adams stater Dave Chaisson in the third with its game-winning rally. After a single, base on balls, and balk put runners on second and third, shortstop Ed Skribiski banged out the first of five consecutive Minutemen hits, a two-run double to right center.

Singles by Cullen, first baseman Bill Hendy, Ciccone, and right-fielder Bob Alves produced another three runs, and then Kelley hit a two-run double to finish the rally.

UMass scored its final two runs in the next frame on a two-run single by Ciccone, following base hits by Cullen and Hendy and a wild pitch.

While the Minutemen's attack was in full gear, Erb was having a fine day on the mound. He surrendered a run in the fourth on a double and single, but did not walk a batter in his four-inning stint.

"I was really pleased that Jerry's control was so good," said coach Dick Bergquist.

Stoller pitched no-run, three-hit baseball in his three innings of work, while Cullen was touched up for two runs on his own two-base throwing error in the eighth.

"Our infield play was good, we hit the ball well, and we're doing some things that we should be doing out there," commented Bergquist.

UMass, which bombed Berkshire Community College, 12-1, last Thursday in an unscheduled game, ("playing mostly freshman and sophomors, too" - Bergquist) upped its fall season mark to 2-1 with yesterday's win. The Minutemen's next game will be tomorrow against Springfield College at Lorden Field.

Bosox, 7-5

BOSTON [UPI] — Tom Murphy pitched four innings of two-hit relief and Denny Doyle and Butch Hobson knocked in two runs apiece Tuesday night to pace the Boston Red Sox to a 7-5 victory over the New York Yankees and their 12th win in their last 14 games.

Murphy came on in relief of starter Rick Kreuger, 2-1, after Graig Nettles led off the sixth with a double.

Commentary

Change the pros pay structure

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Well, here we go again. New England sports fans are once again caught up in the middle of contract disputes between the local professional players and team owners. It isn't bad enough that we had to endure all summer long, the trials and tribulations of Lynn, Fisk and Burleson, but now there are new contract squabbles with members of the Celtics and Bruins.

John Havlicek and Paul Silas have not yet reported to the Celtics pre-season training camp, and their boycott has angered general manager Red Auerbach to a point, where each player has been fined $300 for each practiced session missed.

Meanwhile, Dallas Smith remains a staunch holdout with the Bruins.

I don't know about you, but I am a little fed up with all these contractual differences between the players and management. It seems that a major overhaul of our present bargaining system is imperative. Why should an untested collegiate player, or a seasoned veteran be given the right to demand outrageous and undeserving sums of money?

The answer to our current problem has to do with the sport economics of the 1970's. There is a gross saturation of pro teams in the United States today, and this has given several players the opportunity to bargain with quite a few teams.

Remember Ernie DiGregorio? When he finished college, there was some doubt as to whether he could make it in the NBA because of his lack of size and inadequate defensive ability. However, along came the Buffalo Braves — a growing expansion team — and DiGregorio was given everything but the key to the city.

There he was, an untested rookie who had some questionable inadequacies, and he ended up receiving $400,000 a year for five years.

This seems highly absurd. A player should have to earn his money like everybody else and not make millions of dollars on their reputations alone.

Instead of this nonsense, why doesn't the government step in and change the system from a bargaining one to more like a piece-rate system. Under such a system, a player would be paid a base salary plus whatever they earn according to their performances. It would be very much like an incentive contract.

For example, let's say that all baseball players receive a base salary of $20,000. From that point on, it is up to the individual players and how they perform that dictate the rest of their pay. Under such a system, pitchers like Luis Tiant and Mark Fidrych would benefit greatly because of the outstanding seasons they have had.

Likewise, such a system would detract greatly to people who had a poor year. After all, why shouldn't the ones who did poorly and did not live up to expectations be penalized. If Carlton Fisk only hits .250 this season, why should he still draw his $200,000 a year.

What makes the world of professional sports so different from the rest of ours. You know very well that if you are loafing on the job, your boss will either fire you or cutback your pay.

Deceiving ice hockey ticket sales

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — The state attorney general's office said Teudsay it was lookinginto possible consumer deception tactics used by an American Hockey League club selling tickets to National Hockey League exhibition games.

Atty. Gen. Francis Bellotti's office said he received complaints on the way the Springfield Indians sold tickets for two NHL games.

Involved were Tuusday's Boston Bruins game against the Chicago Black Hawks game and Sunday's clash between the Washington Capitols and New York Rangers.

The tickets were originally sold as a package deal, highlighted by the Boston-Chicago game featuring former Bruins superstar Bobby Orr in a Black Hawk uniform.

But when sales were slow, Indians management allegedly began selling tickets for the two games separately. Many patrons who had bought the package asked for the money back for the Washington-New York game.

Indians management flatly refused, claiming the package deal afforded "better seat selection" in the 7,500-seat Springfield Civic Center.

A spokesman for the attorney general's office said that was "a pretty weak argument. I think its unfair ethically, but we're not sure if its illegal."

The spokesman said there was nothing in the law which specified the ticket sale operation was illegal, but said the state Consumer Protection Act could be applied if advertising and ticket sales proved deceptive.

already paid for and delivered is just sitting down at Boyden. Both the lacrosse and soccer teams really need a scoreboard because so many people arrive late for the games and want to know what the score is. The chances are that the person sitting next to him doesn't know the score either."

Cobb explained the delay again as Physical Plant work-order priorities.

"Things like this take time," he said. "The scoreboard is not a critical work order on the Physical Department priorities for Boyden. Right now, there are more important things in this gym to be done like getting more women's shower facilities installed," Cobb said.

"These priorities are based on safety and educational priorities and not of that of an interest group — no matter who they are," he continued. "Right now, the Physical Plant has taken people off their small maintenance work and put them in the major dorm renovation projects. We know they are terribly understaffed and we know they are doing the best possible job for us."

Roy Rule, spokesman for Physical Plant electrical work orders, verified that the Physical Plant has put approximately 60 per cent of its manpower on dorm maintenance and 40 per cent to cover "everything else."

Rule also predicted that it was a good possibility that the electronic scoreboard would be installed in time for the lacrosse season in March.

"Right now," Rule said, "electrical materials are being sought for the installation of the scoreboard and I would say it was a good possibility it would be ready for the lacrosse season and definitely for next year's soccer season."

Coach Russ Kid, in reaction to the McInerney decision, said, "I guess I can understand the situation and I hope that it's ready for next year. We will all be looking to it."

Better facilities foreseen for soccer and lacrosse teams

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's soccer team may enjoy the playing facilities of the lacrosse field behind Boyden and a new electronic scoreboard next fall.

Head of facilities for the Athletic Department, Justin Cobb, said that plans are under way by the Physical Plant to reseed the grass on the lacrosse field and install a new electronic scoreboard. Cobb also said that the newly reseeded lacrosse field will be ready for use by the men's lacrosse team in the spring semester of 1977 and by the men's and possibly women's soccer teams for the following spring semester.

At present the soccer team plays at the field in front of Boyden and has played there for the last 15 years.

The men's soccer team had sent a letter protesting the decision made by UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney to keep the soccer games on the lower Boyden fields for the present season. The soccer team was under the impression that they were going to be allowed to play its games on the Boyden lacrosse field this season.

Mike Parsons, captain of the soccer team is both anxious and disappointed about the decision.

"Last year we were promised that we would be playing on the lacrosse field this season and all of us were really looking forward to playing up there," Parsons said.

"As was seen with the lacrosse attendance last spring, people just love to spend the afternoon, or stop on their way to classes to watch sports. The team is let down by this postponement," said Parsons.

Justin Cobb, in explaining the McInerney decision, said that the Physical Plant was unable to finish the field because of dormitory and campus building priorities.

"It came down to whether or not the Physical Plant was going to repair the dorms, the classrooms, the dining commons or reseed the field," Cobb said. "Unfortunately, they were unable to complete the field in time."

Cobb said that a chain link fence was put around the field, a public walkway taken out, and the grass reseeded. The Physical Plant strongly suggested to the Athletic Department that the field not be used by any athletic team in the fall season so that the new grass would have a full season to grow in.

Bill Lambert, spokesman for the Landscape Department of the Physical Department, supported the recommendation by stating that having to resod a newly reseeded grass field every two days and then having an athletic contest on it would "absolutely tear the field apart."

Lambert said that permanent grass needs three weeks to germinate and approximately two months to reach full growth. The field was reseeded very late in the summer. Lambert also said that "plutominous concrete was taken out of the walkway and a loam surface put in as a safety factor."

"If given enough time, this field should be in great condition to play either lacrosse or soccer," Lambert said.

The soccer team is also protesting the inability of the Physical Plant to install the newly bought electronic scoreboard.

The scoreboard, designed for use by the lacrosse and soccer teams, was bought by the Athletic Department and has been delivered. The installation of the scoreboard will not take place until possibly next spring as there are no electronic outlets on the lower Boyden field and the Physical Plant does not have the materials and the manpower to install it.

"It's really a shame," Parsons said, "that a new scoreboard that is Netwomen encounter Mt. Holyoke squad

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The women's varsity tennis team travels to Mt. Holyoke today for a 4:00 p.m. match. The women currently have a 1-1 record which consists of a season opening 5-2 homecourt loss to Smith; and a forfeiture by Tufts, over the weekend.

Coach Ken Rubin expects Mt. Holyoke to be as tough an outfit as Smith. The women will need production from their top three singles players: Jennifer Ranz, Carolyn Monney, and Kathy Sullivan. All three were beaten in the Smith match last week.

Today's match will consist of nine games instead of seven; six singles and three doubles, which means several women will be competing for the first time this year. The fourth and fifth singles spots are still held by Martha Awiszus and Dawn Minaai, who recorded the team's only victories against Smith. Kendra Bowker will make her season's debut as the sixth singles player.

Karen Holt, the number one doubles player, is still hobbled by a foot injury, and will not see action in today's match. First year player Debbie Halpern will team with Nancy O'Neil to form the first doubles team. The number two doubles will once again consist of Jeannette Flynn and Leslie Howell. The number three doubles team of Sue Store and Ann Andre will see action for the first time this season.

"I was disappointed over the loss to Smith; but pleased with our girsl effort and level of play," coach Rubin said. UMass came out on top, 5-2, in last year's match with Mt. Holyoke.

S. Hadley bike race on Sunday

SOUTH HADLEY, Mass. — The South Hadley Bicycle Association announces the Second Annual South Hadley Bike Race to take place Sunday, October 3 (rain date Sunday, October 10) at the Common in South Hadley.

There will be four categories in this year's race. Three of them will be based on age; under fourteen, 15 and over, and over forty. There will also be one category, the Pro-Am, which is open to the more experienced bicyclists of all ages. Trophies and medals will be presented to the top three in each category.

Registration for the race is at Norm's Bike Shop, 11 Woodbridge Street, South Hadley, any weekday or Saturday before the race from 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. The registration fee is $2.00.

Festivities will begon on the Common at noon, October 3, and will include music and entertainment. Refreshments will also be available as the race begins its staggered start at 2:30 p.m.

Booters look for comeback following two OT defeats

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team will be looking for its first win of the young season when it takes on Keene State today at 3:30 p.m. on the Boyden Field.

The Minutemen have lost their first two games, both in overtime, to Bridgeport, 4-2, and to Maine, 2-1.

Coach Russ Kidd lamented, "The losses have been awfully tough for the team to stomach because we played well enough to win both of the games we lost. We didn't quite have that clutch offensive threat that a team needs to win in overtime. We are far from discouraged though," Kidd continued.

The lacking offense certainly is not a problem of possession. The fullbacks have done a fine job of clearing the ball out of their own end and up the field. The halfbacks and forwards have shown good dribbling skills (a sign of strong coaching) and have kept the ball in the attacking zone.

One obvious problem is the absence of that exceptional goal scorer who could be used in a set pattern of offense. To make up for the absence of that big scorer, everyone must do some scoring. For that to occur, a cohesive offense must be established. This requires only two things — determination and time.

The Minutemen have certainly shown the determination to improve their offense. They just need time. Coach Kidd thinks the Keene game might be the one in which the offense comes around. "We're still developing our depth, but it has been coming on," he said. Kidd has used a couple of additional players in each game with the hope of finding the right combination.

There wouldn't be a better time for the offense to get untracked, because Keene State's strong point is its defense. Led by experienced fullbacks Rick Scott and Jon Donahue, Keene plays excellent position defense in front of its goal. The visitors have a top notch netminder in 6'2" Ted Delorm out of New York City. The offense is sparked by a former western Massachusetts high school star, sophomore Ken Sady, who played at West Springfield High.

Soccer is the big fall sport at Keene, and Coach Ron Butcher is one of the more successful coaches in New England. His team plays in Division III, but could easily compete in either Division I or II and still have a respectable record. In fact, the Keene schedule finds them playing schools from the other two divisions quite regularly.

Revised netmen meet UConn

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

Men's tennis coach Bill Brown will incorporate a revitalized doubles line up today against UConn in the netmen's final home appearance on the Boyden upper courts at 3:00.

Earlier this week coach Brown made personnel changes in his first and second pairs in an attempt to bolster UMass doubles which have been ineffective in the first half of the season.

Brown moved his number two player, Alan Green, into first doubles replacing capt. Barnaby Kalan as Adam Rosen's partner. Kalan will join Jimmy Barnhart to make up the second doubles team.

Brown has a winning thir ddoubles team in Ricky Sharton and Steve Heyl and has high hopes that another has just been formed.

"We put a lot of strength in our number one doubles," Brown said.

The reasoning for this changing came from the 5-4 loss to UNH last week, a match Brown thought should have been won.

"I was disappointed with our performance in the second doubles. Jimmy and Alan (Barnhart and Green) didn't have the concentration. Something went wrong," said Brown.

Last year's winning team of Barnhart and Green had problems this year that Brown felt could only be remedied by splitting them up.

"Jimmy and Alan were strong last year. They worked well and enjoyed playing with each other. For some reason they just couldn't get it together this year." Brown said.

Brown cited the emphasis on singles as the cause of this year's failing doubles.

"Singles have been UMass' game," Brown said. "And if a player loses his singles match it's hard for him to come back in doubles. This was evident in the match against UNH and against URI."

When asked about the players reaction to the changes Brown said they were "receptive and optimistic ... they knew why the changes were made."

The netmen still have the toughest part of the season ahead with matches in Vermont Saturday against the defending champions, and in Maine the following weekend for the Yankee Conference Championships.

Hockey heads north for 'Keen(e)' match

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

After a successful outing Saturday on College Sportsday, the UMass field hockey team will travel to New Hampshire today to take on Keene State.

In a mini-game against Keene on Saturday, the Minutewomen dominated the play and won, 2-0. They also defeated Friday's opponent, Central Connecticut State, by the same score and tied Brown in a scoreless match. After Thursday's loss to Springfield in the season opener, the team's good showing on Saturday helped to build its confidence again and give a preview of future opponents.

The Minutewomen expect to do well against Keene today, and if the offense gets going it may be a repeat of last year's game where UMass won, 6-1.

Because Coach Judith Davidson is still experimenting with different lineups, the team is not yet set. The field hockey program at Keene is not as developed as it is here; the team poses little threat to the Minutewomen and no problems are expected.

Ali rallies to keep title

NEW YORK [UPI] — Muhammad Ali, forced to abandon his power punching plan in mid-fight, saved his world heavyweight title with old-fashioned dancing and jabbing Tuesday night when he rallied in the late rounds to pull out a close but unanimous decision over Ken Norton.

Norton controlled the fight throughout the early rounds when Ali attempted to stand and slug it out, a la Joe Louis. The strategy obviously failed as Norton broke though Ali's defense with hard shots to the ribs and temple, with Ali rarely throwing a punch.

Ali lost six of the first eight rounds and then decided to go back to his famous dancing routine in the ninth round. Ali circled Norton left to right and then left again but the challenger, obviously aware of the change in Ali's tactics and no longer worried by Ali's claim of newly developed power at the age of 34, yelled through his mouthpiece "you ain't landed nothing yet."

Ali danced again in the 10th as the crowd chanted, "Norton must fall, Norton must fall." Ali circled Norton to the left and landed a pair of left jabs flush in Norton's face but Norton returned a left to Ali's temple at the bell.

Norton took the initiative in the 11th when Ali returned to a flat-footed stance, but the champion finished strong in the round and seemed to land his best punches. Norton finished a three-punch combination with a left to the head, then opened his mouth and eyes wide, daring Ali to come to him on the ropes. Ali blanketed Norton with a dozen punches, only one or two of which seemed to bother the challenger. Norton came back with a pair of left jabs to Ali's face as the champion dropped his guard. Despite the effort, Norton seemed to be tiring.

Ali saved his championship in the later rounds and was awarded an 8-7 edge by both judges, Barney Smith and Harry Lederman, and a 8-6-1 advantage by veteran referee Arthur Mercante. UPI scored the fight.

Mistaken course throws off harriers

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Fiasco, chaos, confusion, screwup, shaft, and lack of communication. Call it anything but a legitimate first class tri-meet between two of the top teams in New England.

Officially, the meet was scored UMass losing to Providence and Harvard by the scores of 18-39 and 25-32 respectively.

Due to an inexperienced Harvard spotter, the first ten runners of the tri-meet took a wrong turn for approximately 80 yards before realizing their mistake.

About the 2.5 mile mark of the Franklin Park 5.5 mile course, the first ten runners, including Providence's John Treacy, Mike O'Shea, Larry Reed, UMass' John McGrail, Mike Quinn, and Frank Carroll approached a fork. The spotter mentioned the runners to the right, instead of left.

Meanwhile the 11-20 runners, many of them being Harvard participants who had run the course before, realized the spotter's mistake and shouted to the first ten runners to head back.

Amazingly Providence's John Treacy and Mike O'Shea regrouped and sped up to retake the lead and win the race by 30 yards over Pete Fitzsimmons, Jeff Cambell, and Reed Eichner — all from Harvard.

Treacy was 26:44 while O'Shea finished at 26:58. Fitzsimmons, third, finished at 27:04. UMass' first finishers were Louis Panaccione — 8th followed by Frank 9th, and John McGrail — 10th.

Usually UMass and Providence run the traditional five mile course used in the New England championships. But since this meet was deemed as Harvard's home meet, the Crimson chose the extended 5.5 mile course and were responsible for setting their own spotters on the course.

When asked why Harvard chose the extended course, a perplexed UMass coach Ken O'Brien said, "That's Harvard. They always do things different. Sure, we are upset but when these things happen there isn't anything we can do except prevent it from happening again." UMass last ran the "Harvard course" in 1973.

UMass' Mike Quinn said, "I was surprised at the really quick first mile by Treacy and O'Shea. That took a lot of me and after this mixup, I really couldn't concentrate and was pretty tired."

Providence's runners John Treacy and Mike O'Shea admitted this was their toughest race in a long time. "We really had to work to win this race, said Treacy. It was really a six mile course instead of the 5.5. We were fortunate we could come back like that."

At the two mile mark, just prior to the course mixup, Treacy and O'Shea held a ten yard lead over McGrail, and Providence freshman Larry Reed, who was surprising everyone with a strong fourth place showing. Right on the heels of Reed were Mike Quinn, Frank Carroll, and Providence's fourth man John Savoie.

Providence coach Bob Amato was a little concerned at this stage of the meet.

"It looked like UMass was beating us at that part of the race. We knew we had to go after UMass from there. If everything had gone right, I would speculate that we would have beaten UMass but it would have been tight."

UMass coach Ken O'Brien said that before the meet UMass had a good shot at beating Providence. He and assistant coach Arnie Morse agreed that Treacy and O'Shea would go 1, 2 but felt that John McGrail would finish third and be followed by Mike Quinn and Frank Carroll.

O'Brien said, "After the 3 mile mark, both Quinn and Carroll felt good, so I would guess the meet would have been very close if everything had gone right. I really don't care if we had beaten Providence. It would have been sweet at this stage of the season but they are the third best team in the nation. As long as we stayed close to them we would be doing very well."

Harrier women triumph

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Women's cross country team used a few strong individual performances and tight pack running to lock up a victory against Brandeis and Radcliffe yesterday at Franklin Park.

UMass totaled 23 points, which bested Brandeis' 58 and Radcliffe's 72. Amherst College also participated in the meet, but did not have enough runners to make up a full team.

Amherst's outstanding freshwoman runner, Marina Buckley, was the individual winner in the race as she ran a fine time of 18:42 over the 3.1 mile course. Buckley, according to her coach, "went out to run the first two miles hard, and then coast in."

Finishing second was a woman who is clearly establishing herself as the top runner on the squad, Johara Chapman. Running without apparent effort, she raced to a time of 19:12.

"I don't see how I can look so good and feel so awful inside," said Jo in reply to a comment on how smoothly she had run. "I must be in good shape to be able to make myself hurt like this."

Julie Lafreniere survived a wrong turn and a surge in the last quarter mile by Donna Randle to finish third. Lafreniere, who said her effort was about "80 per cent of her maximum", was misdirected by a spotter and upon emerging from the "detour" she found Randle right on her shoulder. A strong finish preserved her third place finish.

Following Brandeis' Randle was the pack of runners that UMass is fast becoming famous for. Maggie Crowley, Jane Welzel, Diane Perry and Sue Swartz finished respectively, and within seven seconds of each other, to seal the victory. This top group of six runners was separated by a gap of only 40 seconds, which is a key to winning races.

Also finishing in the top ten and rounding out the top seven for UMass was Anne Bradshaw. She was also well under a minute behind Chapman, which is just what coach Ken O'Brien was looking for.

The weather in Boston was cool and slightly windy, but the course itself was only damp in places, making for fairly good footing. Thirty three runners took the gun, with Buckley immediately streaking to the front. A fact that surprised and amused the UMass women was the way several Radcliffe women attempted to follow Buckley's lead. Now, Marina Buckley may very well be the top collegiate runner in the women's ranks in New England, while Radcliffe had only been working out four days. Needless to say, these "rabbits" soon fell by the wayside, leaving Marina to be chased by Chapman and Welzel in the early going.

At the two mile mark, Buckley had a comfortable lead, with Chapman next in line. The MInutemen were already in good control of the race, with only Donna Randle and two of her teammates breaking up the pack of Lafreniere, Welzel, Swartz, Perry, Crowley, Bradshaw, Barb Callahan and Debbie Farmer.

From then on, only a misinformed spotter lay between UMass and a convincing victory. The most impressive facet of the women's showing was the fact that all of the top group bettered their times from last year by as much as two minutes. At this stage, that's an important point in the women's development.

"Given the fact that we had such a close group of runners, and they're so far advanced from last year, I'd say we're in pretty good shape at this stage," O'Brien said.

At this stage, UMass' overpowering depth is very much in evidence as they had 14 runners in before Brandeis had their five scorers across the line, and 12 in before Radcliffe achieved that mark.

Julie Lafreniere and Jane Welzel approach the two-mile mark at Franklin Park en route to a third and sixth place finish, as UMass beat Brandeis and Radcliffe.

Senate offers its support to Chileans

By ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to send two telegrams in support of political prisoners and oppressed peoples in Chile.

The motions for the telegrams were presented by SGA co-president Jay Martus, who told the Senate the telegrams were in answer to a plea of assistance from a member of the student government at the University of Chile.

The first of the telegrams will be sent to United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, asking him to condemn the actions of the junta that overthrew Chilean president Salvatore Allende.

The second telegram will be sent to the leader of the junta, also condemning his actions.

In a related matter, the senate approved a motion to make Carlos deLorca an honorary student.

DeLorca is a political prisoner in Chile, according to Martus, and this action is at attempt to force the junta to recognize the fact that he is still alive, along with a hope for his release.

—Third World Ballot Confusion—

After opening remarks from Student Senate Speaker Brian DeLima, the reading of the Senate election results took place. Controversy rose when the members of the Third World delegation expressed their upset with the procedures concerning their election.

According to spokesperson Lily Hu, only three per cent of the eligible Third World population was allowed to vote. She attributed this to the fact that they were not informed that, in order to vote, they must have pre-registered as Third World members, not using their own dorm allegience... Many members were not allowed to vote because they did not know of this rule.

A meeting between Third World members and the Election Committee on Monday afternoon proved fruitless, according to Hu.

However, late Monday night, the committee reversed their decision and decided that Third World members would be allowed to vote on Tuesday; the second day of voting. This failed to solve the problem, however, as the decision could not be transmitted fast enough by word of mouth, said Hu.

As it stands now, the Third World senate members that were elected will continue to serve, until a second election is held, read a motion passed by the Senate last night.

"I have never seen nor heard of a democratic government that changed its procedure in the middle of an election," said Hu.

Third World members and the student coordinating committee will meet today to discuss the situation and adopt a set of procedures that will please both parties.

Stuart J. Belkin, Commuter senate member, presented a petition that would keep the Campus Center Music Room in its present location.

There have been reports that there is a plan to put a bank in that space, which faces the Blue Wall, said Belkin.

The Senate elected four members to the Nominating Sub-Committee, which is the body that makes nominations and appointments to the various senate committees.

Elected were Carolyn Yee, Steven Goldberg, Peter Graham and Al Gruber. These four will nominate two more members to serve with them.

In a lighter moment of the long meeting, the election of Vice-President Nelson Rockerfeller to a Commuter senate post was disallowed, in the words of DeLima, "because he is not a student at the University."

The Pioneer Valley Juggling Association will hold their annual convention next weekend in the Campus Center complex.

The Association is a non-funded, Recognized Student Organization (RSO) and will ask only for a donation at the door.

The group gets together every Wednesday night, said Tomas H. Kramer, president of the Association.

Kramer said the convention would consist of a full day of juggling in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union.

They would then go to Northampton State Hospital's Arts and Crafts Foliage Festival on Sunday, October 10, to entertain.

Jugglers from all over New England were invited to attend and Kramer said that he expects about 100 people.

Kramer attributed the high interest in the community in juggling to a highly renewed interest in the performing arts within circuses.

DA to investigate charges against Health Services

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

Hampshire-Franklin County District Attorney John M. Callahan said charges of financial wrongdoing in the UMass Health Services will be investigated to determine whether criminal charges should be brought against employees of the health services.

However, Callahan was highly critical of the manner in which the press and other agencies and individuals in and out of the university were informed of the charges brought to him by two former members of the Student Health Advisory Board and one former member of the Faculty Senate Health Council.

After Ellen M. Gavin, Susan R. Woskie and Vincent J. O'Connor presented an employee of the district attorney's consumer protection division with statements written by health services employees alleging "illegal or improper conduct", they and their attorney, James H. Starr of the Legal Services Office, held a press conference outside the courtroom.

The conference was run by Graduate Student Senate President Michael R. Federow and a statement was released explaining in a very general manner what the contents of the statements presented to the district attorney's office included.

Callahan said, "The way that group conducted themselves yesterday, I don't give any credibility to them. It was detrimental to the rights of the individuals in question to hold a public press conference."

He also said their conduct was "outrageous and horrendous" and that he disagreed with the press for printing anything about the matter. The story was covered in the Boston Globe, The Morning Union from Springfield, The Hampshire Gazette, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, The Amherst Record and on channels 3, 40 and 22.

Syphers buries Shewchuk in Sylvan election landslide

Gail N. Syphers of Cashin dormitory was elected president of the Sylvan Area Government last night in a special runoff election. Syphers won by a considerable margin over opposing candidate William T. Shewchuk.

Syphers, who had been a write-in candidate for the presidency, claimed 250 votes, while Shewchuk received 95. Fewer voters participated in this election; less than 25 per cent of Sylvan residents turned out to vote.

According to Bruce E. Belcher, last year's treasurer for the Sylvan area, representatives to the government from Sylvan's three dormitories — Cashin, Brown and Collective bargaining vote due

and BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

For the second time in five years, faculty here and at the UMass-Boston campus will soon be voting for a collective bargaining unit with the administration.

Joan A. Quinlan of the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission said last week the commission will hand down its ruling on what faculty and staff will be included in a bargaining unit within a month, after which it will set a date for campus elections.

Faculty here will choose whether to engage a collective bargaining agent and if so; which of two national organizations, the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) or the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), will represent them.

Four years ago, AAUG and MSP staged a joint election to form a collective bargaining unit faculty here, losing by a 3-2 margin. For the past two years, AAUP and MSP have continued to compete for the right to represent faculty at both campuses.

AAUP has 80,000 members in 1,365 chapters, 35 of which have won bargaining rights.

The National Education Association (NEA), of which MSP is a local chapter, has 54,000 higher-education members in 354 locals, 149 of which are bargaining agents.

On this campus, AAUP is the older, more traditional organization while MSP has been called more activist.

According to Joseph S. Larson, president of the Amherst Chapter of AAUP, "faculty members have a definite choice between the two groups.

Recently Larson told the Collegian why faculty should vote AAUP.

"First, the difference in cost for collective bargaining, AAUP dues would be $89 per members opposed to $147 per member for MSP".

"Also," Larson said, "AAUP would locally control 56 per cent of the dues where 17 per cent would be controlled by MSP locally."

Larry S. Roberts, president of MSP said, however, that the reason for higher MSP dues was because MSP pays for the lobbying organization at the state house under the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA). MTA is a state affiliate of the NEA representing state secondary school teachers as well as faculty at the Boston campus.

Roberts also said the reason for only 17 per cent of dues remaining in the local fund were because fees were owed to the MTA.

One of the major factors in the election will be which agent will lobby best for the faculty.

Larson said AAUP can establish a lobbying agent for only UMass faculty on both campuses. Roberts argues, however, that the dues AAUP estimates it will collect will not cover such an agent.

Roberts added since AAUP is not recognized as a bargaining agent with the state legislature and NEA-MSP is.

MSP can lobby more effectively," said Roberts.

Larson contends that AAUP will only be representing university faculty.

"MSP will consistently be changing hats in front of the legislature between representing high school teachers, community college teachers, as well as university faculty".

McNamara — will be elected next Wednesday.

Belcher also said that the first meeting of Sylvan's newly elected officers and representatives will be held in two weeks.

In the breakdown of dorm tabulations, McNamara gave 100 votes to Syphers, 28 to Shewchuk; Cashin accumulated 100 votes for Syphers also, with 17 for Shewchuk; and Brown dormitory narrowly supported Syphers over Shewchuk with the votes of 50 to 48.

Syphers said she is hopeful of trying a variety of new ideas for the area, while still upholding traditional Sylvan activities. Although she says some of these ideas still need to be worked out, she would like to try anything that seems "feasible."

Among these ideas is a week "Breakfast in Bed Campaign." Syphers plans to ask floor counselors if they would consider staging the meals.

If they agree, breakfast would be served to residents free, or for a small fee to be donated to a "worthy cause," she said.

The new president also mentioned a "Sylvan Yard Sale," to be held in the spring. Syphers said, This would be a chance for people to sell off things they didn't want, and for others to pick up something."

Another idea was to use the Sylvan computer to match up potential roommates.

"I'm surprised they haven't done this before," Syphers said.

She also plans an International Dinner Week, to continue with the Big Bad Boogie night, and Sock Hop, and a "Sylvan Night" at Zax, a new nightclub in Northampton.

Syphers has spoken to the disc jockey there, and hopes for a night of reduced drinks at the nightclub for Sylvan residents.

"This could go off soon," she said.

Syphers said she hopes at some time to "put our energy to a constructive use."

She will be working towards these activities with the aid of newly elected Vice-President Mark Mackler and Treasurer John Jacobs.

SGA schedules proposed Northwest road discussion

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

Arguments about the University's proposed Northwest Road will be presented at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting next Wednesday, according to Student Government Association (SGA) co-President Jay A. Martus.

Gerald J. Grady, the University's communications coordinator, will present the University's arguments for construction of the road.

North Amherst resident, and UMass history professor, Richard H. Minear, will present the opposition's arguments.

Grady is the sponsor of a University proposal to have the state Department of Public Works construct a road just north of campus between Rte. 116 and North Pleasant Street.

Minear is sponsoring two town meeting articles critical of the University plans.

Town meeting members will decide the issue at their Oct. 18 meeting.

The meeting was arranged after both men expressed an interest in bringing their views before the students, said Martus.

The presentations will begin at 9 p.m. Each side will be given 15 minutes to explain its views after which there will be a 30-minute question period.

The Student Senate will probably take a stand that night or at the next week's meeting, said Martus.

Grady said he will explain to the students "why it is to the advantage of the University community to have town meeting endorse Option A."

Option A is the northwest section of the Northeast Bypass, a University and town proposed road that was defeated at town meeting last May.

Minear's articles against the road ask the town to oppose construction to the Northeast Bypass or any part thereof and to appoint a seven member committee to study designs of the Northeast Bypass proposals if approved by the October meeting.

He said he hopes the discussion includes the University's plans to reroute its bus routes. This was included with University plans to place vehicular restrictions on certain university roads.

These were listed in a report from Grady last week concerning plans to reduce North Pleasant Street traffic, a goal of the Northwest Road.

Another section of the bypass connecting North Pleasant Street to East Pleasant Street, Option B, will also be voted on at the October meeting.

Robert L. Kline, member of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors, is sponsoring a proposal to build the road.

Option B would pick up where Option A ends, continue behind the Sylvan dormitory area and end on East Pleasant Street.

UMass clinic offers special services for women patients

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

"We are creating a space for women to learn about themselves and their bodies in a positive way," said Penny Falconer, a nurse practitioner at the UMass Health Services (HHS) gynecological clinic.

The Contraception Clinic, now called the OB-GYN Clinic, (obstetrics-gynecology) is staffed by general practitioners who are "specially sensitive" to women's problems, said Falconer.

With this special interest "we no longer have doctors who might be judgemental working with women, which perhaps created negative experiences for women in the past," said Barry W. Averill, director of University Health Services.

Another interesting aspect of the clinic is its dependence on the nurse practitioner, a nurse, who in this case, has been trained by a physician in areas of pelvic exams, breast exams and contraception, said Falconer.

A survey of 100 women, taken two years ago by UHS indicated that women patients felt more comfortable with a nurse practitioner for routine exams.

At present there is only one women doctor on the clinic staff.

Falconer says she has "a very good feeling" concerning her work at the Health Center.

"I wouldn't be here if I didn't feel that this is a very good program" she said.

UHS' Women's Health Program has recently been centralized. Clinic Four is devoted totally to contraception and pregnancy care. "Our problem was one of needed uniformity in staffing and spacing," said Dr. Clapp, coordinator of Clinic Four.

"With the reorganization of Clinic Four, uniform staffing has been realized," said Clapp.

The first floor of the Health Services does not have the need for a women's assistant presence at all times, Clapp said.

In Clinic Four, a nurse practitioner is present during all pelvic exams. "We needed to get it understood that we have to have this additional staff," Clapp said.

At present there is no full time gynecologist; three part time gynecologists come into the clinic for a total of eight hours weekly.

When asked about this Dr. Clapp said, "Generally, doctors can handle 80-90 per cent of the problems which come up in the clinic. If a gynecologist is needed, as in a more complicated case, the patient is then referred to him."

Clapp says that students would be "paying extra without utilization of the special areas" if there were only gynecologists hired.

"Their salary is considerably higher than a M.D.'s and students would have to pay comparably," said Clapp.

The clinic is extremely busy — there is a three week wait for an annual check-up, said Clapp.

"The current problem stems from all women's problems being referred to the clinic," said Averill.

Women who do not have specific gynecological related needs are encouraged to use the other resources available at UHS, said Clapp.

Near will appear

By KRIS FURRER

Holly Near will appear tonight in the Fine Arts Center at 8:00 in a concert sponsored by the Commuter Collective and the Native American Solidarity Committee (NASC).

The Commuter Collective is budgeted to fund various projects such as this, said Linda Gates, a member of NASC.

"The NASC is a national organization which supports any struggle of sovereignity, self-determination, and independence," said Gates.

The aim of the NASC is to create community awareness through educational processes, said Gates.

"In much of her music Holly emphasizes the issues which the NASC deals with,' said Gates.

Holly has expressed support of the NASC's efforts regarding the Indian People's struggle for independence. The NASC will receive a share of the proceeds from the concert, said Gates.

"The Indian People are trying to be recognized as a sovereign nation," said Gates.

Holly's songs deal with her life and feelings, and with political issues. Her song 'Broken Promises' clearly depicts the plight of the Indian People, said Gates.

Langley accompanies Near on the keyboards.

There are two workshops being offered both which will deal with a variety of topics from cultural works to global politics, said Gates.

The first workshop will be held today at 1 p.m. at the Earthfoods Restaurant in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

The second workshop will be held from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m., at the Everywomen's Center in Goodell. Attendance is restricted to women.

Topics related to woman's issues will be discussed.

The concert will be preceded by a slide show entitled "The Question That You Ask" which deals with the issues of the NASC, said Gates.

ERA supporters to rally tonight at Amherst JHS

By ALEXANDRA CONANT
Collegian Staff

"Massachusetts State Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) — Who Needs It?" will be the topic of a rally tonight at 8:00 at Amherst Regional Junior High School.

Lucy Benson, former state secretary of Human Services, state Rep. James G. Collins and G. Roslyn Johnson of the Suffolk University Law School will be the featured speakers.

Amherst College professor Rose Olver will be the moderator.

"We're all sick of hearing about the Equal Rights Amendment, so let's get to work on it and get it passed", said Pepper Peterson, a county coordinator for the Committee to Ratify the Massachusetts State ERA.

After the rally there will be meetings to form task forces to coordinate ERA activities on the UMass campus.

"People are desperately needed to coordinate rallies, lectures, and to assist in fund-raising," said Peterson.

"We also need people to sell T-shirts and pass out information at the ERA table on the Campus Center concourse," said Peterson.

Task forces will be formed to coordinate speaking and canvassing, literature distribution, election day activities, and contacting the media.

"Our main focus is to perform a public service by providing accurate legal information as to the effect of the ERA on the law, not just to sway votes to the ERA," said Peterson.

Anyone who is unable to attend the meeting and would like to work on one of the task forces, should contact Ms. Peterson at 549-6545.

Dean Alfange to present faculty teaching awards

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery will give the keynote address at the annual convocations awards to be held tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium.

Dean Alfange Jr., acting Vice-Chancellor of Academic Affairs, will present six distinguished teaching awards at the ceremony.

Three faculty members and three graduate teaching assistants will receive the teaching awards, begun in 1962.

The awards are given to identify exceptional teaching, especially on the undergraduate level, according to a University spokesperson.

The recipients of the awards will receive a citation of merit and a $1000 cash award, according to the spokesperson.

A committee to select the winners distinguished teachers is made up of former award winners, UMass faculty, graduate and undergraduate students.

Nominations for the awards are received from both faculty and students.

Names of awards recipients are usually not disclosed before the ceremony, however they "usually know who they are", said the spokesperson.

Mass. Fair Share fighting for proposed flat electrical rate

By JOE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts Fair Share is hoping to generate more student participation in its fight to establish a flat electric rate in Massachusetts, said Michael Barnes, western Massachusetts Fair Share director.

Barnes said yesterday that the individual consumer is now subsidizing big business by paying higher electric bill rates.

To reform the present rate structure, Barnes said, Fair Share launched an initiative petition drive early this year to get the flat rate referendum on the ballot for the general election in November.

Barnes likened the present electric rate structure to a "Volkswagen that pays more per unit for gas because it uses less".

"Some corporations have been crying because they will have to pay more for their electricity, they will have to cutback on jobs to balance the loss," Barnes said.

"Because flat rates will end giveaways to the biggest users of electricity the special interests have started a giant scare campaign to defeat the November referendum", said Barnes.

He charged corporations with "producing pure propaganda" with their slick advertising about how industry will be driven from the state.

"Since when are they concerned about jobs," Barnes pointed out, citing the many companies that have packed up and left the country in pursuit of cheap labor.

Barnes explained that the projected rate increases for corporations could be almost completely offset "with a little more attention paid to conservation".

"Question Seven on the ballot is basically an issue of conservation," he said, "and whether we're moving to more energy intensive industry versus labor intensive industry."

According to recent experience, Barnes stated, when industry moves to more automation and energy consumption, there is a lesser need for labor.

As part of a state-wide bumper sticker blitz for flat rates, Fair Share will be distributing literature and bumper stickers at the Zayer-Stop & Shop mall on Rte. 9 Saturday between 12 and 2 p.m.

Barnes said he expects the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), which has endorsed flat rates, to link up with the effort Saturday.

He urged anyone in the UMass community who wants to win flat rates for the state to work with Fair Share and call the Fair Share office in Springfield at 781-4110 for more information about how to get involved.

Barnes said Fair Share is attempting to build an on-going organization of low and middle income people in the state.

The breeder budget

By BOB BICKFORD

Editor's Note: This is the second in a two part series on the government and energy policy. The first appeared in yesterday's Collegian.

And he said "Let there be Light." And there was Light. And the investment bankers saw that it was good.

One of the main points on the nuclear calling card is that it is necessary as a form of energy until more desirable sources, such as solar heat, can be developed and become economically feasible. Government policy is working against this concept totally.

The Energy Research and Development Agency (ERDA) dictates the direction national energy policy will take. This fiscal year, ERDA will spend 1.66 billion dollars on energy research. Roughly one third of its budget, 490 million dollars, is marked for further development of a Liquid Metal Fast Breeder Reactor (LMFBR).

This is more than the combined allocations for all other forms of energy research. 311 million is marked for fossil fuel development, 57 million for solar energy development, 28 million for geothermal research, 23 million for advanced energy research, and 32 million or energy conservation studies. With this figures in mind ...

Consider what the LMFBR is, its total cost, and its significance. The significance of the LMFBR is that it produces large amounts of plutonium as a by-product. This is important because uranium, the substance that plutonium is derived from, is an expensive, imported, depletable substance. Plutonium is needed to keep the juice flowing in nuclear power plants for years to come.

There is only one LMFBR being built in the U.S. It is a demonstrator plant in that its success is meant to encourage private business to invest in them.

Typically, its cost is higher than the original estimates. Congress was told in 1973 that the CRBR would cost 700 million dollars to build. The most recent estimate is 1.7 billion dollars. A billion dollar cost over run. The plant cost, combined with the cost of research and development phases of the project will total 10 billion dollars. That is a sizeable economic resource, to develop questionably desirable energy source (money that could be used to develop more desirable sources of energy).

In a statement published in the Christian Science Monitor, April 30, 1975, the Natural Resource Defense Council, a public interest law corporation, urged that "ERDA postpone for a decade or so any push to commercialize the LMFBR, cancel the Clinch River demonstration plant, and accelerate the development of attractive non-fission alternatives ... Much can be learned during the coming decade — most likely we will learn that the breeder can be bypassed — and the delay would impose no penalty on the nation.

They go on to state that economic analysis of the CRBR show that contrary to the former AEC's expectations, the plant will not be competitive commercially until at least the year 2010. ERDA has the plant scheduled to go on line in 1990, two decades before it will be economically feasible. In light of this the government realizes that it may have to subsidize operators of breeder reactors, because, as the General Accounting Office put it (April 28, 1975), "the electricity will be so expensive that it will not be competitive with other sources of energy."

ERDA is now saying that the breeder will be necessary to produce 50 per cent of the nation's electricity by the year 2020. However, conservative estimates by the former AEC and the National Science Foundation project that the use of geothermal, fusion, solar and other energy resources, including conservation could account for more than 80 per cent of the electrical needs by the year 2020.

Despite all this the 490 million dollars was approved, which has the effect of limiting subsidies for alternate energy development. The breeder reactor is only necessary in the light that its development guarantees other forms of energy will be neglected, and will not be able to fill the energy void.

The federal government is steering the nation's energy policy. The utilities will continue their investment in the economically safe field of nuclear power. Fission oriented research and development is being emphasized at the expense of alternate sources.

What all this suggests is that unless government policy, despite all the moral implications of the issue, changes its course, nuclear power is here to stay. It has their approval, and it is an attractive economic investment for all concerned.

Health Services questions charges

To the Editor:

The Executive Committee of University Health Services would like to share with the University community the following points of information with reference to the allegations of four self-appointed individuals as reported in the Collegian, Wednesday, September 29, 1976.

First, specific allegations have not been made known to Health Services Executive staff, clearly making a response impossible. Also, neither the Director, nor any Division Director, nor the Director of Finance and Systems, nor any Business Office staff member was asked about any past or present processes. We must question the strategies and motivation of these individuals when vague accusations have been released to the press without first discussing them with anyone in the University administration.

We are proud to be part of the development of a quality, comprehensive health program which has received a high level of student support, as well as national recognition. We are committed to meeting our administrative and programmatic responsibilities with integrity and open communication and are saddened by the attempts to discredit these efforts.

As always, we welcome any student or staff member who wishes to discuss with us any concerns they may have regarding the Health Services.

UHS Executive Committee

In loco parentis

To the Editor:

I have watched the chain of events which have led up to the placement of screens on some towers in Southwest with much curiosity. Even though I no longer live on campus, this phenomenon interests me as I was thrown out of there [not out the window] three years ago for performing the same nasty deed of pitching things out of the window.

Many questions arise as I consider the implications of these recent events. It seems ironical to me that students are paying to protect themselves from each other. The cost of screens is coming out of your dorm fees.

Southwest has the second densest population per square mile in the country. Consider the plight of the lemmings, who instinctively perform suicide every few years. Science shows that species, when overburdened by overpopulation, undergo physiological and psychological changes, and unconsciously undergo changes that lead to destruction.

As I think about it now, Southwest functions in much the same way. It is simply psychologically unhealthy for so many people to live in such a small space. Yet we have virtually no choice. We, are forced to live on campus.

Why are students forced to pay for protection from incidents which are environmental problems, created and perpetuated by persons unknown? Someone has handed us the responsibility to pay for mistakes of which we are not responsible.

Now it appears that Southwest residents will be passing the buck, now down the line, but up.

The myth of egalitarianism

By CLIFF SKIBINSKY

Speakin' of interesting people...just the other evening I went to a party at one of the more prestigious educational institutions in the area, where I briefly made the acquaintance of a gentleman from one of the other finer area schools.

Now when I say gentleman, that's exactly what I mean. This guy was cool. He was Ivy League personified. He exuded wealth, position, education. Like, I mean, you know, I was overwhelmed. I felt positively Neanderthal beside him.

In the short one-sided conversation (he did all the talking) I learned he was from Texas, although he had no accent or had managed refine it to a remarkable extent, that he was a senior, and that his parents had gone to private acadamies. But what fascinated me was his manner. I was filled with envy at the way he circulated, conversing his way easily through the crowded rooms, as though he were composed of a universal catalyst which reacted well in every situation. His fluidity was unmatched by any other person I had previously observed; always charming, always impeccable. I had never seen anything like it. I reflected that his success with women must be nothing short of spectacular. (A word of thanks to my companion must be interjected here. She managed to reject his not inconsiderable advances, that evening, and thereby salvaged the remainder of my ego.)

Now I know, or at least everybody tells me, that people like this are usually screwed-up underneath the veneer, and that that's all these people are — slick packaging. I'm also told that people like me, who are particularly adroit in social situations, who get tongue-tied, and are masters of the faux pas, are actually more together than the privaleged elite. (Although I am inclined to suspect that these are clever myths perpetrated by the gentry to maintain the complacence of the lower classes.) I also realize that I'm making assumptions based solely on observation, most of which are probably invalid.

But the experience set me thinking about the myth of egalitarianism. Esquire once did a piece in which they took Bowery bums off the street and dressed them in the finest designer clothes. They were indistiguishable from their executive counterparts. But the resemblance ends there.

The mere possession of money, education, and-or status affects the whole nature of the individual, although there is much more than that to any individual. We are inseparable from our environments, past or present. I would be a far different person had I been born into Standard Oil, for example.

I am not one to condemn the existence of social strata; money can be made and mannerisms can be learned. One of the advantages of living in this country is relative ease of social mobility for those who are ambitious. Yet it is rather disconcerting to meet such fabulous creatures as the above mentioned when I realize that this is the type of person with whom I must compete in a world where externalities count for so much. I hope to God I'm up to it.

Susan Saxe, Susan Saxe

The currently ongoing trial of Susan Saxe has occasioned a number of news stories and commentary. At least most of the commentary I have read has painted a picture of a lesbian amazon, a revolutionary, who is being persecuted by a male-dominated establishment bent on insuring a kangaroo trial.

Susan Saxe, Susan Saxe... it sounds like a TV show. What will the nasty establishment do to this unfortunate victim next? Goodness, they could even put her in jail!

She is on trial for bank robbery and murder. I insist that this is not political activism, but crime, like stealing a car, or holding up a grocery store. I'm tired of self-proclaimed cells committing crimes in the name of some broad, ethereal goal. She either did what she is accused of, or she didn't, and the government is receiving unfair criticism for trying to demonstrate she did in a fair trial. And I have no doubt she will receive a fair trial; the massive attention given the case will assure that, especially since the government's success record in such cases is as poor as it is. By the way, if it weren't for the fact that Miss Saxe had been on the FBI's 10 most wanted list for so long, it is doubtful her trial would enjoy its present motoriety.

Believe me, she's no amazon. The original amazons of mythology used to amputate their right breasts so as to minimize interference with their ability to operate a bow and arrow. Susan Saxe has spent the last half a decade on the lam. Some amazon.

The really easy matter to refute is dissatisfaction over her being charged with robbery and murder, despite the fact someone else pulled the trigger. Her defenders cite this as further evidence the system is persecuting her. Actually, it is nothing more than traditional jurisprudence.

Back in the days when England still had capital punishment, a pair of youths, aged 17 and 18 years, robbed a bank. In the process, the 17 year old shot and killed someone. After their trials, the 18 year old was sentenced to hanging, and the 17 year old, legally a minor, was treated accordingly.

Why was the 18 year old hanged for something his partner did? The reason is because when one is part of a group committing a crime, his participation implies responsibility and culpability not only for his actions, but also for the entire group. This is called "social responsibility", and it also prevents the guilty from escaping by blaming each other.

No one says Susan Saxe personally killed anyone. But if she did participate in the stick-up, she might just as well have, and she ought to be treated accordingly. And if that seems discriminatory, well we live in the day of the ERA, and if you want equal rights, then you're going to have to accept equal responsibility.

If anything, feminists should be proud that Susan Saxe is being tried as accessory to murder. Given the same circumstances, it's nothing that wouldn't happen to a man.

Driven to the polls

By KEVIN KNOBLOCH

I registered to vote today. This may not excite you to any degree, but I'm wallowing around in self congratulations. You see, it has been twenty-one months since my eighteenth birthday, that great day when I "tossed my cookies" outside my first nightclub.

Having little motivation to seek out the town clerk in my hometown, and lazily avoiding the Amherst town hall, I chanced upon a table on the Campus Center concourse last week that gleefully signed me up to vote in the November Presidential and local elections. What I am afraid of now is that if it took twenty-one months to accomplish this minute feat, what is it going to take to get me out on November 2? This remains to be seen.

For years my father defeated me in political discussion after political discussion, always maintaining that if one did not vote in the local and national elections, one hardly had anything to complain about. Dad's argument is basically sound, however one may not believe voting to be the only medium for change available. Nonetheless, it is probably this thought that will drive me to the polls come November.

Even though I may only be a lowly amateur, I have come to view voting as a healthy practice. My sympathy is with those who are disillusioned with the idea of bureaucratic change, because I too find it difficult to swallow, but I also feel there is a need to support those who wish to use bureaucracy as a vehicle of liberal change.

Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford may only enhance voter apathy this fall, so for a minute pretend they do not exist. Even if you have no interest in the Presidential election, there are several local races and no fewer than nine urgent issues appearing on the ballot for voter approval or disapproval.

Questions one, two, and three on the ballot are proposed amendments to the Massachusetts constitution. The first is the well publicized Equal Rights Amendment which says that "equality under the law may not be denied or abridged on the basis of sex, race, color, creed or national origin."

Question two proposes a graduated income tax rate to substitute for the present flat or uniform personal income tax. The last amendment allows absentee voting for religious reasons.

Questions four through seven are laws proposed by "initiative petition," or through a group of citizens armed with the legal number of signatures. These deal with the development of a Massachusetts Power Authority, the banning of private handguns, controls on bottles and cans, and uniform electric rates.

Finally, eight and nine are non-binding referendum questions. The voters will decide whether to build an oil refinery and deep water port in Massachusetts, and whether to allow retail stores (including liquor stores) to open their doors on Sundays.

Of what effect the results of these ballots will have when they are tallied, I am unsure. Bureaucratic change is often slow, deceiving, and partial to special interests, but at least the views of the small voting percentage will be known. Voting may turn out to be a frustrating experience, but I am willing to try any vehicle that promises change, even if it goes nowhere.

Free lunch?

The nebulous term for the week is "freedom". I've been wondering about the word and its applications and whether it is a state of experience or just a term of relativity.

When I think of freedom, I head straight for the antonyms to see what I'm not and if there's enough of them to counterbalance then I figure I'm pretty free. Example: nope, no ball and chain attached to the ankle — Janis Joplin thought love was like a ball and chain, but I don't, I don't have any bars across my windows, and there's no one standing over my shoulder saying that I can't do what I'm doing.

By Oxford English Dictionary definitions I'm experiencing freedom for meanings 1-4; then comes No. 5:

> 5. The quality of being free from the control of fate or necessity; the power of self-determination attributed to the will.

The fatalist would say that according to that definition, an experience of "freedom" is necessarily impossible because fate is inescapable, no matter how we fool ourselves with what we call "will".

Sometimes it's fun to be a "fatalist". It paves a smooth path to contentedness. There can be no blame where there is "fate". Nixon ought to be a fatalist. After a while though, I'd rather think of myself as the queen than a pawn. No, on second thought, that still sounds like someone or something else is controlling my movements. How about: "I'd rather be a hammer than a nail".

Piet Hein wrote:

Freedom means you're free to do just whatever pleases you;
-if, of course
that is to say, what you please
is what you may.

I guess I agree with that, (but I usually do agree with Piet).

I'm tempted to say that "freedom is just another word until I think of the importance that it has when what it signifies is missing. Then the word can take on a power that can move mountains. Very few words have that power. Just think how many things are done in the name of "freedom".

It seems to me that within the systems of humanity there can never be an ultimate experience of freedom because we are necessarily shackled to our bodies and our humaness; but there will always be a variety of freedoms worth striving for.

So, I guess the reason that "freedom" is so nebulous is because it's such a broad term and can be used in such a variety of contexts. It's like the word "cold": a 60 degree day in July would be thought of as cold, but 60 degrees in January is pretty warm. Likewise, a person might be a servant or even in jail and still feel quite free because no one can take away the freedom of the mind, (albeit drugs or hypnotism).

Of all the contrivances of "freedoms", the one that I have the most respect for is the freedom to think of ourselves in the way we please:

a good many failures are happy because they don't realize it many a coackroach believes himself as beautiful as a butterfly have a heart oh have a heart and let them dream on

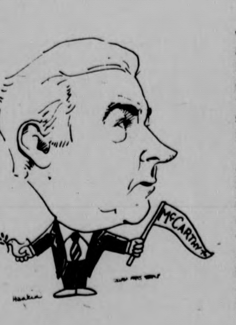
McCarthy: Time to hang it up

By GEORGE SOMMERS

"Clean Gene" McCarthy is a bright, witty, personable man, but he doesn't know when to hang it up. The ex-senator's first stab at presidential politics was also his most successful one. In 1968, Gene McCarthy did well enough in the first-in-the-nation New Hampshire primary to scare Lyndon Johnson into retirement. He made impressive showings in several subsequent primaries, but eventually fizzled out, leaving the nomination to that old Democratic warhorse, Hubert Humphrey.

Not easily discouraged, McCarthy decided to throw his hat in the ring again in 1972. Most of his once-loyal following, however, forgot him and defected to the ranks of George McGovern. Resultantly, McCarthy generally finished somewhere between Vance Hartke and Wilbur Mills in the '72 primaries.

Once again, in 1976, McCarthy is running for the presidency — this time on an independent, third party ticket. His stated purpose is to "shake up the two party system," both Republicans and Democrats. So much for gratitude for the party which put McCarthy in the national spotlight.



McCarthy's chances of actually winning the presidency this time around are roughly the same as Lester Maddox's. Still, he could garner about four or five per cent of the vote in the northern industrial states — enough to seriously effect the outcome in a tight race.

Polls indicate that Georgia governor Jimmy Carter leads Republican candidate Gerald Ford in New York state by a bare four percentage points. McCarthy could very well be a spoiler in this state and others. He is no more a serious candidate for the presidency than the nominee of, say, the National Pickle Party.

Yet in spite of all this, there will be a number of blind ideologues who persist in supporting McCarthy's hopeless quest. They do so in the name of liberalism. Ironically, their self-proclaimed liberalism could very well insure victory for Gerald Ford. Jimmy Carter knows from George McGovern's experience that he must stick to the center if he has any hope of winning. Nevertheless, he is a true Democrat, and America desperately needs some sound Democratic leadership.

Students receive new Banking alternatives

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Student Federal Credit Union (SFCU), located in the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union, is an "alternative to banking for UMass students," according to Lee Crockett, SFCU treasurer.

"It is a non-profit bank," said Lee Crockett, treasurer of the SFCU.

The SFCU is chartered and supervised by the National Credit Union Association (NCUA).

"The NCUA was interested in having us as a pilot program," said Peter Birnbaum, president of the SFCU.

Birnbaum and a group of students initiated the idea of the SFCU about four years ago. They have received financial assistance from the Alumni Association, the Student Government, and the area governments.

The SFCU has been in operation since April, 1975. Its membership is limited to UMass students.

A student must open an account with minimum deposit of $5.00 to qualify as a member.

"There are about 1600 members and this number is increasing fast," said Crockett.

The SFCU is one of two student credit unions in the country, said Crockett.

It's student run with no faculty supervision. The members are 'owners' who democratically control it, said Crockett.

"All depositors have an indirect hand in management," said Crockett.

The members elect a board of directors for the organization, said Linda A. Cote, secretary to the SFCU board of directors.

The SFCU offers many benefits to its members. It pays five and one half per cent quarterly dividends on savings accounts.

It also offers loans to eligible members at low interest rates, said Crockett.

Travelers' checks, food stamps, automatic payroll savings, and bank check service are some of the other services offered by the SFCU.

Banking hours are Monday thru Friday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., except during University vacations and holidays.

UMass women to sponsor arts and crafts exhibition

By JANICE LEARY
Collegian Staff

Creations Unlimited, a benefit arts and crafts show and sale, will be held at the Herter Hall Gallery in Herter Hall from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. this Saturday.

The event, sponsored by University Women, will benefit various service projects and is a free exhibit open to the public.

The 40 artists and crafts people in the show were selected by a panel of UMass Art Department faculty members and members of the University Women Committee. They include UMass professors, faculty wives, graduate students, and area artists and crafts people.

Marian Stackpole, chairperson of the nine-member Committee and Vice President of University Women, said, "Almost everyone has displayed their work elsewhere, including Amherst, Springfield, and New York."

Art and craft forms represented will be weaving, macrame, quilting, painting, prints, pottery, toys, photography, blacksmithing, wood carving, jewelry, egg decorating, and root sculpture.

All work will be on sale, "from about two dollars to the hundred dollar range," according to Stackpole.

Frank Cadwell, director of the Herter Art Gallery, and his students have also helped coordinate the show. Stackpole said the Committee hopes it will become an annual event.

University Women is a "combination social and service-oriented organization" open to faculty women and wives, heads of residences, and others, according to Stackpole.

The University Women give scholarships yearly.

"This year," said Stackpole, "two scholarships were given to graduating seniors from Amherst High School."

The group sponsors a general store at Belchertown State School for the retarded and runs a blood drive twice a year at UMass.

They also contribute to the Round-the-World Wive's Program sponsored by the Town Committee for International Students. This program introduces foreign students, especially their wives, to the community and American culture.

For more information about the show or University Women, contact Marian Stackpole at 549-4579.

★ OB/GYN

The OB-GYN clinic, located on the second floor of the infirmary sees about 200 women a week for contraception, abnormal bleeding and pregnancy, said Clapp.

Seven doctors are employed specifically for clinic purposes working various amounts of hours weekly. In addition two nurse practitioners work 32 hours a week each, said Clapp.

Counselors are available on all levels, and a Women's Health Counselor works with the clinic.

There has been a rise in the number of women who are coming in for annual exams. This increase has created long waits for women who want exams, said Averill.

Averill says he is adjusting to the problem by hiring another nurse practitioner "as soon as we find one."

In addition another gynecologist will be added to the staff to bring the number of weekly hours up to 12, he added.

The number of women coming in for their first contraception is dropping, said Averill. Averill stated that a reason for this could be that women are becoming sexually active at an earlier age and acquiring contraception before college.

Pregnancy is a problem for one or two per cent of the campus and the number of abortions are rising," said Averill.

Averill attributed the rise to the media coverage about the hazards of the pill and the IUD.

More women are using the diaphragm which when used sporadically or incorrectly leads to an increased risk of pregnancy.

"We provide counseling when this happens," said Averill.

Averill noted that most women chose to terminate the pregnancy, but whatever the decision, the infirmary followed up the case with medical help, referral and counseling.

When a woman comes for her first contraception she is asked to attend a Health Education program, said Barbara Estrabrook, an educator in the program.

The goal is "to educate people, to help them make decisions about themselves," she said.

In addition, the Health Education program features films dealing with women's current health problems. Pamphlets on "vaginal ecology" and general gynecology care are available, said Estrabrook.

The people who work in the clinic are proud of the unusual set-up that is offered at UMass, said Falconer.

"Many women have had negative experiences with doctors in the past," said Falconer. She expressed confidence in Dr. Clapp, "... he bends over backwards," she said.

Surveys run by the clinic show an overwhelming approval of the program, said Estrabrook.

"It's warming to hear such positive feedback," Dr. Clapp said.

Harrises indicted

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Symbionese Liberation Army members William and Emily Harris were indicted yesterday for the kidnaping of Patricia Hearst, who spent a year and a half in hiding with them.

A grand jury in Oakland voted the indictments hours after Miss Hearst's attorneys filed a motion for a new trial in her bank robbery conviction, charging that the government withheld evidence that would have helped her defense.

The Harrises already had been charged with the kidnaping, but the indictments speed up the judicial process and permit prosecutors to proceed directly to trial without preliminary hearings.

The grand jury indictment, returned after the panel spent 2½ days hearing testimony from 51 witnesses including Miss Hearst, charged the Harrises with kidnaping the newspaper heiress from her Berkeley apartment on Feb. 4, 1974; kidnaping Peter Benenson, whose car was used in the Hearst kidnaping; and assault on Miss Hearst's then-fiance, Steven Weed, who was severely beaten.

Going backward?

LINCOLN, Neb. [AP] — In the days of teacher unions, media centers and early childhood development specialists, the one-room school survives here in a way that teaches teachers as well as students.

The 21 kids in grades one through eight at the "Rocky Road Ranch" school don't gaze out the window at Nebraska farmfields if they daydream. The school is on the Union College campus, and outside are students rushing to class and the sounds of nearby traffic.

College student-teachers pretend that they are out on the plains in one of the state's estimated 800 one-room schoolhouses or in one of the 1,000 Adventist elementary schools in this country and Canada, where lower grades are usually lumped together under one teacher.

WASHINGTON: Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., faces possible surgery for removal of tumors, which could be cancerous, from his bladder, his office announced yesterday. (UPI)

Collegiates lose

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Legislation granting up to $250 in tax credits for college tuition died quietly in the House yesterday.

The bill was killed when Rep. Fortney Stark, D-Calif., objected to a request by House Ways and Means chairman Al Ullman that the House go to conference with the Senate on the minor tax bill to which the tuition credit had been attached by the Senate.

According to House sources, the move was intended to kill the bill without actually bringing the popular measure to a House vote. In an election year, it would have been difficult to vote against such a measure.

However, House tax writers decided that the bill was far too costly to the hard-pressed federal budget — $1.1 billion a year when fully effective — and the Ullman-Stark move effectively killed the bill without controversy.

The action was taken quickly and quietly on a bill giving "aid to Smith College," and it was doubtful that many House members knew what had happened.

The tuition credit had been included in the Senate version of a major tax revision bill, but was dropped in a conference committee. The Senate then revived it, attaching it to the minor Smith College bill.

The legislation would have allowed parents or students to subtract directly from their tax bills a portion of tuition, books and fees for college or vocational schools.

In the first year, 1978, the credit would have been the first $100 of such expenses. This would have increased to $150 in 1979, $200 in 1980 and $250 in 1981 and later years.

Many members of the House Ways and Means Committee said they liked the general idea, but did not think the Treasury could stand the cash drain, ranging from $467 million the first year to $1.1 billion in 1981.

Pittsfield blast misses students

PITTSFIELD [AP] — A propane gas tank exploded at Pittsfield High School yesterday injuring four persons but sparing another 1,500 because they were away on their lunch break, officials said.

School officials cancelled today's classes so the building could be inspected for structural damage.

Ralph J. Gionet, director of occupational education, sustained head injuries when struck by falling plaster. He was reported in stable condition at Berkshire Medical Center.

A teacher and 11 students in a room next to the one where Gionet was injured were not hurt. Most classrooms near the explosion scene were vacant.

Two construction workers, believed to have been carrying the propane tank, and a painter, none of whom were identified immediately, received what were described as minor injuries.

An interior wall cracked, suspended ceiling panels in two corridors collapsed and numerous doors and windows were blown out by noontime explosion, firemen said.

Safety officials searched for possible gas pockets and less visible structural damage.

The propane tank fell down a stairway and exploded after the neck of the tank broke off, investigators said.

Workers were completing an $8.7 million remodeling of the school.

Saxe pointed at for bank robbery

BOSTON [AP] — Robert Valeri, a participant in the 1970 State Street Bank Robbery in which a police officer was killed, says Susan Saxe was with him when he and Stanley Bond held up the bank.

A key prosecution witness, Valeri also testified yesterday that Ms. Saxe helped plan the robbery and cased the bank moments earlier to make sure the vault was open.

He added that one of the guns he carried was purchased by Ms. Saxe, who prefers that designation, in Portland, Ore.

Valeri, his shoulder length hair tied down with a red Indian-style headband, was the first witness positively to place Ms. Saxe at the scene of the robbery.

Ms. Saxe, 27, of Albany, N.Y., is charged with armed robbery and murder in connection with the holdup in the Brighton section. Patrolman Walter E. Schroeder was shot to death in it. The prosecution does not contend that Ms. Saxe pulled the trigger of the gun that killed him.

Ms. Saxe spent 4½ years on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted list prior to her capture in Philadelphia March 27, 1975.

Valeri has already been sentenced to 10 to 15 years in prison after pleading guilty to robbery and manslaughter in the case. He has also testified against William "Lefty" Gilday who was convicted of the Schroeder slaying.

Hancock 'shines' for late opening

BOSTON [AP] — The 60-story John Hancock Tower, once declared a fire hazard because so much plywood covered its broken windows, finally opened yesterday five years behind schedule and $83 million over budget.

The now-gleaming glass-walled spire has been a corporate embarrassment to the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. for many of the years since groundbreaking in August, 1968.

The most prominent problem was the 13½ acres of glass that covered the building from top to bottom. When high winds roared, the glass shattered and fell to the street.

Workmen covered the holes with wooden patches, and the tower became of the butt of many jokes. Some people called it the world's tallest plywood building.

At the official opening ceremony, Hancock Chairman Gerhard D. Bleicken noted that corporate executives cringed at the humor.

Staff picketing at state college

FITCHBURG [AP] — Fitchburgh State College faculty members set up an informational picket line yesterday protesting what they called the "sorry performance" of the administration in new contract negotiations.

Allan Goldman, president of the 140-member Fitchburg State College Education Association, said the old contract was not extended after it expired June 30. He said any new contract would have to have a salary increase.

Goldman said any raise for faculty members would have to have special funds since the teachers were not included in an automatic step raise program covering other state employes.

The demonstration picketing took place just before and during budget hearings being conducted by state Secretary of Educational Affairs Paul Parks. The hearings involve budget matters at Fitchburg State, Framingham State, Worcester State and the University of Massachusetts.

Parks said during the hearing that he was confident that within the next month "we will come up with a package for state colleges. I don't think you're as far away from a solution as you think."

Palestinian troops thrown back

BHAMDOUN, Lebanon [AP] — A fierce Syrian tank and artillery assault yesterday forced Palestinian guerrillas to start withdrawing from mountain positions above Beirut.

The retreat followed appeals from Palestinian leader Yasir Arafat to Arab kings and presidents to intervene immediately "to stop the slaughter of my people."

Egypt called for an Arab summit meeting to deal with the situation.

Informed sources said Palestinian leaders ordered the pull-back from the salient north of the Beirut-Damascus highway on the second day of the Syrian offensive because the guerrillas were facing an overwhelming Syrian force and receiving little support from their Lebanese leftist allies.

Many of the Lebanese irregular militiamen fled in the face of artillery and rocket fire and the steady armored advance by the Syrians, the sources said.

Palestinian communiques at first denied any setbacks. But later in the day they took on a note of despair stressing that the leftist forces were vastly outgunned and outnumbered on the mountain front.

Backed by right-wing Christian artillery, the Syrians struck at dawn, moving into the villages of Kfar Selouan, Tarchich and Hazerta just below the 7,000-foot Jabal el-Knisse ridge. Witnesses said the major resort town of Hammana and a string of adjacent villages fell.

The western slopes of the Lebanon Range were ablaze with dozens of fires in the thick pinewoods, small villages and luxury resorts.

Informed sources said the Syrian push would stop short of the two main resorts of Bhamdoun and Aley, astride the main Beirut-Damascus highway 12 miles east of Beirut.

This will mean that the east-west, cross-mountain highway would become the southern border of the 800-square-mile Christian enclave north of Beirut.

In Cairo, the Egyptian government called for a limited Arab summit within 48 hours to deal with the situation in Lebanon.

Angola seized by 'chaos' as 500 tribesmen are killed

WINDHOEK, South West Africa [UPI] — Troops who have not received supplies or pay in three months looted villages in Angola and killed at least 500 black tribesmen this week, refugees said yesterday.

Witnesses said the rampage by Angolan government troops, Cuban soldiers and guerrillas from South West Africa has thrown the southern portion of the Marxist-ruled country into "total chaos."

Officials of South West Africa's Owambo tribal homeland, which adjoins the Angola border, quoted refugees as saying there were severe water and food shortages and all shops, schools, churches and several entire villages have been destroyed.

Pastor Kornelius Ndjoba, chief minister for the tribal homeland, said Tuesday about 1,000 blacks have fled "an apparent military action against civilians," and thousands more were expected later this week.

Soldiers of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, which won control of the former Portuguese colony seven months ago in a civil war, have received no money or food for the past three months, said Gabriel Matoewi, an Angolan headman or tribal subchief. They seized all cattle belonging to black tribesmen and shot whatever animals they could not herd away, he said.

Refugee Paulus Haihambo said the 500 persons killed included more than 120 members of the Uukwanyama tribe.

Guerrilla troops of the militant South West African Peoples Organization reportedly abducted the tribesmen and held them in a People's Organization camp at Esiitu, about 25 miles from the border with this country. The victims were forced to take part in raids on a number of villages, then executed by the guerrillas, Haihambo said.

South African security forces in the border area took charge of 400 refugees, including 262 children and 113 women, who arrived in Owambo Tuesday, officials said.

The refugees said the situation in Southern Angola was complicated by the activities of rebel troops of the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola.

Antigovernment guerrillas recently attacked and killed a large platoon of Popular Movement soldiers near Oshikango, the main border post on the Angola-South West Africa frontier, but the refugees had no further details.

Fellowships for 4 UMass Seniors

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst has been invited to nominate four seniors and one recent graduate in this year's competition for approximately 65 Danforth Fellowships.

The fellowships are designed for persons who have serious interest in careers of teaching and administration in colleges and universities, and who plan to study for a Ph.D., or other appropriate terminal degree, in any field of study common to the undergraduate liberal arts curriculum in the United States.

During the past nine years, 16 UMass Students have received some form of recognition in this competition, and during the past six years, four students have won fellowships.

Since the Danforth Foundation itself does not accept direct applications for Fellowships, persons must be nominated by liaison officers of the undergraduate institutions.

The local deadline for applying is Friday, Oct. 15. Inquiries should be directed to the local campus representative, Associate Dean James Shaw, 210 South College, 545-2627.

All applicants must take the Graduate Record Examination. Nov. 10 is the last date on which the Educational Testing Service will accept applications for the December 11 examination.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Health Services to hold reducing clinic

The University Health Services will be offering another weight reduction workshop this semester. Students who are 15 pounds or more above their optimal weight are welcome to participate.

It is a 10 week program that will include individualized diet instruction, an exercise program and methods of modifying these behaviors that are the cause of problematic eating habits. The format will include group discussions and several guest speakers.

The first session will be held at the Health Center on October 4 from 12:15 to 1:45 p.m. in room 302.

Fair to be held Sat. on Amherst Common

The Common School Children's Fair will be held Saturday, Oct. 2, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the Amherst Town Common.

Games booths, prizes, pony rides and puppet shows are among the attractions.

Proceeds from the fair will be contributed to the Common School Scholarship fund.

Rain date for the fair is the following Saturday.

Smoking info table on C.C. concourse

The Division of Health Education of the University Health Services and the Coalition for Environmental Quality will co-sponsor a smoking information table in the Campus Center Concourse today, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

This information table is part of an effort to increase knowledge and awareness of the effects of cigarette smoking for smokers and non-smokers alike.

Information on the health effects of smoking will be available, and a short film will be shown. Materials on non-smokers' rights will also be provided.

How to quit smoking is also a matter of great concern to many people. Information and materials which may be of help to people trying to quit will be available for those interested.

Socialist candidate to lecture tonight

The Socialist Workers Candidate for the Massachusetts U.S. Senate seat will speak Thursday at 8 p.m. in Campus Center Room 101.

Carol Henderson Evans, a 30-year-old secretary from Boston, will speak on "The Real Issues in 1976."

The talk is sponsored by the UMass Young Socialist Alliance.

Gay Alliance tohold disco tomorrow

The People's Gay Alliance of UMass will hold a disco tomorrow night from 10:00 to 2:00 at Farley Lodge.

Free beer and punch will be served.

A donation of $1 is requested.

Springfield YMCA offers swim lessons

The Metropolitan Springfield YMCA will be offering structured swimming lessons for adults beginning Oct. 20.

The swimming program is for men and women who are interested in learning basic swimming strokes and personal lifesaving skills. The program is scheduled to run for ten consecutive weeks, one hour every Wednesday evening from 8:30 to 9:30 p.m. at the YMCA pool.

Non-members as well as members are invited to participate.

The course will be conducted by Peter Hoontis, Assistant Director of Health, Physical and Recreation Services, certfied as a YMCA Swimming Instructor Specialist.

Rent Control to be discussed tonight

Proposed alternatives to Rent Control will be the topic of a meeting to be held in the Town Room of Amherst Town Hall tonight at 7:30 by the town Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee (LTRC).

The committee has placed three articles on the warrant for the Town Meeting which will begin Oct. 18.

The first of these articles would establish a Fair Rent Commission with a staff person and certain powers to respond to complaints regarding rent levels as well as powers to evaluate justifications for rental increases over particular levels.

The second of the articles would require the expansion of the present committee to include hearing complaints regarding rent levels.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Thursday, September 30 — Born today, you are at times inclined to be obsessed with the idea of money. If a woman, you will periodically rebudget household expenses, attempting to hold the line here at the same time that you afford an extravagance there. If a man, you will just as periodically tighten up the pursestrings and insist that every family member do his part to keep costs down. There may be friction in the household as a result of efforts to remain on a sound footing economically — but within your own mind, you will, whether man or woman, be happy with your own stand against spending, for in such stands you find your sense of security.

You enjoy a harmonious atmosphere. Even so, you are fully capable of productive labor during chaotic times. You prefer non-quarrelsome companions -- but you are able to function in the presence of even the bitterest argument, so long as you yourself are not personally involved. You are able to create around you an air of calm that has nothing whatsoever to do with your actual surroundings; more, you are able to take into that magically peaceful circle any who chose to come, so long as they are willing to remain cool and collected as they work.

Although you at times indulge in considerable introspective soul-searching, you are for the most part an outgoing individual whose main aim is to make and keep friends.

Friday, October 1

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A bit of spring cleaning, whether of the mind or of the home, might well be in order -- in spite of the fact that it's autumn.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care that you don't waste your time on one who will not improve regardless of your interest or your help. Seek to dictate terms in the evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A great deal of charm along with a little bit of common sense makes this a day for real achievement. Courage is required at evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your splendid ability to research any topic effectively should make you a solid asset to present employers. Guard against outside interference.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Check every detail, no matter how small, if you hope to be able to avert an unhappy ending where present projects are concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Captivate a local audience before you attempt to make your impression upon a larger one. Community affairs serve you well at evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your attainment and your worth are not necessary reflective of each other. Don't assume that an achievement confers quality upon you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — An unusual skill is brought into play today as you attempt to solve difficulties of the mind through physical exertion.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — A word to the wise is sufficient. Make certain you have heard another correctly, however, before you act upon his word of advice.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Your willingness to advance another's career, even at the expense -- though temporary -- of your own forward motion, brings you glory in the long run.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Pay attention to those who would help you by insisting that you help yourself. There is much to learn about a new endeavor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Protect your own innocence insofar as your intellectual view of present at-home situations is concerned. Sympathy runs in your favor.

The Door is Open

By ROB HENEREY

Today we have a chance to step out of the cage of the past, if we can just manage to be awake when the door swings open, and if we aren't afraid to move into the unknown. The 'door' is the sudden inspiration which, like lightning, illuminates our interior landscape.

By the light which is called 'truth' we can see that our manacles are truly mind-forged, and that they're insubstantial, consisting only of the shadows of our fear. The more we're still operating out of our socially-conditioned egos, with old and rigid values and meanings, the more we're likely to overlook the open case door.

To renew ourselves and our relationships, we've got to struggle out of the fear-dominated past and into the transformative mutation which the light of truth brings to the secret caverns of our hearts.

There are two astrological indicators for this type of day. First, the Moon, symbol of habit and emotional change, is in struggling Capricorn, making its first-quarter 90 degree 'challenged-to-action' angle with both the Sun, symbol of purpose, and pluto, symbol of deep renewal. Both planets are in Libra the sign of relationships.

This suggests that it may be a challenge for us to break free of past habits and unenlightened emotions. Perhaps our partners are challenging us to come in from the cold of our loneliness, the lofty dignity of our solitude — or perhaps they're challenging us to discipline our feelings in order to work toward a mutual goal. The message is that achievement is nothing without love, yet growing and maintaining anything loving and creative requires organization and struggle.

The second key for the day is that Venus, symbol of value and love, will be exactly lined up with (or conjunct) Uranus, symbol of inspiration, truth, and freedom, in desiring Scorpio. This suggests that our sense of what is attractive, valuable, or lovable, in ourselves or in others, is being conditioned by our sense of the inspired, the unconventional, the truth-telling, and the freedom-giving.

Perhaps our feelings are erratic, responding to sudden 'hunches'; perhaps we're tense because we see our feelings as 'abnormal'; perhaps we're attracted to eccentric genius; perhaps our partnerships demand fearless sharing of every secret desire.

Tickets now on sale for '1776' musical

Tickets are now on sale for the University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center production of "1776".

The hit Broadway musical will feature Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin.

Other professional actors coming to the Amherst area for the production include William Linton as John Adams, Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson and Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge.

The "Tony Award" winning musical played for two years on Broadway during the 1970-72 seasons.

The supporting cast is comprised of local talent from the Pioneer Valley.

The musical opens on Friday, Oct. 15 and plays on both Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 16 and 17. The production then resumes its salute to the bicentennial again on Homecoming weekend Saturday and Sunday Oct. 23 and 24.

Tickets for "1776" are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. Ticket prices are General public $6, 5,4; UMass students $4,3,2, and other students and senior citizens $5, 4, 3.

France Summer Study

UMass is sponsoring a summer program of studies at the University of Dijon, in France. Up to six undergraduate or graduate UMass credits may be earned in French at all levels and in history, political science, and art. The program lasts for six weeks, from July 4 to Aug. 13, 1977.

A year of college French or the equivalent is the minimal requirement on the undergraduate level, and an undergraduate major in French (with the B.A. or equivalent degree) for graduate courses. Intermediate competence in written and spoken French is prerequisite for the courses in History, Political Science, and Art.

Student are placed according to their preparation, ability and interests. Elementary and intermediate courses are divided into two and four levels respectively, and emphasize study of the language. More advanced students may also study aspects of French literature, history, and civilization. Qualified students may study the history of France from 1918 to 1950; those interested in Political Science may enroll in the course on contemporary France. Students of art may arrange with the UMass Art Department for a course including the History of Art in Burgundy. There is also a special course for teachers of French.

Students are housed in the modern residence halls on the campus and take their meals in the student restaurants. Excursions to points of historical, artistic, and touristic interest (such as Vezelay, the Cote d'Or, the Jura and Vosges Mountains) are planned as an integral part of the program. In addition, students are encouraged to participate in the activities of the International Center; Sunday with a family in the country, municipal receptions, a series of French films, etc.

Dijon is the capital city of Burgundy, famous for its beautiful countryside and the quality of its wines. The International Center organizes (optional) excursions to Paris, the castles of the Loire Valley, etc.

The program fee is $775 for tuition, textbooks, room and board for the six weeks, and specified excursions. (The program reserves the right to alter the amount in the event of significant inflation or change in the international value of the dollar.) Not included are the costs of independent and transatlantic travel and miscellaneous personal expenses. Enrollees are eligible for inexpensive charter flights.

Enrollment is limited. Early application is recommended. Completed applications should be submitted by Feb. 1, 1977.

Further information and application forms are available from: Prof. S.S. Weiner, Summer Studies in France Program, Department of French and Italian, Herter Hall, UMass, Amherst, MA 01002.

July 4 Coalition info

The Northampton-Amherst July 4th Coalition is holding a mass meeting Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the People's Institute, 38 Gothic Street, Northampton.

An Interim Committee has been working on structural ideas for an on-going local organization and possible future actions. Proposals from other organizations were solicited and integrated in the process.

The local July 4th Coalition mobilized 400 people to go to Philadelphia last July 4 to demonstrate in a people's parade for jobs at a decent standard of living, full democracy and equality and a Bicentennial without colonies.

All interested are urged to attend.

Mt Holyoke nips

Netwomen lose, 5-4...

By PATTY AMERO
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's tennis team lost its second match of the season yesterday to another tough team, this team from Mt. Holyoke, by a close score of 5-4.

The netwomen captured four of the six singles matches, but the story was told in the doubles, where all three matches were won by Mt. Holyoke.

The number one and two singles players for UMass, Jennifer Ranz and Carolyn Mooney, once again failed to win their matches, losing to competition which Coach Kenneth Rubin termed, "out of our league."

"Jennifer and Carolyn have been up against really tough players," Rubin said. "Mt. Holyoke's number one singles player was excellent. She is the best women's singles player I have seen."

The player, Jean Osachuck, defeated Ranz 6-4, 6-0. Mooney was beaten by Cynthia Gianakos, 6-3, 6-2.

The bright spot of the day was the rest of the singles matches which were all won by UMass. Third player Kathy Sullivan reversed her loss last week to Smith College by beating Holyoke's Kathy Amery, 6-1, 6-3, while fourth and fifth singles players Martha Awiszus and Dawn Minaai furthered their unbeaten streak to two in a row by also beating their opponents. Awiszus defeated Mt. Holyoke's Chris Mangsen, 6-1, 6-3, and Minaai downed Sue Trowbridge, 6-3, 6-2.

Freshperson Kendra Bowker, who started for the first time yesterday, also beat her opponent, Winkie Tingly, 6-2, 6-3.

All three doubles matches were lost to the Holyoke women, with none of the contests going to three sets.

UMass' Debbie Halpern and Captain Nancy O'Neil, the number one doubles team, lost to the Mt. Holyoke pairing of Ann Waters and Glenna Weisberg by a score of 6-3, 6-3.

The Mt. Holyoke second team of Ann Webster and Janet Kinnane defeated UMass' number two women Jeanette Flynn and Leslie Howell, 6-3, 7-5, while the UMass number threes, Sue Storer and Ann Andre, lost 6-4, 6-2 to Cathy Kowal and Mary Cummins.

"We only lost 5-4, so we're getting there," Rubin said after the match. "Everyone played well. The team is starting to come together, so we should do well the rest of the season."

The next match for the netwomen will be tomorrow at home against Central Connecticut at 3 p.m.

Schultz sent to LA

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — The Philadelphia Flyers today traded leftwinger Dave Schultz, considered to be the team's "enforcer," to the Los Angeles Kings for "future considerations."

A Flyers spokesman refused to disclose whether the "future considerations" were draft choices, players or cash.

Schultz, 26, spent his entire National Hockey League career with the Flyers and was on the team that won two Stanley cups in 1973-74 and 1974-75 before losing last year's cup finals to the Montreal Canadians.

Schultz, reached at his Cherry Hill, N.J., home, said he was "surprised for a second and then I realized these things happen.

"I have nothing to be bitter about," he said. "I gave them what I have and they gave me what they had. I had four great years here. What more can I ask?"

Schultz said he was notified about 11:30 a.m. about the trade.

"My first question was 'who was the trade for?' and they said a draft choice," he said. "That all depends. When they traded Bill Clement they got Mel Bridgman, a super hockey player. The Flyers have never made a bad trade."

Schultz said he would report to the Kings "very shortly" but would first speak with Los Angeles general manager John (Jake) Milford.

"I haven't talked to him yet," he said. "Then I'll have a better idea what to do."

The Kings finished second in the Norris division last season, won the preliminary round in the playoffs, but lost 3-4 in the quarter final to Boston.

...as Netmen fly, 8-1 UConn falls alone

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The men's tennis team, led by Ricky Sharton's 6-0, 6-3 victory, breezed by UConn 8-1 in yesterday's match on the Boyden upper courts.

Sharton, undefeated in singles this year, clinched the match for the Minutemen who had already won four of the nine matches. Sharton blanked UConn's Dave Seidman in the first set, but had a little trouble handling Seidman's topspin shots in the second set. However, topspin was not enough to beat Sharton the Steady.

The mettle of the doubles teams was never tested as UMass won the match in the singles without losing a set.

It took a mere 30 minutes for Adam Rosen to dispose his Connecticut opponent Peter Young 6-0, 6-0. Rosen's entire game was seemingly faultless, his approach shots (to the net) were sizzling.

Jimmy Barnhart's picture book form gave a 6-3, 6-0 win over Steve Blomguist.

"It was a big win for Jimmy," said Coach Bill Brown. "He's a fine tennis player but has had trouble putting his game together for the win."

There was no trouble yesterday, though.

Capt. Barnaby Kalan came on strong in the second set as his steady, slow paced style did in UConn's Jim Peterson.

Alan Green, despite a sub-par performance, beat Ron Peterson 6-4, 6-2. Green's net game, usually his strong point, lacked considerably yesterday as he blew several easy vollies.

"I stunk," quipped Green.

Steve Heyl easily beat John Muller 6-2, 6-2 in the sixth singles match.

The new second doubles team of Kalan and Barnhart won their debut 6-1, 6-2 over (Jim) Peterson and Muller. Coach Brown was pleased with the new pair.

"They played very well; they have complimentary styles," said Brown.

Rosen and Green, also won their first match together against UConn's Young and (Ron) Peterson 7-6 (5-1 in tie breaker), 6-1.

UConn's Blomquist and Seidman ruined UMass' shutout by beating Sharton and Heyl 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

Soccermen Keen(e) 1-0

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team showed its strong depth yesterday as it defeated Keene State 1-0 at Boyden Field. Bob McChesney scored the only goal of the game on a penalty shot with only 4 minutes remaining.

Three Minutemen left the field with leg injuries before the game was 10 minutes old. Ed Niemiec and Dave Tagliavini were both kicked in the left ankle by Keene players. Joel Mascolo also was injured by returned to action.

The loss of the three starters didn't seem to bother the Minutemen. They had a little bit of trouble early in the game getting themselves together offensively but they have suffered from that problem in all three of their games.

The Minutemen appeared to have solved their offensive woes by midway through the first half. They started to set up each other within good shooting range of Keene goalie Ted Delorm.

Mike Shannon and Tony Biladeau just missed cashing in on excellent set-ups at the 25 minute mark. Their shots were both too high. Mark Vasington also fired high on a breakaway shot about ten minutes later. He was sent in alone by Bob McChesney.

The trend of inaccurate shooting continued. The Minutemen forwards were organized well but couldn't put their shots on net. They had only one shot on goal in the first half.

Keene's offense didn't accomplish much in the first half either. They had but one shot on net also. UMass played tough defense even in the absence of Niemiec. Freshman Mark Vassalotti played nearly the entire game subbing for Niemiec. He was outstanding.

Coach Russ Kidd commented about Vassalotti, "He played like an experienced veteran. Any time a freshman can step in and do a job as good as Mark did, the coach has to be pleased."

The UMass defense was strong in the second half also. They were called upon to make several key clearing passes from around their goal. Pat Veale showed a great deal of hustle when the ball came into his area.

Keene picked up the tempo during a stretch of the second half. Joe Palumbo's quick shot from in close required a great save by UMass netminder Mark Hanks.

Hanks had several other saves of exceptional variety in the second half. Delorm in the Keene goal was also tested more severely in the second half. Tony Biladeau and Joel Mascolo who returned from being injured both had good scoring chances. Biladeau encountered the same problem he had in the first half; shooting accuracy.

Neither team looked like they could put the ball in the net. However a penalty shot was awarded UMass when a Keene player used his hands in the penalty area.

This UMass soccer player is not being treated well by this Keene State defender, however, UMass was not so kind either as they defeated Keene State 1-0. Mark Hanks captured his first shutout of the year. (Staff photo by Jay Saret)

Bob McChesney took the shot and made it count. He fired a low speedy shot into the bottom right hand corner of the net. The team erupted when the ball hit the net. It was a great site.

"It's great, they even game me the game ball," said coach Russ Kidd after the game as he raised the ball above his head.

BOOTER BANTER: The Junior Varsity team also defeated Keene. The score was 4-0. Scoring for UMass were Tarek Elnabli with two, and Scott Mindlin and Chris Luscomb with one each ... The J.V. team's next game is Tuesday at Harvard ... Mark Hanks got kicked in the head after making a save with only a minute left in the game ... Lineswomen for the game were Linda Kaufman, Donna Seifer, Rhonda Libenson and Liz Hamlin.

Nettles sinks Sox

BOSTON (UPI) — Graig Nettles blasted two home runs, including his second career grand slam, and drive in six runs Wednesday night to power the New York Yankees to a 9-6 triumph over the Boston Red Sox.

Nettles, who has 32 home runs to virtually lock up his first American League home run title, connected for a two-run shot in the first inning. The third baseman, who also had two doubles, tagged his second homer an inning later with the bases loaded to finish loser Luis Tiant, 21-12.

Jim "Catfish" Hunter scattered eight hits, gave up five runs and walked one while striking out five in seven innings to gain his 17th win against 15 losses.

Yesterday was a better day than the one pictured above as the Women's field hockey team dumped Keene State at Keene, N.H., 4-1. (The above picture is from UMass' 7-1 loss to Springfield College last Thursday. UMass dominated the game as the team had 24 shots on goal and Susan Kipling, Cindy Hartstone, Susan Kreider, and Ginger Ballman all tallied for the Minutewomen. The only score for Keene State came in the second period by Pat Duffy. The Keene attack could only manage 12 shots on goal. Coach Judy Davidson singled out Kelly Sauls for her consistency on defense. The coach also mentioned Sue Kipling on attack, who tallied on a long short past the Keene goalie. Goalie Kathy Gripps played well according to Davidson and Gripps was aided by Karen Zimmerman who came out of nowhere to pick the ball 6 out of the goal. Coach Davidson was pleased with the win, raising the team's record to 1-1. "We were very good; we're finally starting to jell," said the coach. (Staff photo by Stu Eyman)

Fans cheated as Orr doesn't show

P. T. Barnum was right when he said "There's a sucker born every minute."

Tuesday night at the Springfield Civic Center, 4000 fans, who paid $6.50 and $7.50 a ticket, came to see an exhibition hockey game between the Boston Bruins and the Chicago Black Hawks. They came because they wanted to see Bobby Orr's first appearance against his former hockey club.

But Bobby Orr was not there. Neither was Brad Park, despite the fact the game was advertised as "Bobby Orr and the Chicago Black Hawks vs. Brad Park and the Boston Bruins."

As recently as Monday, Don Murphy, the public relations director for the Black Hawks, told the Springfield Union that there was no reason he could think of why Orr would not be in Chicago's line-up on Tuesday. But come game time, the P.A. announcer said to "scratch number four, Bobby Orr, from the Chicago line-up."

The announcement was greeted by a loud chorus of boos. To make matters worse, Jean Ratelle and Don Marcotte did not play either although in fairness to the Bruins, they were suffering from injuries.

"You can blame Chicago's management for Orr not being here," said Bruin general manager Harry Sinden. "They told us that he was going to be here tonight."

Evidently, Bobby Orr and the Chicago Black Hawks do not care about Springfield hockey fans. Seeing the way Orr has acted in the past, it isn't surprising at all.

Bobby Orr is a selfish person. That is why he is presently wearing a Black Hawk uniform. He thinks only of himself.

A few years ago when Derek Sanderson was with the Boston Braves for conditioning, he was scheduled to play with the team in Springfield, but was recalled to the Bruins just before the game. Sanderson had heard that the game was a sellout, so he asked and received permission to play one more game in the minors. He even showed his appreciation to his fans by signing a countless number of autographs prior to the game.

You won't see Bobby Orr doing anything like that. It's unfortunate that these things have to happen because it can only hurt the sport. Fans can only be pushed so far.

In another incident concerning the game, the state attorney general's office is looking into possible consumer deception tactics used by the promoters of the game. The group is also promoting a game between the New York Rangers and the Washington Capitals. Knowing that the game would not have too much interest in this area, the group stipulated that fans would have to buy tickets for both NHL exhibition games. However, when Bruin's tickets were moving slowly, they began selling them individually.

Some fans asked for their money back when they heard about this and were refused. Add this to the fact that Orr did not appear, and you can see why the fans are irritated.

Hockey is slowly beginning to overprice itself. The Bruins are feeling the effects right now. On Sunday, a game between the Bruins and Montreal Canadiens drew only 7,000 fans. In any other year, that game would have been an automatic sellout, exhibition or not, as would the game in Springfield. Maybe the fans are starting to wake up.

Former Bruin great Eddie Shore said he was surprised at the attendance of Tuesday's game. But don't let Shore fool you. He just sold his Springfield Indians team. Maybe he knew it was time to get out of the business.

Between periods it was announced that the New York Rangers, with Phil Esposito, Ken Hodge and Carol Vadnais will be coming to the Civic Center. The announcement was loudly booed.

After all you can only fool some of the people some of the time...

I Watch Myself

The moon is my mirror.
A ray from my eye, strong and glistening,
touches the moon and she reflects it.
The moon glows with my light, my warmth.

Her beams fall gently upon you,
bestow my gaze upon you.
The moon is not relentless,
as I would be.

She glides across the sky;
she pulls the tides of love and sea.
She is the softer side of me,
the moon, my mirror.

Beardsley's
140 Main St., Northampton
586-2699
Luncheon: Mon. thru Sat. 11:30-2:30
Dinner: Tues. thru Sat. 5:30-10:00
Sunday Brunch served 10:30-2:30

Beardsley's is a French restaurant with a romantic atmosphere tucked inconspicuously among the shops on Northampton's Main St. A long narrow room, most of the tables are on street level, with some tables in back raised a few steps via platform. This creates both interest and privacy as the diners above can observe the activities below.

The room is richly furnished in wood, lighting is fashionably dim. On each polished wooden table is a candle and single rose, adding to the elegance. Classical and modern Classical music is played on tapes.

Sunday brunch at Beardsley's can be spent luxuriously lingering over the Sunday Times and Eggs Benedict ($2.95) or sipping on a Shandygaff, which is a combination of Champagne and o.j. ($1.25).

Beardsley's originated several years ago as a vegetarian restaurant, and the luncheon menu is now an appealing array of sandwiches ($.95-2.95) both meatless, and meatfull, on assorted breads. Salads served in or out of whole wheat Syrian bread, omelettes, Coquilles St. Jacques, Ratatouille, and daily soup and luncheon specials round out the menu. Sounding particularly enchanting is the Parisian Sandwich, described as "open faced, broiled Swiss cheese, onion, tomatoes, and garlic butter, on sourdough french bread." This sells for $1.75, or for the same price, one half a "Parisian" plus a cup of soup can be procured.

Our recent dinner at Beardsley's began with Kir ($1.25) (an aperitif named for Canon Kir, a former Mayor of Dijon, France). This drink is constituted of cold chablis mixed with "Creme de Cassis", an alcoholic currant flavoured liquer. But since Beardsley's has not yet obtained a liquor permit, currant syrup is used instead, still with pleasant results.

Hot Potato Leek soup was; freshly pureed potatoes which retained their texture, lemon juice, herbs, and spices. This is an excellent soup de jour which one should consider H(er-im)self lucky to find among the daily offerings.

Small loaves of steaming sourdough french bread are deliciously different to hold ones appetite at bay during the course of a leisurely paced meal.

German imported Westphalian Ham, which is very thinly sliced, has a delectable, salty-smokey flavor, and escargots served complete with a clamp to aid removal from their ceramic shells, are two of the more exotic appetizers. Greek Island Salad of marinated cabbage and Feta cheese is unusual and pleasing.

Dinner entrees run from $4.50 for Ratatouille, to $8.25 for Steak au Poivre aux Champignons (sirloin pressed with crushed black pepper, grilled in butter and mushrooms, then flamed in brandy.)

A Poisson du Jour was swordfish baked with fresh tomatoes, onion, green pepper, and garlic. This topping was colorful and savory, tho it tended to mask the flavor of the quality swordfish beneath.

Cote d'Agneau au Moutard was tender lamb loin chops which were perfectly broiled, but the "tangy mustard sauce" which came with it seemed to be lacking something...the mustard perhaps? Acorn squash stuffed with butter and brown sugar, wheat pilaf with large walnut pieces were thoughtfully and well prepared accompaniments.

Especially worth noting for dessert is the Peach Melba ($1.40). consisting of a fresh peach artistically sculptured into a flower, with vanilla ice cream and raspberries in their own juice filling the center.

The house wines here come in individual bottles instead of carafes, and the "service people", wearing old-fashioned wrap-around-the-waist blue aprons, are attentive. Our waitress Jennifer was particularly helpful and pleasant.

At Beardsley's, the smallest details are not overlooked in effort to afford the guest a totally elegant dining experience.

Admittedley the prices are not cheap, but for the service and care given to each diner, and each dish, an evening at Beardsley's should be considered more as a brief vacation, than just another restaurant meal. Bon Appetit!

THE URGE FOR GOING: BIRD MIGRATION

by Peter Trull

The migration of students back to the University of Mass. isn't the only migration taking place these days. As many of us are aware, incredible numbers of birds are passing over Massachusetts on their long journey to the warmer climes of the south.

During the months of July and August many species begin a flight that often extends from Alaska and the Artic circle southward to Argentina and other parts of South America. When the Golden Rod and Joe-Pye-Weed create masses of yellow and purple along the roadsides, reminding us of the shorter days and cool September nights, the birds will be on the move. They move not by choice, but by instinct alone, as their parents and countless generations have done before them. No insurance policies, no lush hotels to rest in, only the instinct to survive, the need to survive so that perpetuation of the species may continue.

We are lucky to be situated in one of New England's best spots for watching migrating hawks. Both Spring and Autumn migrations bring single birds, small groups, and sometimes flocks of up to a hundred or more as they follow the Berkshire Range, taking advantage of updrafts created by winds against the hillsides. Sometimes the hawks circle in "kettles" of rising warm air without flapping their wings for hours. How free these majestic birds are, as we watch them from atop the Hadley range or Mt. Tom. One can only stand in awe as these stately creatures glide by at eye level seemingly undaunted as their vigil continues.

All through the woodlands of the Amherst area, different species of birds can be seen as they continue on their Autumn migration. The woods, the pastures, the ponds, each with its own flora and fauna provide food and a resting place for the species most adapted to fill a particular niche. Warblers are small songbirds. Moving in "waves", they turn a quiet woodland into a place of excitement as they swarm the branches, picking insects from leaves, from bark, clamoring, swirling, whirling, until the trees become suddenly quiet once more. They are gone. A small Sandpiper, mucking about for insects around a pasture pond, may continue its flight to Cape Cod. Here, it takes in sufficient nourishment from an ever productive salt marsh, then continues its flight out over the Atlantic, southward to Brazil. A non-stop flight that may take only six days. It sounds unbelievable, it is incredible.

The natural community thrives all around us, from the tallest green tree which sustains within it the very substance on which all life on this planet depends, down to the smallest of insects, preyed upon by creatures that run beneath our feet unseen. It is a constant flow, positive energy that often overwhelms man. It certainly overwhelms me. I love it, I respect it, and work towards its guaranteed continuance. Please join me in the realization of its beauty.

Sacred ships, Flesh and Flora

by Olivia Georgia
and Sandra J. Lubov

The Fine Arts Center Gallery has opened its fall season with a show combining the paintings of local artists Frances and Gregory Gillespie and the sculpture of John Michael Garber. The show will be on exhibit through October 13. Each artist has chosen to deal with realism, a form that many have felt was exhausted. But they prove that veristic images translated by hand can still be a challenge for artist and viewer.

Gregory Gillespie brings to common objects, places and individuals a religious purity, making the personal universal, and the consecrated earthly. He paints still-lifes, self-portraits, and landscapes as if they were elaborate incantations that have the power to revive what they have distilled. His self-portraits as a drained martyred poet suck in the air that is around them. The blood runs slowly through his body — undercoatings show through translucent rhythmic dabs of paint, like veins seen through skin.

Still lifes become objects of meditation. He searches the past for his forms which endow his environments with a reverent sense of history. They read like an astrological chart. An egg, a milk carton, the post card of an Italian Landscape, barely hidden sketches like graffiti are arranged to appear both ritualistic and arbitrary. The full implications of Gregory's symbolism remain remote but he does not allow his paintings to alienate. His visual chicanery plays obvious games with our perception. In his collages objects are not simply stuck to the surface of the canvas but are used to imply a different sort of space — contradictory and ambiguous. A space we can move into mentally with gliding confidence yet in body observe only from outside. On one side of a painting a real plaster molding is used as part of a wall; on the other side the same moldings duplicated two-dimensionally in paint is as convincing as the real molding. The real becomes unreal and image becomes object. One cannot walk away from these works without a filling admiration and an eating interrogation.

by Gregory Gillespie

The works by Frances Gillespie are portraits and still-lifes of her family and home. The members of her family are strictly portrayed. Either nude or plainly dressed they are never reduced to prettiness nor are they merely factual resemblances. The backgrounds of the paintings are limited to bare walls, geometric patterned floors and rugs, and single pieces of furniture. It is the absolute concentration of emotion and knowledge that fills the empty spaces.

The still-life of plants contradict their two-dimensional existence on canvas by seeming to actually, slowly and silently, exchange the very air that we breathe. The plants and the people are placed in a corner or against a wall. They do not and cannot literally move but, rather, they ripen before us. Frances Gillespie perceives her maternal and familiar subjects with a perfect, scrutinized honesty. Her artistic, always womanly, sensitivity combines an emphatic realism with the extramundane internal life of her subjects.

The paintings are seen through the eyes of an artist experiencing and following the growth and maturity of her family, her art, and herself. This process is both wonderful and sad. Her daughter's dress is awkwardly too big but Lela will soon fill the bodice and her dangling feet will soon touch the floor. Her mother sees her child small and dependent but at the same time growing independent and self-contained. The Adolescent Nude is not Lela but perhaps a memory of what she will become. The paintings of Frances' mother unsentimentally document the wrinkled skin and shrinking body of old age. While the surface and expression is hard, there is a tender transmission of earned love. The portraits of Gregory and the self-portraits are the most anxiously probing. They stare forward as if examining themselves in a mirror, trying to align their physical image with their self-conceptions. The self-portraits are particularly acute examinations of a woman confronting middle age.

The work of both Frances and Gregory is full of allusions to Flemish, Renaissance, and Early American painting. Few Old Masters could leave us more in awe of craftsmanship and technical skill than both these artists have so obsessively accomplished. The Gillespies' use of traditional modes do not detract from the painters' own insights nor does it regress to conservative realism, but allows the viewer to link for himself the richness and complexity of their themes and motifs.

It is both appropriate and unfortunate that the Gillespies are shown together. The symbiotic relationship they share as husband and wife fertilizes their mutual efforts. There are obvious similarities in their use of certain details, textures, backgrounds, and a shared austere yet emotionally charged atmosphere. But each artist goes beyond these similarities into distinctly different artistic and personal concerns. Gregory's subjects are more varied and complex, while Frances' concerns are more homely and domestic. It is perhaps when one begins to understand the more subtle differences between their work that one begins to fully appreciate their individual significance.

In between the paintings and the collages of the Gillespies lie the laminated wood sculptures of John Michael Garber. Garber grew up around boatyards. His technique expanded from his own experience in building half-models for ships. In this craft each slice of wood in a tiny half-ship is precisely designed as a model for each part of the actual ship.

The pieces in this show include an egg, a whale, an apple and bones; all shapes which share a kinship with the sleek, sensuous lines of a ship's bow that Garber has no doubt developed a taste for. But there is a direct contradiction between his forms and his technique. Instead of putting shapes together to form a whole he fractures his objects so that they are denied the content and core of what they are and what they express. The over-sized objects do not embody the same loveliness concentrated in the ship model and miniatures. Garber's dinosaur-sized bones have no marrow at their center. They become mere lacquer coated artifacts with interesting topographical striations.

Doctor Dodder

Dear Doctor Dodder:
I deserve to be excommunicated from the Sierra Club. I became so desperate that I even went searching for some black market DDT. No insecticide I have tried has been effective against those green squishy cigar-shaped caterpillars with the black dots on their bellys that are feasting on my tomatoes. The situation has come to the state that I have started to have entomological visions about tomato leaf dinners and am now waiting for my skin to molt. What can I do about the bugs? Are there safer ways of protecting vegetables from insects?

Franz Kafka

Dear Franz:
The best way for gardeners to rid themselves of the tomato hornworm is to pick them from the leaves. Or use a napkin if you do not want them crawling on your hands. Only a mild infestation of insects will not destroy your crop but if the insects appear to arrive as if one of Moses' plagues was poorly aimed then just look to methods the plants have evolved to combat bugs.

Some plants produce alkaloids as protective devices. Yes, those same chemicals that start our day with caffeine, refresh our day with Coca-Cola, or mellow it out with cannabinol are actually chemicals produced by the plant to defend itself. Along with pyrethrum, retenone, and nicotine alkaloids are toxic to various organisms that try to consume the plants (no matter what our friends at American Tobacco say).

Pyrethrum is a chemical derived from Chrysanthemum cinerariaefolium, a relative of the same mums that are transformed into tigers and giant bottles of catsup every Rose Parade. Most of the commercial pyrethum comes from the hills of Kenya and Ecuador but if you can find some of these mums, just steep a hefty amount of the petals in boiling water to make a solution. Then add some more water and douse the plants and the surrounding soil. And insects do not develop resistance to pyrthenum; if they did, we would be in bad shape every New Year's.

Rotenone, an alkaloid produced by many plants and stored underground, has been used since time immemorial as a fish poison. In SouthEast Asia the villagers would lace a river with cubes of tubers filled with rotenone and just wait for the fish to belly up. The fish could then be immediately which suggests a very low toxicity to animals. But insects, oooish!

There is a North American weed, Tephrosia virginiana or the devil's shoestring, which contains rotenoene and all one has to do to make their own insecticide is to collect the weed, dry it, pulverize it, and then mix it with water.

And of course there is nicotine. Very effective against alveolar membranes and soft-bodied insects such as aphids, leaf hoppers and thrips. Just save your butts until you have accumulated a pound or so and steep them in four gallons of water for a few days. You can mix in a little dish soap with your any insecticide solution to increase its wetting ability and spray away.

Dear Doctor Dodder:
My ferns have been growing beautifully until this weekend when I noticed that on the undersides of the frond were growing groups of brown dots. What's happening?

Pimpled Fern

Dear Fern:
No need for alarm except that if the proper conditions exist you may soon become a grandparent. Those rusty patches are known as "sori" and they are just your fern's way of saying that it is ready to reproduce. Within the sori are the spores which will subsequently grow into the prothalli which become the new ferns.

Dear Doctor Dodder:
Late last weekend after far too many bowls of far too good stuff we got to wondering about who was the first one to smoke dope and why did they even try it. Any ideas?

Small Circle of Friends

Dear Friends,
I think that it might have been my roommate my first year at college, but then again he claimed also to have been the first person ever to have thrown a Frisbee so I am not too sure about him.

Actually Cannabis was probably first used by our prehistoric ancestors to weave mats and to make rope. One method used since earliest times to extract the fibers from the hemp is to soak the entire plant in a pond. The water soluble materials would dissolve leaving the fibers. On returning to collect their stash, the ropemakers probably noted the peculiar manner in which the fish of the pond swam. All our finned friends had to do was to take one good gillful and they would become fried fish. The fish were now easy prey for the ropemakers and after a hard day of fishing, our ancestors probably took a few healthy swallows to quench their thirsts. One thing leads to the next and before you can say the Pledge of Allegaince, marijuana is illegal in every country in the world.

Doctor Dodder will be happy to answer any and all questions, attempt to solve your plant problems, so if you want to exhibit your rose, or just want to know what mushrooms to dazzle your friends with at the dinner table, tell them to write the doctor in care of BELOW THE SALT.

Mass. Craft

The Western Massachusetts Crafts Marketing Project (MASS. CRAFT) is a six month program created to help solve the marketing problems of craftspeople residing in Western Massachusetts. As a Massachusetts Local Initiative Project, MASS. CRAFT was funded to provide the impetus for local craftspeople to begin working together toward the common goal of a cooperative economically viable community.

There are three major thrusts to realize the project's goal: marketing, promotion, and education and information. Several specific marketing projects are being implemented by marketing coordinator Rick Feldman. A county by county directory of craftspeople is being prepared, and a slide and photo library is being set up. It will be made available to any wholesale buyer or retail customer who wishes to use it, and will serve as a marketing tool to promote individual work.

A sales referral network has also been established. It is a clearinghouse for people wishing to place commissions, new stores looking for contacts, and craftspeople looking for contacts.

MASS. CRAFT promotion concern is directed toward three sectors: craftspeople, the general public, and wholesalers. A monthly newsletter, CRAFT NEWS, publishes news and information for and about the crafts community of western MASS. CRAFTS NEWS is distributed free throughout Berkshire, Hampshire and Franklin counties on the first business day of each month.

The newsletter encourages input from the community, and correspondents are sought to review books, fairs, and to write articles of interest to craftpeople. For more information, contact editor Joyce Kosofsky at the MASS. CRAFT office in Leverett.

A campaign is being conducted to educate the public about crafts in order to encourage them to buy handmade goods rather than only mass produced, machine-made articles. To wholesalers, MASS. CRAFT will try to promote Western Massachusetts as a major region of high quality crafts.

The third stage of operations is education and information. MASS. CRAFT will make available to craftspeople in the area the information and skills necessary to most effectively handle the business end of their profession. At the very least, MASS. CRAFT can be a source of where to go to find the answers to craftspeople's questions and problems.

The most important aspect of the educational area is the series of workshops being planned for this Fall and early Winter. The workshop series will focus on subjects which range from starting a crafts business to specific legal problems that affect craftspeople. For more information about the workshops, contact the office at 549-1334.

Besides the workshops, MASS. CRAFT will arrange conferences between interested parties to facilitate the sharing of ideas between craftspeople or between craftspeople and craft shops or fair promoters who want to explore ways to help one another.

"8 REASONS WHY I'D LISTEN TO SEIDEN SOUND."
—Rich Peterson, NYC studio engineer

Photographed at Cathedral Sound Studios

If I lived where you live, I'd only go to Seiden Sound for my audio needs. Because Seiden Sound meets every one of my eight requirements.

1. Variety. You'll find just about every famous brand name of audio components at Seiden Sound. And not just one or two models—but a complete range of every manufacturer's output.

2. Exclusivity. Seiden Sound sells more lines exclusively. Because they can buy and stock more equipment, several manufacturers would rather deal just with Seiden Sound. And about a dozen of them do just that.

3. Convenience. There are more Seiden Sound stores around here than anybody else's. Besides giving them buying power, that can help you in other important ways. If a particular piece of equipment isn't at the Seiden Sound store near you, they can have it there, from another store, in a day. And, they're convenient, so you can stop by, pick up or drop off things whenever.

4. Experience. They've been in the business longer. Seiden Sound's been around since 1960, when the audio business was a lot smaller. They've been polishing their act since then, so they're not going to make the mistakes that newcomers often make.

5. Expertise. Every Seiden Sound salesman goes to school. He learns about components from the inside out. He learns how to listen—to sound, and to customers. Most important, he learns how to customize components for each individual's space, budget, and music preferences.

6. Protection. Seiden Sound backs up every sale. Over the years, they've developed an almost mind-boggling 16 point policy, covering parts and labor and trade-ups and price protection, and trade-ins and buy-backs and lots of other consumer oriented things you can read up on at any Seiden Sound location.

7. Credit. They make it easy to pay for. Not only does Seiden Sound give you value for every dollar, they make it as easy as possible for you to come up with those dollars. Their best payment plan requires no money down, and three months till your first payment. And of course, they welcome Master Charge, BankAmericard, and American Express, too.

8. It Adds Up. What it comes down to is this: Seiden Sound helps you hear everything that's there. That's why I recommend them to you. Because like me, Seiden Sound wants you to get out of a recording, everything that goes into it.

HARVEST HOMAGE

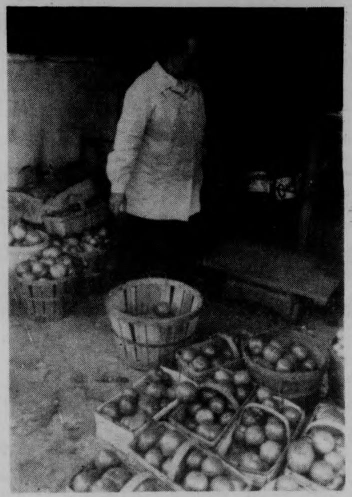
by E. Patrick McQuaid and Debbie Schafer

Fall is the time of year when our thoughts turn to Frost; especially in Amherst. Autumn leaves turn us all into poets. We don our bright coloured flannel jackets and set out in search of untrodden paths and bending birch trees.

The roadside stands are open again. The fresh fruit is just off the tree and on the shelf and is just waiting to be picked.

If you're looking for all the country flavor in all of one place, and you dare not venture out into the thickets of Hadley or Sunderland you can peddle down Rte. 116 or catch the Five College Bus to Hampshire College and hike over to Atkins' Fruit Bowl. It has a comfortable, country store atmosphere, where you can pick up your regular groceries as well as fresh fruits and vegetables.

Atkins' is one of the largest wider-known orchards in this area. From 300 acres they annually harvest 75 to 85,000 bushels of apples, according to Don Atkins, who was managing the market the morning that we stopped in.



"This is the peak of the season," he told us. "The usual season starts about late July and runs until late October. The early variety are July Red and Wealthy, which few people know about. The mid variety are the MacIntosh and Cortland and the later variety are the Delicious and the Sun Gold."

Apples are harvested in bins, he explained. One bin is equal to 15 bushels. They are sold to the public in bushels, however, and vary in size from crabapple, small, medium, and large.

Atkins also presses their own cider. Last year they sold 64,000 gallons of cider, pressed from number two apples and windfalls.

By far Atkins' has the shiniest apples in Amherst, but that's not because someone sat around for hours on end polishing them.

"We use a natural vegetable oil," said Atkins. "That's all we use here, though. There is another product out that some other places use, but we don't because it's not natural. The oil not only gives a much more appealing, shiny look, but also gives the apple a longer shelf life by sealing off its pores."

If you're out driving or cycling, a scenic route is River Drive (Rte. 47) in Hadley. It runs parallel to Route 116 and is dotted with roadside stands and farm fields.

In the center of North Hadley, your typical New England picture postcard village, you'll find one of the most picturesque roadside stands; Arrowhead Farms, owned and operated by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Berestka.

Passersby are drawn to this quaint wayside each Fall to stock up on their Winter vegetable supply. An attractive old wagon filled with colourful green and orange gourds is stationed in the front yard alongside the stand.

Steady customers have been coming to Arrowhead Farm from as far away as Vermont for years.

"It's quality that brings them back," Mrs. Berestka told us. "I'm not bragging, but they know they'll get quality here and they come back for it year after year."

Quality is often a matter of freshness, and at the roadside stand you can't get much fresher. Produce is sold as it's picked directly to the customer. Supermarkets buy in bulk and have the produce trucked in, which takes time, costs money, and only burdens the consumer with a higher price and lower grade of food.

"And we don't throw anything out," concluded Mrs. Berestka. Unsold tomatoes, or those in the utility grade, are sold for canning.

A little further up Rte. 47 near the Sunderland border is the Family Garden. Along with wide selection of fresh fruits and vegetables, they have an enormous amount of pumpkins, gourds, and dried wild flowers for decoration.

Still further up the road, just into Sunderland you'll find the Millstone House Farm. They carry a similar selection of produce but the old farm building, intact with the millstones, adds a distinctive character to this roadside stand and is well worth the ride.

If you are without transportation you'll want to walk into Amherst center on Saturday mornings and take advantage of the Amherst Common Market. It runs from 7:30 till noon on Saturday only and vendors from all over the area bring their produce, baked goods, jams, jellies, and picked items to the Amherst Common.

There are usually about 20 booths with a huge selection of produce. Members of the Amherst Common Market range from professional truck farmers to backyard gardeners. It is a non-profit operation and runs until early October.

If you're in the Northampton area, this Saturday only (October 2) the Farmer's Market will be opened all day from 8 a.m. and will operate much like the Amherst Common Market with many local farmers participating. Call the Northampton Chamber of Commerce at 584-1900 for more information.

There are a number of places along Rte. 9 and on Rte. 47 in either direction. You can head up through Sunderland or Montague or down through South Hadley as far as Springfield.

Here's a list of just a few local farms and roadside stands that you might want to check out. It is by no means a complete listing and we suggest that some morning you get out and find a few places of your own.

Idi's Super Ego

by Craig Roche

Documentary reportage in film is often left to the recreation or witnessing of events. In Idi Amin Dada, the subject is the event and half of the event was trying to cover the subject. No small task for director Barbet Schroeder at the onset of his production, events and people continued to make the task more difficult even after the completion of the film. A little history behind the project is in order.

Made in 1974 for French TV, Idi Amin Dada is the authorized 'self portrait' of one of the Third World's leaders. Because it is authorized by Amin, it is therefore not terribly impartial. Amin contributed many ideas, most of the music, and managed many of the scenes in the movie. Thus what has emerged is not an outsiders focused film biography of Uganda's leader, but a picture of how Amin perceives himself. Viewers who go to see this should know this at the start, and not hold director Schroeder responsible for some of the opinions.

While in 1974 few if any in America knew who the leader of Uganda was, now in 1976 most all are familiar with the name, Idi Amin. The Entebbe raid by the Israeli Air Force, leaks of reported atrocities, and the tumultous politics of the continent all involve the figure of Amin. Amin will either help you form an opinion or evaluate what the man has done for and to the nation he rules with an iron hand.

French audiences were filled with laughter upon viewing the film, and some of it would be funny if the situation in the nation were not so damn serious. We are shown Amin leading his army and air force on an imaginary attack of the Israeli held Golan Heights, with a voiceover commentary by Amin..." yes, here we rush the hill and now call in air support (one plane) and now the hill is ours." This is funny, pathetic, but it is also threatening. Who is he fooling, as his troops scale a twenty foot hill, us or himself?

Amin's personality is so pervasive throughout Uganda he is able to force his vision upon all its inhabitants. Witness a scene set up for the film of the beloved leader arriving at a small village where the people have been ordered to turn out in their best dress. The helicopter swoops down, and orders or no orders, the villagers are scared out of their wits by the low flying, noisy machine. Amin is able to successfully shape reality to his own ends in the nation when he makes outrageous statements the likes of the movement afoot in Uganda to aid Britain in their economic woes. He says the Ugandans are gathering food and money to ship to the starving impoverished residents of their once proud motherland. He also unveils the Ugandan Navy, which is apparently made up of one boat on Lake Victoria (Uganda is landlocked).

When Schroeder finished the film and was preparing it for French TV, Amin got wind of a few uncomplimentary remarks that were in the script. His means of pressuring the director into accepting Amin's editing was simple and for Idi, true to form. He rounded up 30 French citizens in Uganda and held them captive under threat of death until Schroeder relented and cut out the offending remarks.

Thus we lose a few colorful facts, among them, the inclusion of the statement that several thousand people have been killed by Amin and his forces since he came to power (estimates go upward to 300,000 people). Also deleted by force was the detail that an offending cabinet minister, shown picking his nose in a filmed meeting as Amin speaks about love, was found dead two weeks later, his body floating in a river.

Idi Amin Dada left me with no sharper focus on a man who is an enigma. The critical biography of this chilling man is yet to be made, but Schroeder's effort is not to be condemned too harshly. He still made a number of accurate statements about Amin that I am surprised Amin let by. And when the price of honesty is paid in blood, many find the price too high.

Salsa-Soul Medicine Show

Beer, Beer, Beer

by Luis Garden-Acosta
"The Medicine Man"

"How well I remember my first encounter with the devil's brew."

W.C. Fields may remember but most of us have probably forgotten how we were first introduced to that "devil's brew." The Salsa-Soul History team has come up with the fact that beer was known and appreciated since at least 6,400 B.C. On a more recent Bicentennial Note and just in time for next weeks' rather dubious celebration the Salsa-Soul gang has uncovered a finding that definitely proves that the first Americans met Columbus with a six pack in hand. Historical research aside tradition has it that:

In a jolly field of barley good King Cambrinus slept,
And dreaming of his thirsty realm the merry monarch wept,
"In all my land of Netherland there grows no mead or wine,
And water I could never coax adown this throat of mine,

"Now list to me ye heathen gods, and eke ye Christian too,
Both Zernebock and Jupiter, and Mary clad in blue;
And mighty Thor the Thunderer, and any else that be,
The one who aids me in my need his servant I will be."

And as this sinful heathen all in the barley lay,
There came in dreams an angel bright who soft these words did say —
"Arise," thou poor Cambrinus, for even all around,
In the barley where thou sleepest a nectar may be found.

"In the barley where thou sleepest there hides a nectar clear,
Which men shall know in later times as porter, ale or beer."
Then in terms the most explicit he "Put the monarch through,"
And gave him ere the dream was how the recipe to brew.
Gloria in Excelsus Deo!

W.C. Fields, and more currently Ed McMahon of the "Tonight Show," have certainly reaped a big profit persuading us to have a few. But most of us like Tom T. Hall, the country western singer, simply like beer. I guess my own feelings about beer go back a while — to the old neighborhood.

I still can't tell you what my old neighborhoods' favorite beer was because as much as it was drunk I never saw the label. It was always contained in a plain brown paper bag and held by one sturdy brown hand while the other held the dominoes close to the chest. Everybody seemed to be having so much fun that I suspected something scandalous was written on the can, something they were keeping from me until I could get it out of Russel Blessington who was two years older and let me in on everything.

My other early childhood rememberances of beer were the not so few weddings where things didn't seem to go right. Now that I'm older I realize that no matter what the label is — not even Russel Blessington can tell me what's inside it. "Now hold on!" you'll say. "Every red blooded American knows that in beer there is only Mother Natures' very own hops and malt." Not so, my friend, not so. True enough — beer companies do spend millions of dollars each year to try to convince us that beer is brewed "the old fashioned way" just as in "the old country." But just like we were told that "Wonder Bread helped build bodies twelve ways" what's really happening may just be the direct opposite. The trouble started when major beer companies anxious to stamp out their competitors in the 60's chocked a load of chemicals to spark up the brewing process. They got over fast enough but they also blew away their foam. And as we all know what's a glass of beer without a "hefty head?" Back to the drawing boards, the beer heavies decided to produce an artificial head by using cobalt. To no one's surprise the government didn't blink an eye well at least not until fifty people passed away and Clean Living reminded them that "In Heaven there is no Beer."

For those of us who survived today we are likely to find such goodies as propylene glycol alginate, gum arabic, or "high-molecular weight polysaccharide" just to make sure we can all look cool when we pour that brew. "Your favorite beer may have more additives than foam stabilizers, however. A protein-digesting enzyme, such as papin, is often added to prevent beer from getting cloudy when very cold. To kill unwanted microorganisms, a dollop of helptyl paraben may be added. One preservative used in beer, dietyl pyrocarbonate, was found to lead to the formation of urethan, a cancer-causing chemical. It was finally banned in 1972."

What does it all mean? Simple, in 1935 there were 750 brewers, today especially as a result of chemical brewing that number has dwindled to 146. Only 15 companies control 80 per cent of the market and five of these 15 control half of everything. Budweiser, Schlitz and Pabst have increased their share of the 12 billion market from 25 per cent to 40 per cent during the last decade.

I know there is someone out there who's saying "I don't believe it." You probably didn't believe Watergate either. But ho hum my chum just read the label. A-huh! What label?

The Shadows Know

—Alice E. Horner

Bronze gongs hung from red-lacquer bars topped by a pair of entwined gold dragons. A group of turbanned musicians sat cross-legged, waiting, before exotic instruments. A large white screen was the focal point for those rapidly filling the auditorium who had come to see the wayang kulit.

The wayang kulit (shadow play) is a Javenese dramatic form using flat leather rod puppets to tell a story from Hindu epic literature. Popular and widespread in Indonesia, it is relatively unknown in the West. Last Friday night, Amherst College's Music Department (through grants from the Hamilton Fund and the National Endowment for the Arts) sponsored a wayang kulit performance, accompanied by Wesleyan College's Gamelan Ensemble.

An integral part of a wayang kulit program, the gamelan orchestra started off the play, "Marriage of Irawan", with a long overture. The music, a continuous mélange of soft chimings and understated rhythms, took some getting used to, yet it was clearly of sophisticated style. Based on the musical system of "horizontal stratification", there are no sudden contrasts in Javanese gamelan of sound or tempo, rather the music appears to shimmer and flow, and struck this listener as very melodious. The Wesleyan gamelan, of the five-tone slendro tuning system, was made up primarily of gongs, xylophones, drums and string-bowed instruments, involving about twenty musicians.

The story itself began when the kayon, a leaf-shaped prop that signified change of scene (functioning like a curtain does for Western theatres) was removed, and the first of the puppets were placed in position. The dalang, puppeteer and story-teller, began his alternately singing-speaking narration as he moved the puppets in highly stylized gestures. Each puppet character has its own particular movements, colors and design; and Sumarsam, the dalang for this performance, has to know the individual stories and characters of more than two hundred puppets.

On Java, it is acceptable to watch the show from either side of the screen and, when offered the chance, the American audience responded accordingly. In front of the screen was the magic of cast shadows, as black filigree figures moved across the white square. Behind the screen sat Sumarsam, manipulating the brightly painted leather shapes or nodding to the gamelan orchestra to introduce a new character theme. Moreover, since a traditional wayang kulit performance lasts all night, the audience was encouraged to be informal; to arrange themselves comfortably in the aisles or to sample a cup of tea available in the lobby.

Although the particulars of the play were difficult for those unfamiliar with the Mahabharta saga to follow, some of the action required no translation — as when the hero had difficulty mounting his horse or when the protaganists engaged in fierce battle. At one point, using the grotesque clown puppets Bagong and Tjangik customary political commentators, Sumarsam provided comic relief as the two bantered in English about catching up on sleep with explicit reference to the recent presidential debate.

The wayang kulit, being presented in an abbreviated form, lasted almost five hours. By the time the last of the giants was slayed, the hero awarded his bride, and the final gong rung, many in what was left of the audience were asleep. Which was quite in keeping with traditional practice: for it is believed that whether the wayang kulit spectator is attentive or asleep, he is protected from evil the whole night through.

The O'Jays
Message in the Music
(Philadelphia International)

STAPLES
Pass It On (Warners)

This latest O'Jays' album, Message in the Music, is infinitely better than last semester's bomb, Family Reunion. The prime reasons for the turnaround seems the thankful snuffing of Gamble & Huff's gospelitis; i.e. the positive virtues of God, mother and the nuclear family. Oh well. The main difference between Reunion and Message is that Message has class, spirit and a demanding soulful drive. There are no less than four hit singles here of which the title cut and "Let Life Flow" are the biggies. (Particularly "Let Life Flow", ranking as one of the O'Jays' best performances.) "Desire Me" is nice and silky. A striking ballad, it is perfectly structured so that crooning beginnings and ending is bridged with a swing style section that's heaven to these ears. Like all Gamble & Huff products, Message in the Music has an emphasis on big production techniques. It both sounds good and is well executed by the MSFB studio band with all the class (well maybe not all) of Motown. Combined with rather excellent material, Message in the Music is destined to be one of the finer soul albums of the year. (B+)

Pass It On is the latest from the Staples, now on Warner Brothers Records. Produced and composed by Curtis Mayfield, one would expect greatness. Unfortunately, Curtis (and The Staples) aren't up for the challenge. Pass It On sinks in funky over-riff murkyness. A few cuts are good to be sure and Pass It On is certainly far from unlistenable, but one gets the feeling that for The Staples the thrill is indeed gone. (C)

The Sanford - Townsend Band
(Warner Brothers)

It used to be that the most distressing short-comings of debut rock albums were those problems which could be directly tied to the band's innocence and unfamiliarity with the studio, and just what it takes to wrestle a successful recording out of that electronic jungle. To alleviate this problem, record companies began sending their rookies to veteran producers in the hope that some of the experience of these producers would mesh with the vitality and freshness of the band, and of such a union a masterpiece would result. The debut album of the Sanford-Townsend Band is a prime example of this idea, and the results are uninspiring.

The premier faults of this album lie not so much with the playing of the band, but from the production work of Jerry Wexler and Barry Beckett. They have shrouded whatever vibrancy the band generates in a cloud of over-production and sterility in the typical Muscle Shoals fashion. There are repeated misusings of both horn sections, synthesizers, and other studio gimmicks, such as the synthesized intro to "Does it Have to be You". The outcome unfortunately is that the band becomes enveloped in this overproduction and is dominated by it.

Which is too bad because there seems to be some talent in the band. Lead singer John Townsend's voice is capable of registering both power and lyric quality. His vocal performance on "Smoke From a Distant Fire" render it by far the best track on the album. Yet after that song and perhaps the buoyantly pleasant "Lou" the compositions sit mired in their contrived slickness.

Instead of being a work of refreshing quality the Sanford-Townsend Band is just a workshop in production cliches.

—Sean Horgan

Eddie Kendricks
Goin' Up In Smoke
(Tamala)

Albert King
Albert
(Utopia)

Two more old-timers hit the disco trail, proving once again that there is indeed no greater love than the love of money. Not that these two don't deserve a few sawbucks. Blues guitarist-vocalist King has paid enough dues to join any union, and ex-Temptation tenor Kendricks was the main man on that group's many hits. But times change, and so does music. With that fact in mind King, who played most of his career in two-bit honky tonks, backed by bass and drums only (if he was lucky); goes hog-wild and gets himself keyboards, congas, a full brass section, strings, and a sextet of sweet and syrupy background ladies. Kendricks, who's a little more used to this sort of thing, follows suit, plucking most of his players from the ranks of MFSB-Salsoul Orchestra.

Now both men are ready to make an album of today's music — contemporary. Can't stand in the way of progress. Fortunately for these LPs, even the disco beat and surroundings can't hide the fact that Kendricks can sing and King can play as well, if not better, than his more well-known brother B.B.

Blues guitar is a special type, and one has to be in the right mood to listen appreciatively. Albert King is one of the best, and he allows himself plenty of room to stretch out between moronic choruses. Listen to the former, ignore the latter, and the album is listenable; at times enjoyable.

If there's a better male tenor in Soul than Eddie Kendricks, I've never heard him. He sounds as pretty as the girls, and seems to be enjoying his singing. This album is disco, but with the right voice (Theodore Pendergrass, Diana Ross) Disco can be pleasant. 'Goin' Up in Smoke' is just such an album, and worth it for Eddie Kendrick's voice alone.

by Greg Tarlin

JACKIE LOMAX
Living for Loving (Capitol)

I hadn't seen a record by this guy in about five years, but I felt the same anticipation of hearing it I'd had after first acquiring Frampton's Wind of Change, Springsteen's Asbury Park, and Rod Stewart's Gasoline Alley. Unfortunately, it didn't grab me like those albums did. And was starting to think my anticipation had failed me totally...until I heard myself singing the first song, "More," as I was dodging the people by the library one day. And the next day, the chorus of another song, "On the Road to be Free," started playing in my mind so I listened again.

Lomax makes no attempt to hide his influences. "On the Road to be Free," and others, has a Dave Mason feel to it. "California" brings to mind Little Feat's "Cold, Cold, Cold." (Coincidentally, the Feat's drummer, Ritchie Hayward, is on this one.) And the light, laid-back sound currently popular (Stevie Wonder-Boz Scaggs) comes through often.

The guitars and strings have a disco sound occasionally, but fortunately, Lomax's slide guitar, and some fine keyboards are the main instrumentation.

Lyrically, he takes no chances and makes no advances. With few exceptions, it's been said before. (He must have just fallen in love...six of the ten songs deal with love's pains and pleasures.)

The same can pretty much be said for the music. Though there are some good high points, it never quite soars. But it makes for pleasant background music if your main idea when playing it isn't to just listen to the music.

And it would be nice to hear "More" as I was on the never ending search for a decent song on the AM car radio.

FREDDIE HUBBARD
Windjammer
(Columbia)

LES McCANN
River High, River Low
(Atlantic)

For two weeks I've tried to sit down and write a concise, objective review of the three records listed above. I just can't be calm and collected about the off-handed attitude that the music industry (musicians included) takes toward putting out an album these days. Criteria such as will it make money, as opposed to does this sound good or does it show the musician's knowledge of his art, have always been in the forefront in pop, and rock and roll. Recently, however, this attitude is making its way through to many Jazz musicians. Jazz, no matter where it came from, what it is, or what we should really call it, has been characterized, since the big band era, by the musicians' stubborn refusal to be influenced by popular demand, where demand could compromise the quality of the emotions and sound. The three albums above reflect a change in heart that has been growing in the past few years. Many people are saying today that jazz is becoming popular today, but a redefinition of terms is needed. When a jazz musician, or for that matter, any musician goes out and plays disco music then he becomes a disco musician. If the same person plays uninspiring, lackluster music then he becomes a bad musician.

Freddie Hubbard's Windjammer, is a prime example of a cross-genre musician. Schooled in the Miles Davis tradition, he seemed to become enamored to the school of modal approach during the middle sixties and early seventies. (Milt Jackson's Sunflower is a good example). Recently, it seems that Hubbard has foregone his experience for commercial success. On Windjammer, he presents Feelings, and Dream Weaver, two songs that have already been tremendously successful, in an attempt to garner a little more pocket garnish. This whole album could go in a disco jukebox without seeming out of place. It is only after a couple of painful listenings that it begins to seem like Hubbard is not happy playing on this album. His solos are uninspired, and the album has a dead feel to it much unlike Eddie Harris, who for years has been doing the same type of commercialized material and seemingly enjoying himself.

Deodato's Very Together follows Hubbard's trend, although Deodato manages to retain a little of his Latin roots while pouring funky, disco lines and rhythm section over each cut like maple syrup. It's too bad, because sometimes good things like Danny Montrose's tenor solos start to happen but become lost in the backbeat. Like Windjammer, Very Together has too much happening which gives the listener an exhilarating feeling that sometimes borders on chaos.

Les McCann is really not a jazz musician, in the same sense as Hubbard once was, but his gospel and blues oriented music has, in the past, had an air of authenticity similar to most jazz music. River High, River Low however, does not reflect this authenticity. The cuts on this album seem as if they were dashed off in fifteen minutes. They have nothing new to offer and the lyrics are the most banal I have heard in a long time.

"You little cheat
You're obsolete
not to mention, you're incomplete..."

If the trend in the record industry continues to produce the quality of albums that has issued forth over the past couple of years, then disco music is going to become a household word. That's all right as far as it goes, as long as people call it what it is. What irks me some is the question of this disco music, that everybody calls jazz, obliterating the public awareness of the jazz musician's creativity and authenticity that has taken many years to reach even a small level of appreciation.

PAUL HORN
Altura de Sol (High Sun)
(Epic)

After Jazz Meets the Folk Song, Inside and In India, Horn, now exclusively a flautist, has at least established his credentials in the playing of other nation's musicks. Not that his attempts have always gelled, but this latest one has somehow come together in a very odd, intriguing way. Underline that: odd intriguing.

Egberto Gismonti, a Brazilian composer, composed all the pieces on the album and had an obvious hand in the production. This is no mere flirting with Brazilian rhythms, not a samba pasted carelessly onto a jazz head arrangement. The Horn-Gismonti fusion often owes more to the Brazilian side than to jazz. Then again, the music created is eclectically exceptional in most spots and the unusual combination of cabasa, mouth percussion, strings, occasional shouts and one fleet, solitary flute is sure to nudge enough auditory nerves for people to ask, "What is that?" Too bad you won't really know what to say. I don't know either.

There is no telling how many musicians played on this date for they are stupidly not named. Lushness creeps in now and then, but is quickly dispelled by an irresistably accelerated beat led by Horn's very clean flute and Gismonti's handclapping. The separate tracks fade into one another, alternately snappingly vital and gently melancholic. Description and evaluation are difficult, listening is easy. On that level, it is a pleasantly fascinating disc and far more than I bargained for.

THE STILLS-YOUNG BAND
Long May You Run
(Reprise Records)

I can't help but think back to when Steve Stills was my favorite member of the Buffalo Springfield. And when Neil Young was my teenage idol. I feel so misguided...

To the point, this album is an exercise in unmitigated pretensiousness. After all, these are a couple of heavy dudes, whose every utterance is worthy of worship. Take a line like, "We choose who we choose when we choose," (Stills). Is this divine guidance or a source for nasty misunderstandings?

The musical aspect reflects the continued and not subtle decline of Stephen Stills. His voice is wretchedly burned out, which causes all of his songs to come off weakly. His compositions for this album are hard to distinguish from one another, although some, particular "12-8 Blues (All the Same," are worse than others.

Oh yes, Neil Young is here too, still pumping out his simple songs. His easy-going composition, "Long May You Run" is the best song on the album no matter how many times you've heard it on the radio. It's about the famous hearse of Neil's that got caught in an L.A. Freeway jam in '65 and brought the Buffalo Springfield together.

The Stills-Young Band? There's no real collaboration. Just a couple of overprimed rock stars growing complacent, remaining pretentious. They have nothing over Crosby and Nash.

STEELY DAN
The Royal Scam
(ABC)

By David Santos

"The prognastigators of intelligent rock music"

"Donald Fagen and Walter Becker are living proof that intelligence is still regarded with suspicion in rock and roll". And such is the "dilemma" of Steely Dan. The manner in which they operate, their whole philosophy when it comes to creating the music they do seems to smack of snub-nosed, impersonal professionalism. Fagen and Becker don't help matters either. Their lack of touring, their lack of playing the rock star game in most ways separates them from the rest of the rock establishment. (Not to mention the rock critic axis who seem to think that intelligent, normal music is something to be frowned upon). The basic fact remains though that despite Steely Dan's detractors, the duo have always come up with great music.

Branded as the "Babes Of Productionland," the Dan are really unappreciated for what they really are: unchallenged purveyors of glistening rock music. There are no diamonds in the rough. Everything is snappy and shines with blinding light. As one of the few prognastigators of "intelligent rock music", they are perhaps one of the most literate and musically versed of the American bands. Fagen and Becker's lyrical outlook is deceptively icy, often dark and cynical, denoting a lack of emotion and sometimes spitefulness. However removed it all might seem, it's just a barrier that they have erected. Royal Scam's title track is one of their more colder than usual tunes, but repeated listenings reveals a humanness that's quite touching. Although it's clinched, the pair do not write silly love songs or the joys of afternoon delights.

These smartasses don't stop with the lyrics, Steely Dan's music is something to behold too. It's been said that they're just a mixture of musical styles. This I don't deny, in fact it's quite true. Fagen & Becker openly admit their influences, which by the way range from jazz, rock, classical to Latin. While they humbly get ideas from these sources, the end product is a fusion that's uniquely Steely Dan. You can't exactly pinpoint it, but it is and can only be Steely Dan.

Enough already. The Royal Scam is Steely Dan's numero uno album. (Mind you it had to compete with it's predecessor Katy Lied!) Like Katy Lied, it features a wide array of musicians who make up Steely Dan in the studio. Considering the team's philosophy towards recording their music, it comes as no surprise that it took another fifteen or twenty people to record The Royal Scam. Among the bruising lineup assembled for Scam are jazz vets Phil Woods (the man responsible for the lovely alto sax solos on "Doctor Wu") and Vic Feldman, rock session guitarists Larry Carlton and Elliot Randall, plus a cast too lengthy to elaborate on. What really matters is that they jell in their respective places and the magic of a Steely Dan cut is obvious.

Among the very best of the best is the title cut, "Caves Of Altamira", "Don't Take Me Alive", "Kid Charlemagne" and "Haitian Divorce". "The Royal Scam" is — for me — lyrically shattering. If you haven't read about it yet, it deals with the arrival of Puerto Rican immigrants to New York. Sung over sparse, yet effective music, it is a chilly but heartwarming essay on these bewildered souls. Coming from an area where immigrants are a substantial portion of the population, it is almost to real: "where the memory of the southern sky was clouded by the savage winter, every patron saint hung on the wall. Shared the room with twenty sinners. See the glory of the royal scam". "Haitian Divorce" traces the irony of the "perfect" marriage": "Babs and Charlie were in love they said. So in love the preacher's face turned red. Soon everybody knew the thing was dead." In "Don't Take Me Alive" tells of a criminal's realization that he's done wrong — "Here in this darkness. I know what I've done, I know all at once who I am". It goes on, the lyrical bite of Scam is full of detail and wisdom.

In the end, it's the music that pulls it's all together. As I said earlier, Dan draws from many sources. Jazz is their main influence though, "Kid Charlemagne", the unsuccessful single, moves with a rocking beat and never lets up. Tight, jazzish guitar solos tingle each bridge. "Haitian Divorce" is built up on a reggae derived riff, with some talkbox guitar that'll make Jeff Beck and Peter Frampton run for cover. Even more stunning guitar craft comes in "Don't Take Me Alive" with session axeman Elliot Randall's feedback blast. In "Caves Of Altamira", its choruses are draped with some great big band brass (Phil Woods delivers again!) that makes it more than just a good song. And to show Steely Dan is not without humor, "The Fez" — "no, no don't make me do it without the Fez on" — is a safe bet when it comes to cracking an all important smile. (Specifically for old stone faces like me)

The Royal Scam is already on my top five albums of '76 list and I seriously doubt if anything will bump it out. It may be somewhat calculated and definately perfectionist, but it's some of the best music being written today. Steely Dan, i.e. Becker & Fagen & a cast of thousands, is the best American rock band to emerge in the Seventies. To deny such excellence is sheer lunacy. (A)

TROOPER
Two for the Show
(Legend - MCA)

The members of Trooper are all proteges of BTO's Randy Bachman, a situation which is probably tantamount to being the protege of Genghis Khan. Their debut album, called, oddly enough, Trooper, was released last year to a rather exceptionally large amount of critical abuse. One listen to that disc was reason enougn to understand why. To put it as delicately as possible, it sucked.

Nevertheless, Trooper returns and shows marked improvement (hardly an arduous task) with Two for the Show. For one thing, they have added a keyboard player, Frank Ludwig, to the cast. His presence on piano helps round out the majority of cuts on this rock-oriented elpee. Although none of the tunes are overly original or imaginative, they rock on well. Best of these include "Loretta" (a direct ripoff of BTO, who are a direct rip-off of everybody) and "Gypsy Wheeler."

So, despite not being a really creative group, Trooper has just come out with an album which should please more than just a scant handful of folks. While the group needs to make more improvement still, theirs is not a totally lost cause. As far as a mark goes, I hereby grant Two for the Show a "hope for the future" BC.

—Ross Nerenberg

PFM
Chocolate Kings
(Asylum)

To put it quite simply, Chocolate Kings is PFM's most vital recording yet. Like a breath of fresh air, it blows away anything they've done before. Their three previous American albums, Photos of Ghosts, The World Became The World and Cook, were hopelessly lost in grandiose pretension. Arguably, the blame is usally the band's fault, but in PFM's case (and it's special circumstances), the fault could be equally divided with their former producers — Peter Sinfield (King Crimson) and Gregg Lake (EL&P). Chocolate Kings is a happy album. It sounds good and loose, unlike their first two murky studio records. There are no Gregorian chants here, just fine ensemble playing. Also, PFM have added a new vocalist — Bernado Lanzetti — who sings somewhat in the gravel tones of Rod Stewert and Roger Chapman.

Material-wise, PFM have shored themselves up admirably. The curiously titled "Out Of The Roundabout" is a personal favorite of mine, eloquently kicked off by Franco Mussida's delicate acoustic guitar tapestry. With the exception of the title cut (a rock and roll number at that!), Chocolate Kings is all long cuts which have been carefully constructed. Excessive soloing, the death of many a good progressive rock group, has thankfully disappeared. In its place is spirited ensemble playing, the kind which turned me on to PFM in the first place. (Specifically — 1974, in which PFM blew Peter Frampton and J. Geils off the stage).

Seeing as how so much of the progressive rock axis is dying off, PFM's return is a good sign of rebirth. Along with the likes of the rejuvenated Genesis and the reformed Van Der Graaf Generator, PFM can start a renewed assault on America. With stuff as good as this, victory is assured. (A-)

Third alumni may join House

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

Perhaps the most effective way to get the Massachusetts legislature in Boston to listen to complaints from Amherst is to get alumni elected to office, something that has been tried in the past with varying degrees of success.

David M. Bartley, former speaker of the Massachusetts House, and Amherst representative James G. Collins both once trod this campus, and they soon may be joined by a third graduate in representing UMass in high places.

Michael Morrissey of Quincy went a long way towards becoming one of the youngest representatives in the Massachusetts House by defeating one of the oldest, William Brett, in the Sept. 8 Massachusetts primary. Brett, who had served in the house for 18 years, and was chairperson of the Urban Affairs Committee, was defeated by more than 700 votes of the 3,898 that were cast.

Morrissey, 22, graduated in May with a degree in history and a teachers certification. But he is best known for his voice – which cackled over the air waves for two years while he was the dispatcher for the Student Senate Transit Service.

Morrissey, like so many other Massachusetts teachers, found himself without work after graduation. That is not the reason, however, that he got into the race for the third Norfolk District seat.

"I thought about getting involved while I was still in school," he said. "I looked at my opponent's voting record; I found that a lot of people were very unhappy."

Morrissey still has to overcome the problem of beating an entrenched encumbent. He thought that might have been an advantage for him. "Being in office so long made the guy out of touch with the people."

It was something far more tangible, however, that allowed Morrissey to spring his upset. He and 21 members of his family were knocking on doors for two months before the election, trying to meet people first hand and find out what was troubling them.

Morrissey was not an unknown entity, because of his large family and because he has been active in the controversy over the construction of the North Quincy High School.

It was to his advantage too, that he was without a job – because he could devote his energies full time to his campaign. Brett, on the other hand, decided to rest on the laurels of his incumbency, which proved to be his undoing.

Morrissey did not try to appeal only to his natural constituency of young voters, although he did enjoy some support from them. He had his grandparents out campaigning for him, and he said that a lot of his support came from middle aged people.

"People had their doubts as to whether I could win," he said. "But I always believed I could win. The more people that become interested, the more confidence you get."

Morrissey is not by any means a shoe-in for the November election, although he stands a very good chance to win it. He is running as a Democrat in a district where more than 50 per cent of the voters are registered Democrats. And, as Morrissey said himself, the toughest part of his fight is over.

"It is a big boost to beat the incumbent," he said, "and we'll continue to knock on doors, just as we did in the primary."

Octubafest today by FAC

By BOB DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

Members of the UMass community will be able to experience the unique atmosphere of a German beer garden today as the first annual "Octubafest" commences at 3:30 p.m. by the Fine Arts Center reflecting pools.

According to Max Culpepper, professor of low brass instruments and assistant director of the UMass Bands, the concept of an "Octubafest" is new to the University, but it is a traditional event in many parts of the United States. The event was originated many years ago by Harvey Phillips, one of the finest tuba players of the world, in order to attain some exposure for the much neglected tuba. Culpepper said of Phillips, "He's Mr. Tuba in the world."

The "Octubafest" will feature music arranged for and performed by tubas. Refreshments including beer, soft drinks, and "Octubawurst" sandwiches will be on sale. Admission to the event is free. All proceeds will be donated toward a tuba scholarship.

The "Octubafest" is an idea that Culpepper brought to UMass with him when he became a faculty member this fall. According to Culpepper, he thought that such an event would be a good way for many people to have a good time and also, an excellent way by which to establish a tuba scholarship.

According to Culpepper, UMass currently has 150 music majors and of them, only two are concentrating their studies on tuba. This deficiency creates a severe problem since the tuba is of utmost importance to any band.

Culpepper conceived the idea of a tuba scholarship because, "I'm trying to build the area for which I am responsible."

Culpepper arrived at UMass from Cherry Hill, N.J. where he was employed as a high school band director and administrator. The bands that he conducted in Cherry Hill received much acclamation on a national basis.

He attended Trenton (N.J.) State College where he earned a bachelor of science and a master of arts in music education. Culpepper has performed as euphonium (tenor tuba) soloist with the Cherry Hill Wind Symphony and also as first trombonist with both the Garden State Philharmonic and the Haddonfield (Pa.) Symphony.

The "Octubafest" will be punctuated by many key performances. The UMass Um-Pah Band, composed of many faculty and administration members, will perform from 4:30 until 5 p.m. A world premiere performwnce of compositions by two Philadelphia-area arrangers, Steven Schaffner and Russell Hill, is scheduled for 5 p.m.

Schaffner will conduct his arrangement of "Locksmith's Apprentice", an obscure poem and melody by Johann Conrad Grubel (1800) and a medley of variations of the old German song, "Ach Du Leiber Augustine."

Hill has composed a set of variations on "Three Blind Mice" scored for four euphoniums and four tubas.

The Glassboro (N.J.) State College Tuba Ensemble, a group of 11 tubas, will perform their own arrangement of the "1812 Overture", under the direction of virtuoso tubist, Owen Metcalf, at 5:30 p.m. The group will then return at 6:30 p.m. to perform their arrangement of two classical compositions, entitled "Light William Underture."

The Music Department is sponsoring a composition contest for musical arrangements of college songs, German songs, and beer commercials. The winning arrangement will be determined by the audience at the "Octubafest" with the winning composer receiving a beer stein as a trophy.

The Grand Finale of the "Octubafest" is scheduled for 6:45.

Cultural Center is triumph for the Hill

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Assistant Dean of Students O.C. Bobby Daniels stated in a memo to the Collegian yesterday that "the decision to allocate $2700 for the Third World Cultural Central (in Orchard Hill) was far more than a victory for Third World students — it was a victory for the OHAG governance model as well as for the entire residential area."

Daniels, who describes his job as "nurturing the human environment", was present at OHAG's Sept. 28th meeting, at which the much-discussed Third World budget was passed.

Daniels describes the outcome as a "triumph in race relations."

"As a University community, we are both indebted and challenged by the democratic process demonstrated by OHAG and its residents," Daniels stated.

Daniels credited Debbie Love, President of OHAG, Third World coordinators, and white and Third World students who "candidly interacted with one another" for the successful meeting.

He described the meeting as "a model for democratic governance worthy of emulation by other area governments."

Daniels viewed the decision as a "first step" but a "fundamental one." He challenges OHAG to "continue in this democratic growth process."

When asked if he felt the race problem had been solved in OHAG Daniels said that the group had "laid the groundworks for the mechanism for future problem solving."

OHAG President Deborah Love, when asked to comment on the statement said, "I appreciate the positive attitude expressed."

Love stated that she is looking forward to anyone who lives off the hill to come and help deal with the minority — majority situation.

"We shouldn't be fooled that all the problems are over," Love said, "This problem is certainly not unique to OHAG."

Daniels described the problems as being that "when majority rule is exercised strictly on the basis of race or sex, such a government is oppressive and reeks with the stench of racism and sexism."

Daniels congratulated OHAG for coping with this universal problem and expressed a belief that the students who are participating in OHAG will benefit from their "interaction with fellow Americans who are racially different from themselves."

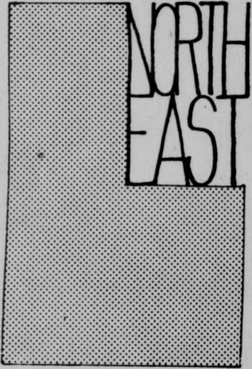
The funding and support of rotating coffee houses among dorms versus permanent coffee houses in the Quad was the topic of much debate at the Northeast Area Government (NEAG) meeting in Mary Lyon House last night.



Dwight House has requested funding from NEAG for their coffee house to be held tonight.

Dan Smies, coffee house coordinator in Hamlin House, would like to see the establishment of a coffee house, such as the one held in Hamlin this month, on a regular basis.

"Coffee houses work, as long as they are in one location. Rotation of the coffee houses to different dorms will not work," Simes said. "People will not bother to find out where the next one will be held and attendance will drop off."

Representatives from Dwight and other dorms in the Quad have proposed that the coffee houses be held on a rotating basis, so that all the dorms that wish to put on a coffee house will be able to get funding from NEAG.

Marcie Rose, representative from Leach House, proposed that an area committee for the administration of all Northeast area coffee houses be formed, to be a "central core" that all dorms could use for assistance in organizing the functions.

The body voted in favor of funding the Dwight House coffee house to be held tonight. The group also voted that they would supply the funds on the assumption that a committee for the administration of area coffee houses be set up and funded by NEAG.

In other action, NEAG President John Weisse announced the establishment of a Northeast area ride board in the area of the Worcester Dining commons known as "the barracks," where breakfasts are served.

The board has been donated by the Dining Commongs. NEAG will be responsible for the upkeep of the board.

Richard Garett, who prefers to be called "Arps", announced the "First Annual, Oh Holy Cow There's A Lobster Loose, Alright Get Nekkid, Ooh Wow, Midnight, Yip Yow, Party" to be held in the Quad tonight at midnight. It is a B.Y.O.B., good time for any one interested in attending, according to Garett.

The next NEAG meeting will be held on Oct. 6 in the main lounge of Mary Lyon House and is open to interested residents in the Northeast Area.

BOG sees Cape Cod lounge as alternative study space

By SAM JUDSON

The Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors yesterday discussed possible alternatives for study space within the complex, should they vote to allow a check-cashing facility to be built in the study space ajacent to the Music Library on the Campus Center concourse.

New check facility necessitates move

The board, which advises Campus Center employees on matters of policy, requested William Taylor and his interior design class look into the renovation of the Cape Cod lounge in the Student Union as one such possibility.

The new check-cashing facility has been in discussion by the board since last semester. Campus Center Manager Bud Wilkes has said that the new facility, to replace the present one in the Student Union, would shorten lines and increase security.

According to preliminary plans, the facility will include six windows, occupying about 1900 sq. ft. of space in what is now the Reading Room.

In discussing the renovation of the Cape Cod lounge, Dean of Students William F. Field said that many groups are expressing a need for lockable space somewhere in the complex. He suggested the purchase of lockable cabinets which could be assigned these groups.

Wilkes told the board he has issued a work request to the Physical Plant to determine if the work on the facility can be completed by Jan. 1.

In other action, the board decided to send a letter to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery requesting bids, which commerical banks have sent to UMass for establishing a branch on campus, be formally rejected.

Although Dean Field and the board have publicly stated that they are against a bank being established in the complex, at the present time, the chancellor's office has not rejected the bids.

The board is also seeking a manager for the Graphic Print Shop.

"The job would require experience as well as creativity, and the manager would be responsible for marketing details and advertising for the Campus Center," Field said.

UEC organizes voice

By BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Economics Council (UEC) has begun to organize among all economics students toward achieving a voice in matters concerning personnel and policy in that department.

Recently the group presented Norman D. Aiken, chairperson of the Economics department, with a list of three demands: to develop a priority list to be used in the hiring of faculty, to achieve a student vote on the personnel committee, and to reorganize the undergraduate advising procedure.

Greg Tarpinian, spokesperson for the group, said the group told the Collegian the "groups purpose is to organize undergrads to achieve an effective voice in all decision making bodies which determine policies in the economics department."

According to Tarpinian, the UEC was organized last spring over the issues of student discontent with economics course listings, the lack of awareness in dealing with racism and sexism and the lack of student control in the department.

"The department is in dire need of restructuring," said Tarpinain, "Now that some tenured faculty positions have opened up, students have no voice in how these positions should be filled."

Bill Bluestien, another UEC member, said, "We feel the concept of the economics department is still dynamic and stimulating, but better communication is needed between undergrads, grads and faculty so the department can fulfill its potential."

UEC has also begun a petition in all economics classes which seeks support for the grievances presented to Aitken.

"In one day we got 500 signatures," Tarpian said.

UEC has been holding meetings every Monday at 3:30 p.m. in Thompson 100. All economics students are invited.

Office mixes experiences

By ROBERT LESLIE
Collegian Staff

The new head of the UMass Office of Internships is a friendly, outgoing woman who enjoys her job because "it provides an opportunity for integration of knowledge in two different environments, the academic community as well as the work career community."

Dr. Emma M. Cappelluzzo, who teaches three courses in addition to her office job, considers it unique to be able to integrate the academic experience with the off-campus experience, while at the same time developing career choices.

Dr. Cappelluzzo, originally of Everett, Mass., was graduated from Boston University and went on to do her graduate work in sociology and anthropology at the University of Arizona. As part of her graduate responsibilities, she ran a student internship program between the University of Arizona and the Arizona State Anthropological Museum. She then went on to run an exchange program between students in Arizona and students in Mexico. She did 10 years of work in this field and as a result, the Northern Pueblo Indians of New Mexico annually host students from UMass for a semester.

In addition to her duties at the University, Dr. Cappelluzzo is also the town moderator of Wendell, Mass., where she now makes her home. This is an elected position and the job entails, among other things, running the town meetings. She works her own farm in Wendell, and in her spare time she enjoys reading and writing poetry and oil painting. She considers herself a feminist, she teaches a Women's Studies course, and she said she advocates affirmative action policies.

Although she is the head of the Internship Program, she is not the only voice in regard to internship policy. Two other faculty members, Warren Schumacher of the Home Economics dept., and Charles Moran of the English dept., in addition to Dr. Cappelluzzo comprise the policy board. This board has the final say as to who receives internships.

The staff of the Office of Internships, which is made up of undergraduates, graduate students and two program co-ordinators, Joe Sullivan and Ellen Wolff, has only been together for one month, after the University Year for Action and Outreach Programs merged.

Cappelluzzo says, "They're the best group of people ever put together."

The office, which has the largest file of agencies for placement in the area, currently has 175 interns out on the program. Half of the interns currently in the field are developing a media presentation of the internship program, in an attempt to show visually, through slides, movies and video tapes, the combination of theory and practice in the interns' varied programs. The other half are doing written evaluations.

'Mass. ERA: Who Needs it?'

By ALEXANDRA CONANT
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts State E.R.A.: Who Needs It?" was the topic of a panel discussion he co-sponsored by the Committee to Ratify the Massachusetts State E.R.A. and the Amherst League of Women Voters last night at the Amherst Junior High School.

The Massachusetts State Equal Rights Amendment states that a person can not be discriminated against because of sex, race, color, creed or national origin.

Lucy Benson, former secretary of Human Services in the state discussed "Why We Need a State E.R.A.".

Benson said, "Women have made a lot of progress toward ending discrimination through law suits, but it has been an inch by inch road. We need E.R.A. to speed up the process."

G. Roslyn Johnson, assistant professor of Law at Suffolk University Law School, spoke on "E.R.A. and the Family". She talked about the effect of E.R.A. on child support, alimony, custody, maritial property and the inheritance of property after the death of a spouse.

As it stands now, a man is not required to support his wife if they are still married; it is only when the marriage is ended that the state steps in.

Johnson said, "E.R.A. will not take child support away from the divorced woman. What will happen, is that she must prove that she needs the money.

"The most important thing to remember about E.R.A." said State Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst), also in attendance, "is that it will not force us to change but will be a tool to bring about equal rights for both sexes." Collins gave a talk on "E.R.A., Education and Employment."

Although not originally scheduled to speak, Stop E.R.A. Attorney Margaret Mahoney was given time to present the anti-E.R.A. case.

Asked about E.R.A. and abortion Mahoney said it is that desire of some femininists to have complete reproductive freedom, so they can have the legal abortion period extended from 6 to 9 months.

Those who were unable to attend the meeting but who are interested in the E.R.A. are asked to contact Pepper Peterson at 549-6545 in the Amherst area

Candidate for Senate

Socialist challenges

By STEVE ANDERSON
Collegian Staff

Carol Henderson Evans, the Socialist Workers candidate for U.S. senator in Massachusetts, spoke to an audience of 15 persons last night in the Campus Center on her platform. She is opposing incumbent Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and Republican candidate Micheal Robertson.

Evans began her talk by expressing her dissatisfaction with the Ford-Carter debates, saying that "in reality they are the 'Great Agreements' " and not the "Great Debates". She also said both the Ford and the Carter campaigns are run by people who don't represent the majority.

Evans said she feels it is time to turn the priorities of the country around to meet the needs of the majority instead of the minority. She said the majority are the workers of this country.

"As the economic crisis deepens, working people are bearing the brunt of it."

Evans said she believes that Americans should take the wealth and power out of the hands of the rich and put it into the hands of the workers.

"There is no reason why anyone should be out of work when we need so many things in this country. The Socialist Workers party tries to reach people and show that the real power is in their hands," said Evans.

On the subject of busing, Evans said she feels that someone with the national prominence and position of her opponent, Sen. Kennedy, could play an important role in enforcing the desegregation law. She suggested that busing is the only way that Blacks can get an equal education.

Evans is a staunch supporter of the Equal Rights Amendment and though her opponents also support the E.R.A., they do so "unenthusiastically."

Evans is "outraged" by the fact that it will take a constitutional amendment to insure half of the population of equal rights. She also said that the United Stated should take the hundred billion dollars allocated for the defense budget, and use it for public works projects to put the unemployed back to work.

"The worst of everything in this society goes to the minorities and the only way to help yourself is to help them," she said.

Evans talk last night was sponsored by the Young Socialist Alliance. Anyone wishing to join the alliance may write RSO Box 324, or call Sally Rees at 527-0316. They also have an information table on the Campus Center concourse.

Faculty bargaining hearings begin Oct. 13

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Hearings by the Massachusetts State Labor Relations Commission for establishing a collective bargaining unit for 1600 UMass graduate student employees, will begin Oct. 13 at the Commission's office, according to a spokesperson there. If formed, the bargaining unit will be the first union for graduate students in the state.

Joan A. Quinlan, employed by the commission, yesterday said that the commission has scheduled six hearing days, from Oct. 13 to Oct. 15 and from Nov. 3 to Nov. 5.

The Graduate Student Employees Union, formed last November, petitioned the commission last spring on forming a collective bargaining unit for graduate students employed as research assistants and associates, teacher assistants and associates, and interns at the University. Forty per cent of students holding such positions signed the petition presented to the commission.

The commission will decide, on the basis of the hearings, whether or not students with these positions are "employees" of the University. University officials have said they are not.

According to Sherry L. Flashman, vice-president of the graduate's union, all students filling these positions are paid a weekly salary and can have a tuition waiver if they receive a salary of $900 per semester or $1800 per year.

Full-time research and teacher assistants receive a salary of $3600 per year, while full-time research and teaching associates generally are paid $4,000, although this varies since their salaries are derived from salaries of faculty members on sabatical, according to Flashman.

Assistants work under a professor, helping in research and classes, while associates conduct their own research and their own classes, Flashman said.

One issue which the grad student union is concerned with, is budgetary cutbacks since few research assistants and associates are being hired and the number of full-time teaching assistants and associates hired is being cut.

"Mostly part-time positions are being offered," said Flashman. Because of this, employed graduate students are not eligible for tuition waiver.

Concerning the movement toward a collective bargaining unit for faculty here and at the Boston campus, Flashman said through informal contact with the two groups vying to represent the faculty there should be no conflict.

McColgan wins recount

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

A Victory cake that has been in Edward A. McColgan's freezer since the Sept. 14 state primary found a purpose at McColgan's Northampton headquarters last night when the former state representative heard news that he had won the first district state democratic congressional nomination after a final recount.

McColgan lost the nomination to former Executive Councillor Edward M. O'Brien by 29 votes in the original count. The recount found McColgan the winner by 11, with a 20 vote descrepancy in West Stockbridge pushing him over the top.

According to a spokesperson at McColgan's headquarters, the city clerk in West Stockbridge "apparently makes her 5's like 3's", which is why members of the O'Brien and McColgan staffs, in addition to the state election board, thought a 57 McColgan tally in that town was a 37 vote tally.

O'Brien said yesterday "We might be protesting the rulings of town registrars in various towns. There are a lot ballots we're questioning."

McColgan people said that O'Brien's staff wants a recount of the Warwick vote. That vote went 20-15 in McColgan's favor with no blank ballots.

The verification of the recount must be done by Secretary of State Paul Guzzi; which should come sometime today, according to a McColgan spokesperson.

Teachers honored at awards ceremony

Six outstanding classroom teachers were presented 1976 Distinguished Teachering Awards yesterday afternoon at a presentation in the Campus Center auditorium.

Honored in the ceremonies were three faculty members and three graduate students, with each receiving a $1000 stipend and a certificate of commendation. Acting Provost and Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs Dean Alfange made the presentation.

The award winners were selected by a committee of students, alumni and faculty.

The three faculty members are English Professor Normand Berlin, botany Professor Robert Livingston and comparative literature Assistant Professor Elizabeth Martin. The graduate students are Stephen Austin, educational coordinator in the Sylvan Residence area; Stephen Bauer, teaching assistant in rhetoric; and Dennis T. Brown, teaching assistant in zoology.

Dr. Berlin was graduated from New York University, received his master's degree at Columbia and his Ph.D at the University of California at Berkeley in 1964. He came to UMass in 1965.

Berlin, who is presently teaching Shakespeare, traditional and modern drama and Eugene O'Neill, said last night at his home that he was especially pleased because the award came from students and that he found pleasure in "making students realize that Shakespeare is the man."

Dr. Livingston, who came to UMass in 1950, was described as "a devoted teacher who loves his field, people and teaching." "Not everyone liked botany," said one of his former students, "but I can't remember anyone not liking Dr. Livingston."

Dr. Martin came to the University in September, 1971. She received her B.A. from Northwestern University and earned both her master's and her Ph.D. at the University of California at Berkeley.

Austin was described as "deeply committed to his teaching — to maintaining its high quality, to continually improving its effectiveness and to meeting the needs of his students." Austin received his B.A. at the University of California at Berkeley in 1968.

Brown received his B.A. at the State University of New York College of Environmental Science and Forestry in 1974. He was cited for "excellent rapport with his students" and being "able to relate any idea or subject in such a way that everyone will understand."

EMT course results

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"Is there a doctor in the house?" It's an old joke but for residents of Cance, John Quincy Adams and some other dorms, it calls for a new answer, for when the call is raised, an Emergency Medical Technician just may answer.

An Emergency Medical Technician EMT, is taught to treat the injured at the scene of an accident with basic first aid equipment and to provide basic life support during the transportation to the hospital if necessary.

An EMT course was first offered at UMass last semester as an 81 hour, six credit course that met twice weekly, teaching people how to give immediate first aid before the ambulance or doctor arrived.

Thirty people took the course taught by Susan Roundy, an executive of the Massachusetts Red Cross and Heart Association.

Two dorm-based EMTs are Ron Coderre, a 21-year-old senior finance major who lives in Cance, and Beth Leinberry, a chemical engineering major who lives in JQA.

For the last four years, Coderre worked as a lifeguard at Miles Standish State Forest near Plymouth.

"Two summers ago, I encountered two heart attacks, a broken ankle, a dislocated shoulder and a man with a concussion and broken jaw. Since I only had a standard Red Cross first aid course which didn't go into any depth with these injuries, there wasn't much that I could do," he said.

Coderre checked with the University Health Services and found the EMT course was what he was looking for.

"I've been trained to treat and transport any injured or sick person. About the only things I can't do are give an intrevenous or administer drugs. Para-medics can do these things with a doctors permission," he said.

Coderre explained that during the course he learned how to stop bleeding, care for diabetics, perform amputations, and splint broken backs if the need arose.

"Quite a bit of time was spent learning cardio pulmanary resuscitation, which is artificially ventilating the lungs and circulating the blood by means of

1800 at Holly Near benefit

Over 1800 people attended a benefit concert by Holly Near and Jeff Langley at the Fine Arts Center concert hall last night, the proceeds of which will go to the Native Americans Solidarity Committee.

Near, before an enthusiastic, near-sellout crowd, performed songs from her three albums on Redwood Records. Her songs, are a mixture of political, humanistic and feminist themes, such as "Broken Promises", which concerns Lord Jeffrey Amherst's donation of small-pox infested blankets to the Inidans.

Accompanied on the keyboards by Langley Near both entertained and educated her audience.

The event was co-sponsored by the Native American Solidarity Committee and the Commuter Collective. Tickets were $2.

Prior to the concert, the committee presented a film about the plight of American Indians today.

The concert began at about 7:20 p.m., and ran until 10:45 p.m. with a 15 minute intermission.

Near was given a standing ovation after her final number, a sing-along.

This marks the second concert in two nights for the Fine Arts Center. On Wednesday night, Leotyne Price performed, and tonight, the County Basie orchestra led by Clark Terry, will perform.

Students, residents joined in concern

By JUAN ROSARIO
Staff Correspondent

UMass students, Puerto Rican residents of Northampton and members of the community have shown their support of the Puerto Rican women and their children who were recently threatened by an armed man in that city.

Last Thursday, approximately 40 persons witnessed the first testimonies of two of the children and one woman in Northampton District Court, in the case involving the Commonwealth vs. White. The two children, 9 and 12 years old, described in detail the incident in which their lives were threatened.

The large number of supporters that went to court was a very important element in guaranteeing that the rights of the Puerto Rican women are respected, according to a spokesperson.

According to Puerto Rican community supporters, all Third World and progressive University students are urged to continue their support by the women.

Mission: UMass

The UMass Sport Parachute Club vaulted into the limelight yesterday with their descent onto the UMass campus.

From an altitude of 5000 ft., eight men descended in three waves, touching down in front of the Whitmore administration building. The group brought classes that were being held in nearby Herter Hall to the windows, as the colorful parachutes came into view.

To many residents of Southwest, falling objects are not a novelty. However, the UMass community has never before been witness to an event of this magnitude. Many UMass officials "put their necks in the noose" to make this event possible because of the hazards involved. They now know that it was worth the risk.

The purpose of this daring raid? To attract attention and recruit new members to the UMass Sport Parachute Club. The result? A smashing success. As one member of the club put it, "Just tell them anytime they want me to drop in, to give me a call!"

Ford- 'clear conscience'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford said yesterday he is confident a federal investigation into the use of campaign funds in his old congressional district will clear him of any wrongdoing, and "my conscience is clear."

"No money ever went to me personally in Kent County Michigan or anywhere else," Ford said.

"It's more important to me personally that it be cleared up because I'm very proud of my record of personal integrity," Ford told an Oval Office news conference. "It's more important to me than the election.

"I can say with complete confidence," he added, "when the investigation is completed I would be free of any allegations that I've read about... My conscience is clear."

Watergate Special Prosecutor Charles Ruff has opened an investigation into the use of money donated to the Republican treasury in Ford'd home district of Kent County, Mich., while he was a congressman.

The money came from maritime unions. Ruff presumably is probing how the money was spent and if any was diverted for Ford's personal use.

Ford said he hoped the allegations would be resolved as "soon as possible."

Carter- 'really cheated'

BOSTON (UPI) — Jimmy Carter, campaigning among both the unemployed and youthful college students, accused President Ford yesterday of having "vetoed two-million jobs" through Republican economic policies.

Returning to a state which dealt Carter an early serious blow by voting for Sen. Henry M. Jackson in the Democratic primary, Carter was greeted by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., Boston Mayor Kevin H. White and former U.S. House Speaker John McCormack.

He was loudly cheered at Logan International Airport, at a meeting with Massachusetts Democrats in an East Boston motel and at Boston College where a sizeable number of students waved President Ford banners saying "Ford will win."

Carter's two-day New England campaign swing began with an assault on Ford's economic policies at the Buffalo, N.Y., airport and at a breakfast with unemployed electrical workers at suburban Tonawanda, N.Y.

After the breakfast, Carter walked across a street to a Western Electric plant which is now being phased out and blasted Ford and former President Richard Nixon.

"This time we really got cheated," he said. "We got two for the price of one and I'm afraid the second one, as far as people's lives are concerned, is even worse than the first."

Ford signs two vet disability bills

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday signed legislation giving nearly 5 million veterans increased disability and pension benefits to offset the higher cost of living. He said they served the nation in wartime and "it is only right that we serve them well in time of peace."

Ford, speaking at a White House ceremony before more than 100 guests, signed two bills.

One provided an 8 per cent hike in monthly benefit rates, effective yesterday, for veterans receiving disability compensation or to surviving spouses and children of veterans whose deaths were service connected.

Senate overrides veto

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Senate joined the House yesterday in an overwhelming override of President Ford's veto of a $56.6 billion measure funding the Departments of Labor and HEW, putting the measure immediately into law.

It was the 11th time in 27 attempts that Congress has overturned a Ford veto. The President has vetoed 59 bills since taking office two years ago.

The bill exceeded President Ford's budget request by $4 billion, an amount Sen. Carl Curtis, R-Neb., called "quite significant. It's not a small matter."

Democratic vice presidential nominee Sen. Walter Mondale, D-Minn., returned to the Senate to vote for the override. His Republican counterpart Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., was absent.

Taxes collected in Conn. hospital

LITCHFIELD, Conn. [AP] — Litchfield's 71-year-old tax collector refused again Thursday to turn over the keys to her office or reveal the safe combination. Selectmen decided to permit her to collect taxes in her hospital room.

Isabel C. Rylander, the tax collector, was hospitalized last week after suffering a broken hip and wrist in a fall. Since then she has refused to lift the lock-out, causing delays in payments and headaches for taxpayers trying to renew their automobile registrations.

The selectmen at an emergency meeting agreed to allow Mrs. Rylander to collect the taxes from her bedside at Hungerford Hospital in Torrington and later at her home with the help of an office clerk.

The selectmen chose that route after originally planning to seek a court order to force the woman to surrender the office keys and the safe combination.

"She's perfectly capable of stamping the bills right in her bed," said First Selectman Theodore Litwin.

Meanwhile, residents have been turning in payments to the town clerk who has kept them in that office's safe.

The largest complication, though, involves persons trying to pay motor vehicle property taxes.

Mushroom madness

REDMOND, Wash. [AP] — What do you do when word gets out that your front yard is full of magic mushrooms and the psychedelic kiddie corps shows up?

"What's growing in my front yard is not funny. They are loaded with acid," insists a 35-year-old woman, who asked not to be identified.

"Kids began coming to my door stoned," she said. "I began to think there must be more to this than met the eye. I checked around and found out they were eating them to get high."

However, Gerald Yager, a local police detective, says 20 pounds of Mrs. X's mushrooms have been run through a state laboratory and none was found to be hallucinogenic.

Just one little thing

DOVER, England [UPI] — Stephan Brown, 28, of Northampton, forgot one little thing when he climbed into a double-decker bus out of curiosity at Dover yesterday.

He forgot it had an upper deck.

Brown's curiosity cost him about $25.50 a yard.

He was fined $124.50 for stealing a bus and ordered to pay $680 toward the cost of repairing it.

Brown told a magistrate's court he arrived from the continent, found he had two hours to kill before a train to London, and climbed into the doubledeck bus "out of curiosity."

Complaints dismissed

SPRINGFIELD [UPI] — Complaints were dismissed yesterday against three persons charged in an alleged conspiracy to assassinate Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, (D-Mass.), earlier this month.

The charges were dropped by Springfield District Court Judge George Bregianes because of "insufficient evidence to warrant further action."

Seabrook construction halt

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The appeals board of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission yesterday ordered construction on the nation's newest atomic power plant, at Seabrook, N.H., to halt as of Oct. 8.

The board voted 2-1 to halt construction by the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire at the request of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution.

The coalition argued Seabrook, whose construction permit was issued July 7, should be included in the NRC's Aug. 13 temporary moratorium on granting of new construction permits or operating licenses for nuclear power plants.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission ordered the moratorium following a federal appeals court decision July 21 saying the NRC had not dealt adequately with the question of how to dispose of radioactive wastes.

Clare Miles, spokesman for the NRC, said the full commission could act between now and Oct. 9 to review, overturn or further extend the appeals board's decision.

Kissinger warns-

Don't fuel flames of racial hatred

UNITED NATIONS, [AP] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger warned non-African powers today against "fueling the flames of war and racial hatred" in southern Africa.

In a report on his recent shuttle diplomacy, Kissinger told the 31st General Assembly that outside interference "would make a mockery of Africa's hard-won struggle for independence from foreign domination."

Kissinger's remarks appeared aimed at the Soviet Union. In a speech to the assembly Tuesday, Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko scorned "political gimmickry and financial handouts" by which he said national liberation movements in southern Africa were being diverted.

Kissinger said Africa "has before it the prize for which it has struggled so long — the opportunity for Africans to shape a future of peace, justice, racial harmony and progress."

Beyond that, he said, it has a chance to pull back from the brink of war.

Denying that the United States intends to stake out its own sphere of influence, Kisinger siad, "there may be some countries who see a chance for advantage in fueling the flames of war and racial hatred."

"But," he went on, "they are not motivated by concern for the peoples of Africa, or for peace. And if they succeed they could deem opportunities that might never return.

Specifically, Kissinger reported progress toward a Namibia independent of South Africa "within a fixed, short time limit" and black majority rule in Rhodesia within two years. In South Africa itself, Kissinger said, an end to racial segregation is inevitable.

Black guerrillas in Namibia, a South Africa territory also known as South-West Africa, have been fighting for autonomy and black majroity rule.

Kissinger's wide-ranging review of world problems was peppered with criticism of the Soviet Union. There appeared to be no paramount new U.S. proposals, although he forecast that a comprehensive program for nuclear controls to be announced shortly by President Ford will have as its goal restoring the atom "as a boon and not a menace to mankind."

In the economic area, Kissinger said the United states proposes increased aid and other remedial measures for nations facing severe debt burdens and will advance new ideas for expanded cooperation in energy.

In assessing Soviet behavior around the globe, Kissinger registered evident irritation with "crude attempts to distort the purposes of diplomacy and to impede hopeful progress toward peaceful solutions to complex issues."

Apparently referring to Angola, where a Marxist faction won control with Soviet arms and Cuban troops, Kissinger said the United States is disturbed "by recent instances of military intervention to tip the scales in local conflicts in distant continents."

He said the future of mankind requires coexistence, but the United States "will insist that restraint be reciprecal, not just in bilateral relations but around the globe." Then he added: "There can be no selective detente."

On the Middle East, Kissinger told the assembly the United States "is prepared" to participate in an 'early resumption' of the work of the Geneva Conference.

The conference, under the co-chairmanship of the United States and the Soviet Union, convened for two days in december 1973 to seek a settlement in the region but has not met since.

"We think a preparatory conference might be useful for a discussion of the structure of future negotiations, but we are open to other suggestions," Kissinger said.

He said step-by-step negotiations over the past three years, have brought the Middle East "closer to the goal of peace than any time in a generation."

Forces suffer defeat

BEIRUT, Lebanon [UPI] — Syrian and Christian forces slashed through Lebanon's central mountains yesterday in a mopup campaign to drive retreating Palestinian forces from their last remaining positions. It was the Palestinians worst defeat in the war.

"After our losses yesterday, we could not hold out," a Palestinian spokesman said.

"We are retreating wherever we can and attempting to hold out where we cannot. But it's just a matter of time."

Palestinian sources conceded that the loss of the mountain front 20 miles east of Beirut and north of the Beirut-Damascus highway to a 48-hour syriaa armored and infantry assault was one of their most disastrous losses in nearly 18 months of civil strife in Lebanon.

"The loss of Tal Zaatar," one Palestinian source said in reference to the refugee camp that fell after a 55-day Christian siege last month, "was a prestige blow. But the mountain front is a real strategic loss."

The Christians had predicted total victory within three days when the assault began Tuesday. At the time it seemed a boast but a Syrian tank-led assault Wednesday night captured the three major Palestinian held towns in house-to-house fighting and drove the Palestinians into retreat.

Spokesmen for Christian militias that participated in the assault conceded there were still "pockets of resistance here and there which are being wiped out."

Winners unlucky in love

SAN DIEGO [AP] — Don't envy your buddy for making a killing in the stock market — he's probably unlucky in love.

The very qualities that make a stock speculator successful often work against him in developing a close relationship with a woman, according to Dr. Sandra Levy Ceren, a clinical psychologist who studied stock market winners and losers in a series of tests at United States International University.

Successful speculators, says Dr. Ceren, often exhibit "tremendous self-involvement, so much so that it precludes them getting close to someone else."

Dr. Ceren explains that the predominant characteristic of the stock market whiz is self-confidence. This, she adds, allows them to be able to take greater risks because they have such self-confidence in their ability to make successful decisions. They act very quickly — they don't have to hem and haw over whether to sell a stock."

Losing speculators, Dr. Ceren found, tend to be more conventional, insecure, impulsive, easily discouraged and less self-disciplined than winners. In addition, they often exhibit what the psychologist found to be an unconscious but powerful need to lose.

In Dominican Republic-

U.S. imposed sugar tax deals ally disastrous blow

By MIGUEL GUERRERO

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic [UPI] — The Dominican Republic, a faithful ally of the United States even in times of deepest hemispheric crisis, has probably received the most disastrous blow of any nation affected by the White House decision to triple the U.S. tax on imported sugar.

As a result, Dominican officials, fearing economic collapse, are leveling strong criticism at Washington for the first time in more than a decade. Many say Washington should give this Caribbean island nation special treatment for its years of loyalty instead of clobbering it on the head with a measure that could spell economic disaster.

Several government ministries and agencies have warned that the 1.75 cent per pound tax hike granted by President Ford last week constitutes the most serious threat possible to an economic stability already weakened by repeated increases in petroleum costs.

The nation's export sugar production for 1976 — 900,000 short tons — has already been sold, so the effects of the new tax will not be felt until 1977.

But officials believe the damage could be even worse then, because the tax will catch the country in the midst of preparations for elections in May, 1978.

News Analysis

Both sugar producers and government officials believe the new policy, when its effects take hold, could signal the end of a years-long economic boom that has already survived one world recession.

The reasons are obvious.

The Dominican Republic, like no other country in the Caribbean except Communist Cuba, depends on sugar sales to pay its high import bill. The industry is also the nation's principal source of employment, with an estimated 250,000 persons earning a living directly or indirectly from sugar.

Sugar experts brought about $600 million into the Dominican Republic in 1975, a little less than two-thirds of the country's foreign exchange earnings.

This year, income is expected to drop by more than $250 million, authorities say, because of sugar's collapsing price in the international marketplace over the last few months. This same market deterioration and its effects on U.S. producers were prime factors in Ford's decision to hike the sugar tax.

The current market has left prices at slightly more than eight cents per pound, potentially disastrous by itself, since it costs more than 10 cents a pound for the Dominican Republic's state-owned plantations to produce sugar.

Dominican Sugar Institute Director Quirilio Vilorio Sanchez warned the tax hike — expected to cost the Dominican Republic $28 million a year — and other measures contemplated by the Ford administration, including lower sugar quotas — could ruin the Dominican sugar industry.

In what have already become the good old days, the Dominican Republic and some 29 other sugar producing nations were allowed a fixed share of the U.S. market. The sugar trade reflected the harmonious relations enjoyed by the nations involved.

The column game

Because of all the activity and involvement of other colleges across the nation, many people at UMass are beginning to feel that nothing really relevent happens here on campus. Well, they couldn't be further from the truth. There are exciting and challenging events happening every day here and for those whe seem confused, I'd just like to name a few.

PHONING THE FOLKS

Each student must call their parent(s) collect and carry on an interesting conversation about their life in college, without telling them what's really going on, for an entire two minutes. It may sound easy but you'd be surprised how many people start panicing after the first thirty seconds.

THE TOWING GAME

Students park their cars in no-parking areas and then go to a friend's room in southwest. The thrill comes in when each student tries to see how close he can come to seeing his car being towed away. (It's rumored that this game will lead to an even more exciting game next semester — "the burning tow truck").

THE ELEVATOR GAME

Students vie for valuable prizes as they see who can wait for the elevator on the twenty sixth floor of the library before reaching their next birthday.

THE STAIRCASE RUN

In this second game located at the library, students, starting on the twentieth floor, run down the library stairs and try to be the first to reach the ground floor while memorizing any five quotes from Star Trek.

ROAD TO RELIEF

Students compete against celebrity professors in this contest of drinking ability and endurance. The action starts at 7 A.M. when all people involved drink their first of 27 cups of coffee. The last one to go screaming into the bathroom is the winner.

DISCO EAR

Students try to drive each other crazy by playing the loudest song possible at 8 A.M. at the hatch.

WHO ARE YOU?

A great favorite among UMass students, participants try to figure out the person they're talking to but the only information they have is their first name, astrological birth sign and shirt size.

THE HOLD-UP

In this contest, students using the school bus system try to annoy bus drivers as much as possible by asking stupid questions while holding up a line of people trying to enter the bus. Points are awarded on how stupid the question is and how many people the student manages to keep from getting onto the bus.

THE SUNDERLAND BUS

Another popular bus game in which participants count the number of campus shuttles, North Amherst and Orchard Hill buses that go by while waiting for you know what.

NO SMOKING PLEASE

The producers of this game try to find the most ignorant, inconsiderate people on campus to go to the no smoking area of the Hatch and chain smoke. The real contest is in seeing how long it take a non-smoker to get up enough nerve to ask the smoker to put out his cigarette.

YOU RACIST-SEXIST PIG

Fun for all as you find someone to blame for your personal frustrations and then hate away.

FOLLOW THE MATZOV BALL ROAD

Local Jewish contestines try to think of ways to drink a small glass of water on Yom Kipper and still feel they fasted for the whole day.

THE NEVER AGAIN GAME (or what I don't want to happen to me and someone very special to me)

Two people meet in a classroom and develop a real caring for each other. Unfortunately, the fears and doubts of one, or both, prevent the relationship from growing any further. This game is not so much fun, especially at sometime in the future when the two people look back and realize what they could have had.

THE SOUTHWEST OLYMPICS

A truly exciting sports event that features such categories as "The accidental cinder block kick" and the ever popular, "Toilet paper toss". Winners of these and other events move on to become riot control police. That way they can get back at people more directly.

As you can see, there are a wide variety of events occuring at UMass that all you have to do is look around to find. Oh, and by the way, thanks for playing the column game with me.

Your economics career

By JIM SCHPEISER

Where will it all end? It doesn't folks. This is life in the land of the free, but not tax free, no, at the UMass bookstore you pay tax if reading for pleasure but none if for pain, but I found a dime under the counter and made two cents on the deal, that's what I call two cents worth. Tuition, books, medical, gasoline (and insurance for our autohogs, and repairs).

If we all get moved in, how are we going to get out again? Jerry Garcia says "It's Slippin Away." We come up to Amherst town to get away from the rat race, try to get a handle on the situation, and for awhile, at least, we've got our hand out: Jobs? Food stamps? Scholarships? A little of each; but we have to do something real, something to keep us moving beyond the land of nine to five.

So we'll keep the restaurants busy until the house is straight and maybe our creditors will be easy on us since we're students and maybe we'll even cash in on some debts and as it is we eat some meals where we work, at restaurants, and we join food co-ops and we join auto co-ops and hang out at the Almighty Zoo, UMass, for entertainment, and economize; economize on beer and wine and rock concerts but there's plenty of cheap entertainment at the Almighty Zoo especially watching the animals, really nice people trying their damnedest to enjoy life and consuming record-breaking quantities of beer in the process of shouting obscenities across the Orchard Hill Bowl from Webster to Dickinson. The A.Z. even has culture, ranging from intercollegiate football to ballet.

And for a quiet weekend we walk down the road, talk to the dogs and cows (pet our friends), slog through swamps, listen to stereo, stare at stars and before we know it we'll be too busy writing critical papers to worry about the fine points of slumlife. Admiring the cracks in windowsills. Showing off maple syrup stains in the cabinets. Swimming in the refrigerator. Taking batting practice on spiders and flies with the same broom, the priceless BROOM that makes the kitchen endurable.

Yes, we might even unpack. We might even bring our furniture in. We might even bring a bunch of friends in for cookouts and all-weekend bashes with musicians in the backyard which won't be a jungle for long or my name ain't Heironymous I. Snerd. Until then, it's box lunches, paintbrushes, sewing curtains, shopping, working, going to school to fence with the flying A's for Administrators, walking to the store to take advantage of our rural surroundings.

Learning how to fast, even the dormies do that on weekends when the 10-meal plan is off. This is the price we pay to be FREE, and to build linoleum castles in the sky. Can anyone spare 45 cents for a cup of Ecuadorian coffee? The bourgeoisie's children have descended from the Ivory tower, six of us, on the outside looking in to the crystal palace of Liberal Education.

And the Queen said, "Let them eat cake", so we began the revolution: within ourselves: we will take what we need and can afford, and hope that others do the same. Life can be a job, a twenty-four hour-a-day struggle with existence in times like these, when our home seems like a combat zone softened by jazz piano albums and school is a bear to be wrestled with, winner-take-all. This may seem discouraging. This is education. Real education — through first-hand experience, — not vicarious, second-hand consumption of slightly confusing words and symbols (as in school). Learning about our capacities for energy, courage, tolerance, creativity.

CLASS! CLA-ASS! Your economics career will now begin. Take one hundred dollars, live in Amherst on a hundred a month. After this, you'll be primed for Outward Bound. Remember, easy on the beer and pizza, gasoline, keep the lamps trimmed and the heat down low, wear slightly dirty clothes once in a while. If you win an A for this course, we'll send you to California and Mexico on Independent Study for semester break. If you fail, get a haircut and a job at Zayre's and meet us on the Brooklyn subway at 2 a.m. in a few years. Tell us about your education, and we'll tell you about ours.

What's for dinner? Zucchini, kidney beans, and rice? Who knows. We're in one of the finest states in one of the finest countries in this world, all of us with someplace to fall back on (fall back from ourselves really, since success will depend on the individual's will to overcome obstacles everyday).

Slogging through the jungle-swamp of our home, we think "there are many better houses, why us?" The answer is so, so simple: there are millions of poorer homes in this world, too, and we are where we are because we choose to be students with rich minds (hopefully) rather than other alternatives. Pretty soon our home will be one of the best because we're working with each other to make it that way. It's a good way to begin school.

Protect the pedestrian

To the Editor:

After witnessing a traffic accident in which a student was injured Thursday I feel it is time that drastic measures to relieve the heavy traffic on the section of North Pleasant St. between Mass. Ave. and Governors Drive be instituted, as this is a section in which there is heavy pedestrian traffic, and subsequently many accidents of personal injury. Massachusetts law provides that the pedestrian has the right of way over any motor vehicle at any time. I sometimes doubt whether the drivers who drive this section are aware of this law. Since I came here in September of '75 I have witnessed four such accidents.

There is no reason for these happenings. No amount of money can relieve the pain and suffering, both physical and mental from these accidents on both the part of the driver and on the part of the victim. Nevertheless, these accidents can be prevented. [Preventive medicine is a universal remedy you know]. I am not blaming the driver or the pedestrian, however I am blaming the UMass Dept. of Public Safety [DPS]. I am not saying they've done a bad job, they've been doing rather well... but not well enough. I would like to submit a proposal to the DPS that one of the following, or reasonable facsimilies thereof be initiated immediately.

First. That some type of pedestrian walkover or tunnel [via. southwest's "tunnel of love"] be constructed at the three major crossings on the above mentioned stretch. Whether people use it or not is their choice, at least they have a method of avoiding the motor vehicle completely if they choose.

Second. That ALL thru traffic except busses and possibly state vehicles from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. be excluded entirely from this stretch. They can choose an alternate route up East Pleasant to Eastman Lane or down Mass. Ave. to Governors Drive.

I urge everyone, in the interest of their own health to express their views to the commissioner of safety at UMass in written or verbal form. Your cooperation as well as that of the DPS is deeply appreciated.

Eat and be educated

To the Editor:

Over the past year the news media and the people of the world have focused increased attention on the island of Puerto Rico. On July 4th over 60,000 people traveled to Philadelphia to demand a bicentennial without colonies and independence for Puerto Rico. At the recent conference of non-Aligned Nations a resolution was overwhelmingly endorsed calling for the independence of Puerto Rico. Here in the U.S. black congressperson Ronald Dellums introduced a resolution in Congress calling for the total independence of Puerto Rico.

Puerto Rico is a classic colony of the U.S. This has been true since the invasion of Puerto Rico by the United States in 1898, which violated the autonomous political status ceded to Puerto Rico by Spain a year earlier.

Because the U.S. has major economic interests in Puerto Rico it actively resists the growth of independence forces. The FBI and the National Guard are frequently used to break strikes. Grand Juries are being used to gather information on the independence movement and its supporters.

A national anti-imperialist organization, the Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee, was formed in March of 1975 with the goal of building support within the US for the full independence of Puerto Rico and self-determination for the Puerto Rican people.

We are holding a potluck supper on Sunday, October 3 at 5:30 at Unitarian Church, Main Street, Northampton to talk about the work of the Committee and find ways in which more people can be involved in the development of a mass, anti-imperialist organization in support of the independence of Puerto Rico. We hope to see you there.

How and why: The UMass high

One of the primary reasons a student attends an institution of higher education is to practice getting high. However, that doesn't mean by smoking a little good grass. Though that is an accepted recreational activity, what I am referring to at this time is the workaday high. The high one gets from politics or the fine arts, for example.

And speaking of politics and fine arts, here are two examples of the highs one can get.

Noted sailor, navigator and captain of the critics' ship sailing the turgid waters of aesthetic criticism, Jack Cahill explains the fine arts high for us:

"Slogging through the viscous mud trap of day to day to day academia, one necessarily has to get involved with the dark side of life (e.g., taking the bus, spilling coffee on research papers, etc.) and this eventually leads to a loss of the existential focus control, that is, the senseless preoccupation with basically unimportant things known to all as depression. In my opinion, this despised state comes about due to people limiting their ideas, their visions to the grey concerns of hard reality. Business first. Honk, honk!

"As all true absurdists know, this is an outright lie. Looking straight on at an object merely hides its skewed sides and bent corners. To look at life as a block of concrete is wrong; it is sponge rubber vinyl chloride, sometimes solid, often gaseous, always funny. The joy of life is in creation, during your own or digging someone else do theirs. Somehow, the difficulties one faces pale into insignificance when confronted by the pure joy of art.

"And don't read that literally — my idea of art is loose as the rest of my cerebral connections. Art includes a miraculous 45 second Frisbee finger spin as much as a lightning quick Charlie Parker alto solo or a chorus line dancing down the steps of the Fine Arts Center. Howard the Duck comic books, earnest discussions about the delicacies of William Burroughs, speaking Samuel Beckett monologues while smoking a cigar, why, these things make life the continuous wondering chuckle if should always be to humans like you."

And Bryan Harvey relates the political state of euphoria to us as follows:

"The UMie political high is like leaving the farm to go live in the big city: the dull existence of the average student is replaced with the excitement of budgets and bylaws and bureaucrats, with maybe a meeting with the chancellor every now and then.

"One's political perspective makes no difference; the political high comes from the glimpses of what makes the university work, the ability to chat about FTE enrollment, title nine guidelines, and rolling over short term bonds.

"Some Umie politicos get their kicks from calling mid-management type administrators by their first names, and some by accusing this first group of being junior bureaucrats looking for law school recommendations.

"But most people get their real highs from helping people understand the university or maybe saving students a few bucks. The UMie political high is free, but it's addictive, dozens of UMie politicos have blown their academic careers because they spend more time on the fourth floor of the Student Union than in class. We should all be such addicts."

And we also have the alternative high. Ultimate Frisbee, and frisbee in general. However that will have to wait til next week to receive the airing it's due. As will the academic high. And I invite you all to send me your ideas on achieving a state of euphoria at UMass.

Sunday morning

Complacencies of the peignoir, and late
Coffee and oranges in a sunny chair,
And the green freedom of a cockatoo
Upon a rug mingle to dissipate,
The holy hush of ancient sacrifice.
(from SUNDAY MORNING, by Wallace Stevens)

Outside the sun is high, radiating a divine light on all the churchgoers. Gliding softly through the mass of cars we rode ten years ago, my father, my brother, and I. Like a procession all the cars parked and all the people calmy and serenly walked to the church. (They all seemed a bit high from the religious fervor of such a procession) It was the "way" to act and so they did-and I, too!

And yet today I'm not there, but here in my room relaxing in my robe with morning coffee this Sunday Morning, only watching some churchgoers leave the dorm — a small crowd so unlike the masses who filled St. Teresa's Church during my childhood days). I try to dismiss the memories of that one long hour every Sunday Morning...or, the long six hour school day in the Catholic grammar school listening to one of God's chosen people in black. (Why black? — was she mourning?)

Those early days we all were waiting for God (or one of his many "attendents" of angels) to tap us on the shoulder or visit us one night and tell us we were chosen, too. But until then, we practiced our Hail Mary's and Our Father's fervently and recited answers to questions for which we memorized and never questioned their accuracy or reason.

"Who is God?"

"God is the divine being who lives in heaven and in everything and everyone on earth."

"Why do we believe this?"

"Because of faith."

Faith? — in what? Certainly not ourselves for we couldn't do this or that. We couldn't even talk on our way to the bathroom. And we lined up to play recess. We had appointed partners in that line — they were even our partners for our line to go to the bathroom.

And then there was that devastating theory of theology that said only Catholics would go to heaven and everyone else was damned to hell or purgatory. We were put into our own special class — chosen, elite. Everyone else was wrong and inferior.

...and we used this concept of "God" and "divinity" as an explanation for all the mysteries of life. Order was given to everything (but who says everything in life has order?)

Then the church tried to change, but for me, it was too late. The damage had been done. Some of us released ourselves, others stayed under family pressure and have replaced the old Church with folk masses hoping things have really changed. And still other, I hear, have at last heard their calling — and they're going. I wonder how long they'll be able to stay?

I tried the Church over and over again, trying the new theology, hoping to believe that there is a savior to this mess of a world. But I couldn't. Religion became for me a "supreme fiction", especially under the influence of Kierkegard and Nietzche and the few lines from Hegel I could understand. The myth that God existed — died.

I read Plato - again - and his idea of a "supreme art" and "ultimate reality" as elements unreachable during life seemed so pessimistic and absurd...so ultimate. I wondered if he had ever seen a sunrise? — and I was sick of barriers surrounding me — and began to tear them down.

Now the sun on Sunday Mornings is fulfilling and enlightening. The rolling seas and clandescent moonlite, the orange sunsets in cerulean skyline, chameleon leaves on the ground before the winter frosts come and emptiness of winter months leave one free for thought. For there is a sense of order here, a natural sense; there is disorder here, but not a chaos. (Didn't Emily Dickinson also make her church in the garden?'

And today the greenness of the grass reminds me of Whitman's songs...his full embrace of all mankind — his cosmic voice:

It is a painful thing to love a man or woman to excess, and yet it satisfies, it is great,
But there is something else very great, it makes the whole coincide,
It, magnificent, beyond materials, with continuous hands sweeps and provides for all."
(frrm Starting from Paumanok, by Walt Whitman)

Now on this Sunday Morning, relaxing in my robe over morning coffee, life seems so much more than those hours spent in church. And it is so much more to embrace life than to runaway, scared, to the belief in an afterlife. For by living now, one really lives forever. Now I get high on life and not from the religious fervor of a procession.

Was somebody asking to see the soul?
See, your own shape and countenance, persons, substances, hearts, the trees, the running rivers,
the rocks, and sands.
All hold spiritual joys and afterwards loose them;
How can the real body ever die and be buried?
(from Song of Myself, by Walt Whitman)

School violence: A self-fulfilling prophecy

By BARNABY KALAN

There is such a thing as a self-fulfilling prophecy. That is, expect something to happen, wait for it to happen, be confused when it doesn't happen, and finally it happens.

Last Friday "racial violence" erupted at Hyde Park High School in Boston. Was anyone surprised? After all, hadn't the newspapers predicted violence ever since schools opened in early September?

I remember seeing headlines like, "All Quiet As Schools Open," or "Schools Quiet On Second Day — No Signs of Unrest."

Why shouldn't these schools be quiet? Students were going back to school. In this hird year of desegregation, why look for, hope for, violence?

I will not mention any of those groups that have advocated militant, and if necessary, violent opposition to forced busing. I will not mention the organizations that have marched, trying to stir up opposition and unrest in the so-called "trouble spots" of Boston.

In passing, I will only say that in a recent opinion poll on Massachusetts politicians, Boston City Councilwoman Louise Day Hicks received a larger "unfavorable" vote than any other Bay State Politician.

But part of the blame should rest with the media. Those who inadvertantly conditioned people to expect that violence would flare up by presenting only one side of the story. The bad side. The side that said desegregation isn't working.

Take the Jeremiah Burke High School in Dorchester. It was once an all-girl, primarily black high school troubled by fighting, low morale and a shaky rapport between students and faculty.

Coeducation in 1973 eased some tensions, but the real boost came one year later — Phase One.

"I've been there five years and Desegregation was the best thing that ever happened to the Burke," said Mrs. Linda Tate, a black aide at the school.

Classes, sports programs, outings and proms have been integrated and peaceful for two years at the Burke. Senior class elections last year pitted a black girl versus a white girl for the post of vice-president. In a primarily black class, the result was a tie — three times. The two girls finally decided to be co-vice-presidents, Mrs. Tate said.

"A lot of credit should go to the neighborhood community. They were not opposed to whites coming in as other communities were opposed to blacks coming in, there was no feeling of 'We don't want you here,'" according to Joseph Smith, a teacher and senior class advisor at the Burke.

Parents told their children they were going to school to learn and not to cause trouble. The kids accepted that. Somehow both groups paid less attention to reports of violence across town and more attention to their needs — education.

Jeremiah Burke High School's reputation grew. Students who became eligible to go elsewhere, because of desegregation boundary changes, actually chose to attend Burke. But is the school an isolated case?

"Most people feel that desegregation is not working, but there are many schools where it is working that we just don't hear about," Smith said.

Douglas Foster, the Burke's headmaster, had a stronger opinion of why desegregation success at his school is not publicized.

"The media is looking for something to happen, they are going for the stuff that sells newspapers," he said.

I think it's time we learned about the other "Jeremiah Burkes" in Boston.

Hawthorne notebook found

BRUNSWICK, Maine (AP) — The Nathaniel Hawthorne Society announced Thursday the discovery of the 19th Century novelist's earliest manuscript notebook, missing for more than 100 years.

The discovery represents the most important addition to Hawthorne's known works that has come to light since the last of his six other notebooks was published in 1871, the society said.

The long-missing notebook, covering Hawthorne's years as an emerging fiction writer from 1835 to 1841, will be on display in the Hawthorne-Longfellow Library of Bowdoin College on Oct. 8-9 during a Hawthorne conference.

The notebook was discovered by Mrs. Frank E. Mouffe of Boulder, Colo., among other papers which had been preserved in an early 17th Century cupboard, a family heirloom.

Mrs. Mouffe, who plans to attend the conference, said she believes the notebook may have come into her family because her ancestry includes the Peabody family of Salem, Mass., of which Hawthorne's wife, Sophie Peabody, was a member.

One of the highlights of the conference will be a paper by Prof. Hyatt H. Waggoner of Brown University, a Hawthorne scholar and author who will describe and evaluate the notebook.

Prof. Arlin Turner of Duke University, a member of the Hawthorne Society's advisory board, said it has long been known that Hawthorne kept a notebook earlier than any of the six which have been recorded.

The newly discovered book contains about 330 entries on 86 pages of Hawthorne's small handwriting.

Hawthorne, whose works include "The Scarlet Letter" and "The House of the Seven Gables," was graduated with Henry Wadsworth Longfellow in Bowdoin's famous class of 1825. The college library is named in memory of the two giants of American literature.

Leinberry said the class also had to spend 10 hours of observation in the Cooley Dickenson Emergency Room.

"EMT heads you in the right direction, but you have to learn to adapt to what you've got to work with in an emergency," she said.

The entire class Coderre said, took a national registry EMT examination before being given licenses to practice.

"It was made up of 150 written questions and a six-part practical exam which included splinting, bandaging, wound care, treatment for shock and general medical knowledge."

Coderre who got a 91 in the exam said, "The whole class passed the course, which was a reflection on Sue Roundy because the national average is only a 75 per cent pass rate," he said.

Leinberry said that about half of the class were made up of state and government employees.

In the dorm, Coderre's door at 361 Cance is emblazoned in red with "Emergency Medical Technician" and his name. The entire dorm, he said, has been informed of his presence and what he can do.

"I have a first aid kit kept ready at all times which can handle burns and other injuries. People have come to me with cut hands and feet and some muscle injuries from throughout the dorm," he said.

However, Leinberry said that people come to her because her friends know that she's taken many biology courses and they had medical questions to pose, but not because she is an EMT. She hopes that this article will let the people in her dorm know.

Having reached this medical level, Coderre intends to become a first aid instructor for the Red Cross and take more specialized courses like intravenous therapy and care of injured children. Leinberry said she wants to go on to medical school with a professional objective of becoming a Bio-Medical Engineer.

DID YOU HEAR THE ONE ABOUT THE REVERSE POLISH NOTATION?

The story goes that this guy walked into a college bookstore and bought a calculator that worked backwards, or sideways, or something.

But once he got the hang of it, he found that Reverse Polish Notation meant he worked with only two numbers at a time, solving the most complex sequence calculations quickly, accurately and naturally.

external chest compressions," he said.

Leinberry said the class also had to spend 10 hours of observation in the Cooley Dickenson Emergency Room.

"EMT heads you in the right direction, but you have to learn to adapt to what you've got to work with in an emergency," she said.

The entire class Coderre said, took a national registry EMT examination before being given licenses to practice.

"It was made up of 150 written questions and a six-part practical exam which included splinting, bandaging, wound care, treatment for shock and general medical knowledge."

Coderre who got a 91 in the exam said, "The whole class passed the course, which was a reflection on Sue Roundy because the national average is only a 75 per cent pass rate," he said.

Leinberry said that about half of the class were made up of state and government employees.

In the dorm, Coderre's door at 361 Cance is emblazoned in red with "Emergency Medical Technician" and his name. The entire dorm, he said, has been informed of his presence and what he can do.

"I have a first aid kit kept ready at all times which can handle burns and other injuries. People have come to me with cut hands and feet and some muscle injuries from throughout the dorm," he said.

However, Leinberry said that people come to her because her friends know that she's taken many biology courses and they had medical questions to pose, but not because she is an EMT. She hopes that this article will let the people in her dorm know.

Having reached this medical level, Coderre intends to become a first aid instructor for the Red Cross and take more specialized courses like intravenous therapy and care of injured children. Leinberry said she wants to go on to medical school with a professional objective of becoming a Bio-Medical Engineer.

Wood Tech majors hear industry wants

The UMass student chapter of the Forest Products Research Society will host Donald Kelly in a talk to be given on Monday.

Kelly will speak on "What the Forest Products Industry is Looking For in a Wood Tech Graduate." Kelly, of Kelly Hardwoods Inc. in Pittsfield, Mass. will then be available for a discussion and comments. The talk will be at 7 p.m. in Farley Lodge.

Refreshments will be served and the public is invited.

DID YOU HEAR THE ONE ABOUT THE REVERSE POLISH NOTATION?

The story goes that this guy walked into a college bookstore and bought a calculator that worked backwards, or sideways, or something.

But once he got the hang of it, he found that Reverse Polish Notation meant he worked with only two numbers at a time, solving the most complex sequence calculations quickly, accurately and naturally.

The machine of all these and many other marvels is the Model 4510 (the "Mathematician") from National Semiconductor. Suggested retail under $25.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Weight loss program at Health Center

Due to the increasing requests for weight control groups, the University Health Services will be offering another weight reduction workshop this semester. Students who are 15 pounds or more above their optimal weight are welcome to participate.

It is a 10-week program that will include individualized diet instruction, an exercise program and methods of modifying those behaviors that are the cause of problematic eating habits. The format will include group discussions and several guest speakers.

The first session will be held at the Health Center on Monday from 12:15 to 1:45 p.m. in room 302. A serious commitment to attend all 10 sessions including a small enrollment fee, will be expected.

Child nutrition topic in parent workshop

The second in a series of Parent Workshops co-sponsored by the Infant-Toddler Play Group and Health Education will be held on Wednesday night, beginning at 7:45 in Room 17 at Skinner Hall.

The subject will be nutrition, and will be presented by Helene Yass, Community Health Educator.

Yass will cover maternal and infant nutrition, changes in eating habits and needs of the young child, nutrition and breastfeeding, vegetarian diets and also answer questions from those in the audience.

These workshops are open to all interested people, and are of particular interest to families with young children, expectant women, and people who work with young children.

Future workshops include topics such as contraception, motor development in the young child, discipline, first and emergency aid, and sexuality and the young child. Anyone with a question can contact Susan Mackey at 665-2885 or 545-2403.

Placement help for science, math majors

Senior and graduate placement meetings will be held for those majoring in engineering, natural sciences and math in the engineering auditorium, Engineering Building East, on Monday.

The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. and there will be a second meeting on Wednesday in the same location, but at 4 p.m.

Among the topics to be discussed are placement registration, employer recruiting information, employer recruiting procedures, job market information, tips on job hunting techniques, salary information, employer interests and types of jobs available.

The meetings will be conducted by Robert J. Morrissey of the UMass Placement Service, and majors in astronomy, botany, chemistry, computer science, geology, microbiology, physics, polymer science, and zoology are invited to attend.

Voters should check town registration list

The Amherst Town Clerk's Office has announced that people who have registered to vote in Amherst, but who have not voted during 1976, may not be listed on the current voting list.

The last day to register for the Nov. 2 election is Oct. 5, and registration sessions will be conducted Saturday at the Town Clerk's office from noon to 10 p.m. and on Tuesday from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Those who have registered to vote after Aug. 17 will not have their names on the lists since the registration is still being processed.

Questions should be directed to the Town Clerk's Office at 253-9382.

Arts, crafts featured in Leverett show

In celebration of the fall foliage season, The Leverett Gardener Plant Shop at 74 Amherst Road, Leverett, will host the public on Sunday from 2 to 6 p.m., at a special program featuring arts, crafts and home industries of Leverett residents.

The program will include a weaving demonstration on a floor loom, by Shirley J. Kirley. Kirley is a student of design and a self-taught weaver. She will have wall hangings for sale.

Macrame crafts expert Elaine Barker will display her work and show how she makes plant hangers, which are also to be sold at the shop.

Especially appropriate at the season when there are plenty of corn husks around, will be the work of Francine Kirley who will demonstrate corn husk doll-making from 2 to 4 p.m., and will offer some of the dolls for sale.

The paintings of Ellen Johnson, an Amherst artist will close her exhibition at the Leverett Gardener that day.

Klaus and Hellen Kroner of Energy Alternatives will have on hand one of their wood burning stoves.

WFCR hosts free, benefit concert

WFCR five college radio has announced plans for a benefit concert to be held Saturday in the Buckley Recital Hall of Amherst College. The program is free and no reservations are needed. The concert will begin at 8 p.m.

Performers will be pianist Nigel Coxe from Uass; violinist Philipp Naegele from Smith College; and cellist Leopold Teraspulsky from UMass. They will play two works; Trio for piano, violin, and cello, Op. 67 of Dmitri Schostakowitsch, and Trio in A Minor for piano, violin, and cello, Op. 50, of Peter Tschaikowsky.

The concert is being offered by the musicians as an occasion for WFCR to thank its listeners for their support. For more information, call WFCR at 545-0100.

WFCR 88.5 FM is a cooperative effort of Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges, and UMass.

Hillel plans services for Yom Kipper

Yom Kippur, the holiest day of the Jewish year, begins at sundown this Sunday, and ends at sundown on Monday.

On Yom Kippur, it is commanded that Jews fast and spend much of the day in Prayer and meditation.

The holiday starts with the Kol Nidrei prayer, which asks God to null and void all promises that were made during the previous year.

What's Happening

During the day the book of Jonah is read aloud to the congregation.

On campus, Kol Nidrei services will begin at 7 p.m. Sunday and at 10 a.m. on Monday. Following the blowing of the rams horn or "shofar", there will be a break the fast meal for those who have signed up for it in the Hillel office, in the Student Union.

All services will take place in the Student Union Ballroom.

Waves on the Ocean of Time

By JACOB LOVE

Welcome to October, the month of Halloween. The astrological events towards the end of the month are suitably exciting, centered on a solar eclipse the 23rd. But while the eclipse is real, the days and months are just markers on the ocean of time. When using the Sun as the primary marker in its flowing motion against the background of the constellations, we are still in the Libra season. (The coming eclipse will incidentally mark the start of the Scorpio season.) The Sun is in the 9th degree of this sign of The Scales so the waves of solar energy are therefore pulsing out the message of balance.

The Moon, our secondary marker, is over one-quarter of the way around the circle of the Zodiac, in Captricorn, the sign of The Mountain Goat. Since the Moon symbolizes our watery emotional flow, we have to swim our way up the mountain while the she passes thru this sign. Lunar struggle will feel easy and seem to make sense around 11.24 a.m. as the Moon forms an harmonious angle with Mercury (rationality). The winged - messenger - of - the - gods is in Virgo, the sign of Critical Analysis. Mercury's apparent motion in the sky has been backwards over the last few weeks but just started moving forward again at midnite. So we may find that our thoughts are becoming more clear and direct.

A less favorable lunar wave will be forming this afternoon and we may find minor arguments or partnership upsets around 3:10 p.m. A subsequent lunar wave of minor disillusionment or selfishness will form around 5:40. But after that the ocean of time will feel calm until a wave of lunar happiness rolls in from midnite. The Moon moves into truthful fun-loving Aquarius at 11:51 p.m. and then forms an angle of maximum harmony with Jupiter (joyous expansion) towards 1:35 a.m.

Saturday's lunar flow may be choppy thru the afternoon but should smooth our happily after 4 p.m. Towards 10:18 p.m., however, Mercury and Venus (goddess of harmony) will form a challenging wave and we may find ourselves arguing, possibly about who's sharing what. Somebody may get highly critical via Mercury in Virgo. Towards midnite, a wave from several other planets may intervene to offer the opportunity for compromise. The magical moment comes at 12:21 a.m. Sunday and, if we don't attain a new sense of balance then, several big waves of dissension will begin rolling in Sunday afternoon and Monday morning. A complex of planets is involved but, generally speaking, the way towards balancing our soul-boat is thru compassion. We have to feel what the person in the other end of the boat is feeling. Otherwise, if we're just trying to ride out the late week-end storm, we can relax a bit knowing that it will pass by Monday afternoon.

One final note: the general forecast is only valid for any one person about 80 per cent of the time since the planetary positions on the individual birth-chart frequently counter the general trend. Moreover, free will always has priority, if we know how to use it.

MassPIRG plans anti-nuke teach-ins

In an effort to gain grassroots support for an anti-nuclear power movement on campus, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) is scheduling a two-day teach-in next Tuesday and Wednesday.

A series of speakers, workshops, films and music will highlight the event, to be held in the Campus Center.

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader, local nuclear activist Sam Lovejoy and Prof. William Heronemous of the UMass Civil Engineering Department will be among the featured speakers.

A series of workshops will be conducted in several areas including alternative energy resources, evacuation plans, nuclear power accidents and conservation procedures.

Complete scheduling for the teach-in has not been finalized at this time.

For further information call Mass PIRG at 256-6434.

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Friday, October 1 — Born today, you are one of those highly independent individuals who more than anything else works to keep that independence. Because you cherish your own freedom so much, you are an ardent defender of the freedom of others. You will be among the first to answer the call to arms of any whose freedom is being threatened, among the last to give up independence, even in exchange for life itself. You possess much of the stuff out of which heroes and heroines are made: the determined urgency from which great answers to great challenges are constituted and the insistent intelligence that refuses to relinquish its hold on problems that only reason ultimately can solve.

You possess an altruistic nature -- but you are not one that others can walk over. You are always careful to protect your own interests, even as you go about the business of seeing that others are not cheated in any way. You enjoy the company of the calm, cool and calculating, for you like to observe the workings of the shrewd mind. On the other hand, it is not a mind that you particularly admire or respect; you are merely fascinated by it. Your ability to analyze without in any way jeopardizing your objectivity keeps you scrupulously honest and fair in all your dealings, both public and private.

Saturday, October 2

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Consult one who deals in an exact science if you would have a feasible answer to your present problems. Don't discuss failure with others.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Ascertain the degree to which the information you already have will serve. Begin at once to fill whatever gaps in your knowledge exist.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Keep daydreaming apart from reality. Otherwise, you are apt to make a mistake in judgment that might have been avoided.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your natural reserve should stand you in good stead this morning as you keep your temper from exploding as a consequence of being crossed.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Consult a professional if in doubt about your recent decisions regarding the very young. You may be in for a surprise.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — An economical solution to your present problems on the home front make life easier all the way around.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — This is a day for new beginnings and old undertakings. Don't be surprised to find yourself out in front when awards are announced.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — So long as you have the combination to another's way of thinking, all should go well. Satisfy the senses -- but be sure to act in good taste.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Extra hours of effort should be well rewarded -- though perhaps not for some time to come. In the meanwhile, develop patience.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Superiors should receive your plans for improvement with gusto. There is much room for new ways and means; present ideas clearly.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — An open-minded and agreeable approach to new ideas on the home front helps to gain you an increase in personal popularity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Devote your energies full-time to getting ahead in a matter of romance. You may find your heart's desire very close to home.

Linksters finally come home for annual Toski Invitational

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

The men's golf team tees it up on own home turf today, for the only time this season, in the Toski Invitational Tournament at Hickory Ridge Country Club.

This is the third year for the Toski, UMass' host tournament. The Minutemen won the first annual, while Temple took the event last year, winning by a single stroke over UMass.

The tournament was started two years ago, when the four Toski brothers, Jack, Ben, Tom, and Bob decided to dedicate a tournament to their father Walenty Toski.

The entire Toski family is dedicated to golf. Jack Toski, the eldest of the brothers, now retired, teaches golf at Beaver Brook CC. Ben is the club pro at Forest Park CC in Adams. Tom Toski has been pro at Hickory Ridge since the course was built in 1969, and before that, he was pro at Wahconah CC in Dalton. The fourth brother, Bob, is the world renown teaching pro, generally regarded as the best in the world.

This year's Toski Invitational looks to be the biggest and best yet. Twenty-seven teams, the biggest field yet this year, will be competing in the one day, best four of five scores event.

Defending champion Temple will not be making the trip up this year, but there will be plenty of competition for the Minutemen, Central Conn, URI, Yale, Harvard, Boston College, UConn, Salem State, Providence, and Tufts will all be on hand.

Representing UMass will be four of the five golfers that led the linksters to the strong third place finish at Yale last weekend.

Leading the squad will be senior co-captain Bob Sanderson. Sanderson played super golf at Yale, finishing only one stroke off the low medalist pace. Joining Sanderson, are co-captain Tim Diskin, sophomore Jimmy McDermott, and freshman Flynt Lincoln.

Coach Fan Gaudette has awarded the fifth position to freshman Mark Powers. Powers played in the first match this fall and did pretty well.

UM nine tops Chiefs

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

In baseball, sometimes solid hitting will carry a team. Other days, tight pitching will lead the way. But when a team receives both of these elements, you can bet that the result will be a win.

Such was the case yesterday with the UMass fall baseball team. An 11-hit attack and combined five-hitter from three pitchers led the Minutemen past Springfield College, 6-3, in an eight-inning game played at Lorden Field.

UMass broke a 2-2 tie with a four-run seventh to pick up the win. Consecutive singles by left fielder Mark Sullivan, third baseman Leo Kalinowski, and catcher Charlie Ciccone loaded the bases with none out. After center fielder Bavel Cummings flied out and second baseman Ed Skribiski fouled out, shortstop and co-captain Jim Cullen hit a 3-2 pitch up the gap in right-center field for a bases clearing triple. He soon trotted home on a single by first baseman Dale Stone.

Highly-touted freshman Doug Welenc, making the first appearance in a UMass uniform, picked up the win with three innings of relief. After allowing Springfield to tie the score in the fifth on a walk, single, sacrifice, and passed ball, he settled down to strikeout five, walk two, and give up one hit.

Starter Jeff Reardon allowed only two hits and one unearned run in his four-inning stint. The tally came across in the third on a Cullen throwing error, sacrifice, and RBI single by first baseman Tom Bowen.

UMass scored its first two runs in the first on an RBI triple by Stone. He was soon knocked in on right fielder Neil Lojek's single.

The Chiefs' final run came in the eighth off reliever Chris Kirby. A single, base on balls, and Bowen's second RBI single turned the trick.

Cullen led the UMass barrage with three hits, including a double and triple, while Stone went two for three with a walk. Bowen led Springfield with three straight singles.

The win raises UMass' fall record to 3-1. The Minutemen play host to Westfield State today in a 3:15 game at Lorden Field.

Harriers face tough foes in Brown

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's varsity cross country team will get back into some serious competition tomorrow when it takes on Northeastern, St. Johns and Rhode Island at New York's Van Cortland Park in Bronx, N.Y.

After Tuesday's snafu in which several runners were mis-directed, and which the harriers now regard as simply "a hard workout", the varsity will be ready for a good competitive effort.

In NU, UMass will be facing the second ranked team in the most recent New England cross country poll. The Huskies are led by All American Jon Flora and sophomore Bruce Bickford, who has run the second fastest steeplechase in junior-age group competition in the world. If the Huskies have a weakness, it is the gap they have between their fourth and fifth runners.

"They'll be up for us and we can't take them too lightly," said assistant coach Arnie Morse, "It's one of those things where everyone's got to come through in the race — it isn't for granted, we have to run well."

St. Johns and URI are both young teams, and probably won't really challenge UMass. Jim Callaghan and Bruce Jones lead the Redmen, while Mike Galloghy is URI's top runner. They may help UMass by pushing NU's runners back a few places, since the meet will be scored as a quadrangular, with all ten scores being totaled together.

The Minutemen will counter with a combination of youth and veteran talent. All American and captain John McGrail will team up with vets Frank Carroll, Cliff Staples, John Scheer, and Andy Levy; first year varsity runners Mike Quinn and Lou Panaccione; and freshmen Jay Legere and Bob Martin, who after two fine performances are both being given chances to race with the varsity.

The five-mile course on which the meet will be contested was described by Morse as "a roller coaster".

"The first mile is flat, then the course goes onto a horse trail which goes up and down and doesn't really let you get into any kind of rythm with your stride," Morse explained.

The time-tested and well-worn course is used as a barometer of how good you are in the east. The course record of 23:50 was set last year by Dave Merrick, one of the top ten runners in the country. UMass' top men have all run the course at least once, and a couple have done quite well there. McGrail was 13th two years ago when UMass won the IC4A title, and Quinn was second in the IC4A JV race last year.

"We should be very close with NU," Morse said. "We're both strong up front, and we've got depth at quality, that is, we've both got a lot of bodies — it's who's got the better bodies that's going to win."

"Really what we're looking for," said Morse, "is just a good team effort, with the kids not necessarily running super times, but a hard effort — enough to win.

"For strategy, we want them to run together as a group, to react to the pace and go with that," said Morse. "We'd like to see a team split of maybe 30-45 seconds between our first five guys, and just a good, hard effort.

The meet will give UMass a chance to beat powerful Northeastern for the second year in a row, but more importantly, it will give the team experience on the course where the IC4A's will be held later this season, as well as giving it the experience of hard, competitive running.

Polo club debuts talent today

By PENNY NOYES

The Water Polo Club will load up a few cars and head toward Cambridge at 3:00 p.m. today for the season's first tournament hosted by MIT. Teams in attendance along with UMass and MIT, will be URI, Southern Conn, Bowdoin and Williams.

The UMall club lost several of its top players last spring at graduation, but still remaining are hot shooters Duncan Lomas, Russ Yarworth, and Bob Corb. Senior Ben Crooker, tops in long distance on the varsity swim team, and Barry Eisenberg, a Monmouth College transfer also on the swim team, add the kind of endurance that a tough Polo team needs. A few other veterans who will bring their last year's experience to MIT are goalie Bill Tharion, and Rick Mansfield.

The club also has a multitude of new members reruited through the men's and women's swim teams, as well as through the Water Polo I and II classes being taught by various club members. As the season progresses, tabs will be kept on the up and coming stars.

It may not be just men who will compete in this tournament — several of the women players will be suited up, ready to knock some balls around. These include last year's All-New England women players Debbie Hoxie and Penny Noyes. (Women's games will be starting in a couple weeks.) So, although several key players were lost, the team still has a few hot players and a lot of potential which should be beaming by the season's end.

This club is led by Co-Presidents Bob Corb and Penny Noyes who handle the treasury, equipment upkeep, and scheduling tournaments, games, and practices. Members practice rigorously Mon. - Fri. from 6:00 - 7:30 p.m. It's not too late to join, so if you are interested in a great time and super exercise, just show up at one of the practices. No previous experience is necessary — there is no coach — the club members merely work as a unit helping one another with different skills and are especially sympathetic toward new members with an eagerness to learn.

Booters battle UVM in YanCon tilt

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen soccer team will head north Saturday in hopes of evening both its Yankee Conference and overall records as it meets the Catamounts of Vermont. Vermont, the defending Yankee Conference champion, is tranditionally one of the toughest opponents on the UMass schedule.

The Minutemen are coming off an impressive shutout victory over Keene State, but they certainly cannot afford to let up against Vermont. Coach Russ Kidd commented, "We have no breaks on our schedule. We beat a tough team Wednesday, but we have to maintain our confidence for each game."

Vermont returns much of the same team which defeated the Minutemen in overtime a year ago. Two All-New England performers, John Koerner and Carl Christensen, lead the Catamounts. Koerner, a junior forward, has been one of the top scorers in New England for the past couple of years. A clever dribbler, Koerner scored three goals against Plattsburgh State a week ago. Christensen, a junior fullback, leads the strong Catamount defense. Other players to watch include co-captains Mark Heidrich and Gil Low, and goalie Jim Taft.

The Catamounts have so far shown the offensive power which led to last year's championship. Their only loss has been to Connecticut, on a disputed goal in the closing minutes of the game. Connecticut, incidentally, is ranked nationally in the top ten.

In its victories over St. Lawrence, Boston University, and Plattsburgh, Vermont has scored eleven goals. The host squad will undoubtedly provide a severe test for UMass goalies Mark Hanks and Mark Hodgdon.

UMass will make the trip with several question marks. Dave Tagliavini and Joel Mascolo both suffered ankle injuries against Keene, but they should be ready. Fullback Ed Niemiec is a doubtful starter, however. A Keene player slid hard into him after the ball had left the area, hitting Ed's ankle hard enough to put him out of the game. One starter who will definitely return to the line-up tomorrow is sweeper back Steve Macaulay.

Although the Minutemen have had some injury problems, coach Kidd expressed satisfaction with the replacements. "We've developed depth that I didn't think we had a week or so ago," he said.

One position where the Minutemen have plenty of depth is goal. Kidd hinted that he would start Mark Hodgdon in the net Saturday, but as usual, choosing his goalie will be his toughest pre-game decision. "Hanks has played two exceptional games for us," he remarked, "but Hodgdon played very well against Bridgeport. It looks like I'll end up alternating them over the course of the season."

No matter who starts, the Minutemen will have to be in top form tomorrow. Soccer is "THE" fall sport at Vermont now that they no longer have a football team.

Netmen visit Catamount land while women host Central Conn

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The men's tennis team travels to Vermont tomorrow to battle the defending Yankee Conference champion UVM squad at 1:00 p.m. in the Minutemen's last regular season match.

The strong performance by the netmen in their 8-1 over UConn Wednesday gave UMass coach Bill Brown an optimistic, but reserved outlook on the match against Vermont, the number one team in the Yankee Conference for the past three years.

"I'm hopeful as always, but Vermont is tough. They're always tough," Brown said.

UVM (1-1) beat UConn 6-3 in its season opener and lost to the conference leading New Hampshire team, 7-2. The UNH Wildcats squeezed by UMass, now 2-2 on the season, 5-4 last week.

Vermont was hit with a stroke of bad luck just prior to the season's start when Kirk Dice, the Catamount's top player last year, quit the team because of personal reasons.

Vermont senior Peter Cooper, one of the top players in the mid-west, according to UVM public relations, has occupied the first singles spot since the outset of the season.

Judging from the credentials of both Cooper and top UMass player Adam Rosen, who is highly ranked in the east, one can expect a classic match when the two go at it tomorrow.

Tomorrow's match will most likely be the first true test of the new doubles line up UMass first showed against UConn on Wednesday.

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The women's varsity tennis team meets Central Connecticut at 3:00 p.m. today on the N.O.P.E. courts. The women are seeking their first on court victory of the season. Their one win was a forfeit by Tufts. The women can take solace in the fact that they have lost to top flight competition in Smith and Mt. Holyoke.

Coach Ken Rubin was encouraged by Wednesdays 5-4 loss to Mt. Holyoke. "Holyoke beat Smith 5-4, and Smith beat us convincingly so we are making definite progress, said Rubin.

Rubin said that he is not particularly concerned that his number one and two singles players, Jennifer Ranz, and Carolyn Mooney, are winless in the two matches played. "They've played well, they've just been up against outstanding first and second players from the other team," said Rubin.

Rubin is concerned with doubles, where the women are winless in 5 attempts. The return today of number one doubles player Karen Holt, will team up with her usual partner Nancy O'Neil, and may breathe some much needed life into the teams doubles play.

"Even though her foot is a little sore Karen had a strong workout Thursday, and looked good," said Rubin. Today's number 2 doubles team will be a new combination of Michelle Schwartzman and Susanne Boissevain.

Today's match will consist of 7 games, 5 singles and 2 doubles. "I know I can depend on my 3, 4, and 5 singles to win; so all we need is one doubles win to take the match. I'd like to take it 7-0, but I expect the girls to at least get a 4-3 win," said Rubin.

The 3, 4, and 5 singles players that Rubin is so confident in are, Kathy Sullivan, Martha Awiszus, and Dawn Minaai. As usual Ranz and Mooney will hold down the 1 and 2 singles spots.

Spikers to open with tri-meet

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team begins a new season tonight as it competes in a tri-meet at Bridgewater State College beginning at 6:00 p.m. The other team competing besides UMass and Bridgewater is Barrington College.

First year coach Dianne Thompson announced her starting line-up yesterday. Starting in the backcourt are: Pat Bradley, Shelley Soules and Dianne Hannula. Up front it will be Heidi Dickson, Jayne Greenberg and Deborah Kuzdeba subbing for the injured Sue Sabia.

Coach Thompson expressed a feeling of uncertainty about how well her team would perform. "We haven't scrimmaged much because I felt we needed to practice fundamental skills first. The key to our success will be how well we return the ball," said Thompson.

The Minutewomen will be using a simple offense due to a lack of height. They will be using single blocks at the net. Coach Thompson has tried to develop all facets of the game with her team to compensate the lack of any strong offensive threat.

Bridgewater is a revenge motive for UMass. The eastern Massachusetts school defeated the Minutewomen last year, 15-11, 12-15, 11-5. UMass didn't meet Barrington last year and knows relatively little about them.

Linda Wetherby is the UMass' assistant coach and will probably handle the JV's tonight. The Junior Varsity starters are: Diane Mandragouras, Joyce Gresl, Christine Kelley, Ann Deneault, Kathryn Shinnick and Pat McGrath.

SPIKE SHOTS: Sabia has a shoulder injury; hopefully she'll be back in practice by next week ... The school that can win two matches is the winner of a tri-meet. If all three schools win one match and lose one match, the team with the most games won is the winner. If there is still a tie, the team with the lowest number of points scored against it is the winner ... Next game is Tuesday against Smith at 7 o'clock on the Northampton campus ... First home match is a week from tomorrow ...

Field hockey team opens home season

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The UMass field hockey team will open its home season today at 3:00 against Central Connecticut State. The game will be a rematch of last Saturday's mini-game which the Minutewomen won 2-0, on College Sportsday.

The Minutewomen dominated the play during the 25 minute exhibition Saturday and Coach Judith Davidson expects few problems with Central today.

The team is coming off a 4-1 win on Wednesday against Keene State in which the consistency and balance of it began to show.

"Our team doesn't have individual star players," Coach Davidson said, "rather, we have a very balanced team. We also have a lot of depth, so that if one player is injured, it doesn't drastically hurt the team."

From the steadiness of Kelly Salls, the endurance of Judy Kennedy, and the strength of Gayle Hutchinson on down to the "super-aggressiveness" of Cheryl Meliones and Olivia Lovelace, the coach is impressed with the togetherness of the team.

Despite a 7-1 loss to Springfield College in the season opener, Coach Davidson is enthusiastic about the team's potential. "We should have a good season if the team continues to be consistent. We just weren't the same team in the Springfield game."

The ridiculous 10th player award

First of all, let me say that of all the absurd, inane, and asinine things that the world of sport has put past us (hello there, Howard Cosell), there is nothing more revolting to me than sixth, seventh, 10th, or 12th player awards. Sure, the idea -giving some recognition to someone who usually misses out -is inspiring, although the worst cliche in sport is "... this guy is really underrated..." Inspiration aside, though, somehow these underrated awards never work out the way you might think they should.

So when the news came that Carl Yastrzemski was the Red Sox' 10th player for this season, it shocked me the way price jumps for Bruin tickets do (although anyone would gladly pay ten bucks to see Rick "the tallest Bruin in history" Middleton).

In a year that saw the Sox take a painful back seat to those hated Yankees, only one player has kept any of us fair-weathered Sox fans remotely concerned with the fate of the team we all called "our Red Sox just a year ago." But for the young kids who ran around with dollar signs in their eyes instead of hit-and-run signs, Yaz would have been splashed all over the covers of every sports rag in the nation — probably so much that the morons would be back at Fenway booing him again.

If the BoSox were in the Yankees' position right now (IF...), Yaz would be walking away with another Most Valuable Player trophy, and the other old man, who those with no imagination call El Tiante, would have the Cy Young wrapped up. And the clowns with their dumb Geritol jokes would be having a field day.

Instead, Yaz's efforts will only get him a little bit closer to the Hall of Fame (laugh if you like — but I wouldn't bet against it). No other recognition was forthcoming, so they magnanimously decided to give Yaz a token of appreciation, a 10th player award.

To my mind, the phrase 10th (or seventh, or whatever) player suggests some guy who does the little things — who can bunt, or backcheck, or lead the sweep, or play tight defense — but because he doesn't knock in runs, or score a lot of points, never really gets credit for it. And when you talk about the Red Sox, one name just jumps out at those who know a little baseball — Rick Miller.

Yaz has "done it all" (as the broadcasters love to say) this year. He played like an MVP, like someone who really wanted to be there and he no doubt made the other guys feel silly for their attitudes.

But 10th player? Really now, has Captain Carl ever failed to receive attention for the things he's done? Appreciation, yes, but attention, no way.

Of course, precedent is on the side of those who voted for Yaz. Derek Sanderson, who received more publicity than anyone's ever deserved, was voted the Bruins' seventh player a few years back.

Sure, it's fun to give such awards and argue about who is deserving. But when you're talking about them, sing me the praises of the Millers, the Silas', (of a few years back — he has been called underrated so often now he must be at least rated), and the Marcottes.

But don't tell me about Rose, Clarke, Cowens, or Yastrzemski — unless we're discussing an MVP award.

Great One peers into future
Metawampe's Grid Picks

Never has the Great One been so angered and insulted. Not only was the preamble to last week's picks stolen and rewritten, but the infidels who perpetrated the atrocity have thus far managed to avoid capture. These people must be relentlessly tracked down and horribly punished, for they would see the Salubrious Sage discredited. For that reason alone this is a very serious matter!

Though it is the only thing of which he is afraid, the Trenchant Tribesman greatly fears being discredited. You see, this semester I am carrying the exact number of credits I need to graduate so any confiscation of credits could prove disastrous. It would mean an extra semester's worth of wampum would have to forked over, and with the current cost of living index as high as it is, the Penniless Prognosticator would be in dire straights. ("Dire straights" being merely a colloquialism for the Panama Canal Zone.)

Since this issue has such grave implications, I suspect everyone. However, one of my top aides, Clumsy George Who Runs Into Bush, has reason to believe that the culprit is General George Armstrong Custer. I had a sneaking suspicion that Custer's defeat at Little Big Horn never did sit well with him, but naturally I have formulated a plan to stop the little nebbish once and for all.

The Great One

First I will gather the tribe's best warriors; the Stealthy, Tippy, Unbelievably Silent Toeing, Earmuffling Rowdies (S-T-U-S-T-E-R). Then, before disguising themselves as Blue Wall light fixtures and hanging by their toes from the ceiling, the formidable cast of STUSTER will be instructed to substitute every disco 45 in the juke box with Tommy Dorsey records. At the sound of Dorsey's first trumpet blast the General will charge. (He always was a sucker for a fanfare.)

Bank will not replace music

By ROBERT LESLIE
Collegian Staff

Dean William F. Field, acting director of the Campus Center, called reports that the music library across from the Blue Wall is going to be made into a bank, "unreliable", in a Collegian interview yesterday.

"What will happen," said Field, "is that the reading room in the library will be made into a cashier's office, with the music library remaining in its present place. The Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union Building is then going to be made into a study lounge."

Stuart J. Belkin, organizational co-coordinator of the Union of Student Employees (USE) has said that he learned from "reliable sources" that the music room is either going to be shut down to make room for the bank or relocated.

"The music room is the only thing left in the Campus Center which is free to students," stated Belkin, "and I'm afraid that if it is closed down it will never reopen.

Belkin announced plans to begin circulating a petition today to prevent the move.

"We will begin circulating the petitions in the hopes of getting between 3,000 and 5,000 signatures," said Belkin.

The petition has received the endorsement of the Undergraduate Student Senate and co-Presidents Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus.

"He's paranoid," said Field of Belkin. "We have received no bids for a bank and even if we do we don't intend to act on them."

Dudley J. Bridges, manager of building operations for the Campus Center, concurred with Dean Field.

"He (Belkin) is trying to stir something up. What Dean Field said is true."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said "there are certain economic and convenient advantages to having a bank located there, but they have to have my approval which I will definitely not give. As a matter of fact, we haven't received any bids for a bank. Someone else may be taking them but there have been none to my knowledge."

MassPIRG funding mechanism attacked

By JOE MAHONEY
Collegian Staff

Anti-bottle bill forces have succeeded in pressuring the UMass Board of Trustees to "review" the method from which the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) obtains funds from University students, MassPIRG student researchers charged yesterday.

As part of its consumer-oriented, student action work, MassPIRG has been waging an intensive campaign to pass a referendum on the November ballot that would require a five cent deposit on all cans and bottles sold in Massachusetts.

"The bottle industry interests know full well that changing the MassPIRG funding mechanism would eradicate us (MassPIRG)," said Donna Bixler, a two year MassPIRG student intern.

Reviewing the funding mechanism for MassPIRG is an agenda item at the trustees' meeting Wednesday at the UMass Medical School in Worcester.

Mimi Michaelson, also a MassPIRG student intern, said the group first learned of the funding review last Wednesday when UMass President Robert C. Wood told MassPIRG Executive Director Stephen Morgan that the trustees would examine the funding mechanism at their next meeting.

Under the present funding mechanism, known as a "negative check-off," the two-dollar MassPIRG fee appears on the student semester fee bill as an optional charge.

If the check-off were to be deleted from the fee bill, Michaelson said, there would be a severe decline in the number of students who would contribute.

In a three-page memo to members of the trustee Executive Committee in late August, Wood wrote that he has received "inquiries" questioning the University's participation in collecting the MassPIRG fee.

There were no specific identifications of the persons or groups who made the "inquiries" mentioned in the memo.

Wood, who left yesterday for Italy, was unavailable to comment on the matter.

However, the Collegian obtained two issues last night of an internal newsletter published by an anti-bottle bill group which made references to the UMass trustees and the MassPIRG funding method.

The newsletter of the Committee to Protect Jobs and the Use of Convenience Containers in Massachusetts states that the review of Mass-PIRG's funding by the UMass Trustees "follows a Committee letter to ... Wood requesting a formal policy on the propriety of a publicly-funded university allowing its tuition billing system to be used in collecting membership dues for a private advocacy group."

The newsletter quoted Wood's response to their letter as: "Recent expressions of concern ... suggest ... that it is now timely to reexamine the policy issues (of the funding mechanism)."

'It is now timely to reexamine the policy issues of the MassPIRG funding mechanism'
—Robert Wood

The newsletter carried the same date, August 27, as the Wood memo.

Student Government Association co-President and Trustee Paul M. Cronin said last night that issues of MassPIRG's funding mechanism would "probably be discussed and not voted on" at the meeting Wednesday.

"I don't think the trustees are going to get very far with it," Cronin said.

"Statements of support" of MassPIRG's funding mechanism and programs were issued by several campus groups yesterday, including the Collegian, Student Center for Educational Research, Legal Services Office, Campus Center Board of Governors, Commuter Collective, Outfront, the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates, the Student Organizing Project, the Native American Solidarity Committee, Southwest Men's Center, Nummo News and the Veterans' Coalition.

Susan Kaplan, co-ordinator for MassPIRG's western Massachusetts bottle bill team, said the people working for the bottle bill "will be working twice as hard now."

PIRG pressures candidates to strengthen shaky stands

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

State legislative candidates are strongly being urged by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) to take a firm stand on several consumer, environmental and energy issues of public concern.

A three-page questionnaire has been sent to 285 state senatorial and state representative candidates, seeking to pin them down on 21 of the most controversial questions of this election year, according to MassPIRG research associate Donna E. Bixler.

> "We don't want politicians who keep shifting their feet ... "

These include the Bottle Bill (ballot question 6), the Equal Rights Amendment (ballot question 1), nuclear power plant safety, small claims court reforms, reorganization of state higher education and student collective bargaining.

Bixler said due to "lack of party competition" in Massachusetts, the candidates are neglecting to address these issues as they should.

"We don't want politicians who keep shifting their feet and are not willing to commit themselves to get into office," she added. "People should know who and why they're voting for someone."

Patricia Baker, another MassPIRG research associate working on the project, said a similar survey was conducted in August to more than 166 legislative primary candidates, specifically those with no major party opposition (40 per cent of all state districts.)

Since there were no uncontested Republican candidates in this year's primary election, she said only nominees in the Democratic or other minor parties participated in the survey.

According to Bixler, 22 per cent of the questionnaires were returned completed as of Sept. 1.

"It's outrageous," she said. "Candidates have no compulsion to respond to the voters, even when pressured in a formal way. This shows a vast candidate ignorance on issues of top importance to the individual." Bixler said.

Survey results indicated "a favorable approach to consumer protection issues."

Most respondants supported legislative changes governing small claims courts, prescription drug pricing, pre-market testing and screening of all new chemical substances, open dating requirements on all perishable foods and cost estimates for alternative energy systems in future public buildings.

Bixler pointed out that "the most controversial issues" such as the Bottle Bill, Equal Rights Amendment and nuclear power safety showed high "no response" rates.

Results of the second survey will be compiled sometime next week, she said.

Citing the level and quality of voluntary responses from the candidates as "depressing," Baker added, "We are determined to get the answers to our questions and the results to the voters before the Nov. 2 elections."

She said MassPIRG has contacted students at more than 35 state and community colleges across the state in an effort to gain grassroots support at the local level.

"Students must realize their potential as a viable polititcal power," she said. "Every vote does matter."

Baker noted the recent victory of Edward A. McColgan, who won the first district state democratic congressional nomination after a recount.

Official figures released Thursday revealed that McColgan won over former Governor's Councillor Edward M. O'Brien by 11 votes.

He had previously lost the Sept. 14 state primary by 29 votes.

According to a report issued by the Census Bureau on Voter Registration in November 1974, 46 per cent of everyone in the 18 to 24-year-old age group in Massachusetts registered to vote. Twenty-nine per cent actually cast a ballot.

Baker said since this is a presidential election year and the ballot includes several referendum questions which concern students, these figures should significantly increase.

MassPIRG is a non-profit, student organization, located at 233 North Pleasant St., in the Carriage Shops. It was inspired by consumer-advocate Ralph Nader.

Committee pushes for safety

By JACK FLYNN
Collegian Staff

If you're ever sat on one of the more rarefied levels of the main UMass library, and squirmed at the thought of having to make an emergency fire escape, you've contemplated one of the many problems faced by the UMass Occupational Health and Safety Committee (OHSC).

A group of eleven faculty and staff volunteers, the OHSC was formed two years ago to anticipate and alleviate campus health and safety hazards.

"The OHSC has experienced considerable success in the past two years," according to Chairperson Bernard Turner.

Turner said OHSC has been instrumental in improving emergency transportation and medical first aid on campus.

Turner credits the OHSC with reviewing the UMass Employee Health Services and making recommendations that updated the University's policies regarding the 1970 Occupational Health and Safety Act.

However, Turner said he would like to see the OHSC "expand it's scope."

As a sub-committee of the University Health Council, Turner said the OHSC lacks a source of direct funding, and therefore must wait for the Health Council and the Faculty Senate to ratify its recommendations before they are implemented.

"Safety matters should be dealt with immediately," Turner said. According to Turner, the OHSC 'is now trying to improve the systematized emergency evacuation procedures in campus buildings.

"The main library and the Graduate Research Center are buildings of prime importance with this regard", Turner said.

Three is never a plan that can't be improved upon, for a building that can't be made less hazardous," he said.

Some future improvements Turner hopes the OHSC will be able to make include improved emergency first aid, training programs for supervisors, staff and students; a program concerning alcohol awareness; and improving campus grounds, walkways and roads in compliance with health and safety regulations.

Turner also hopes to receive greivance reports from students in the event of any health or safety menace. He said that at its inception the OHSC also included two student representatives, but he said, "they quickly quit and have yet to be replaced,"

"Student apathy is a problem for the OHSC. It's hard for us to attract student representatives who have any sustained interest in our projects. Still we would like to include them. We feel we would have a much more representative committee that way."

The office of The Daily Collegian is in Room 113 of the Campus Center on the campus of the University of Massachusetts. Telephone 545-3500.

Second class postage is paid in Amherst and additional mailing in Ware, Mass. 01082. The Daily Collegian publishes Monday through Friday during the academic year, except during vacation, exam periods, and holidays. Accepted for mailing under the authority of an act of March 8, 1879; as amended by an act of June 11, 1943.

Directories to be issued

Student directories listing student telephone numbers and local addresses will be delivered to students probably during the first week of November, a Housing Office spokesperson said Friday.

Officials at the office said the delay was caused by a computer breakdown early in the semester which delayed the processing of student room assignments.

Information needed for the directory will be sent to a printer during the third week of this month.

Porn movies spark campus controversy

By DIANA BONNER
Collegian Staff

"Women's groups who hate pornography would rather have a man jump out from behind the bushes and attack them than let a man get enjoyment watching porno films," said Albert Sparks, chairperson of Baroque Enterprises.

Baroque is a student-run, Recognized Student Organization which is attempting to gain permission to show X-rated and-or non-rated films on campus.

The presentation of pornographic films on the UMass campus has been a controversial issue which promises to come to a head in the near future.

Last semester Baroque was denied permission to show the film "Deep Throat" in the Hampden Dining Commons by the Southwest Assembly.

Sparks and Charlotte Allen, the Mass. Daily Collegian's Women Coordinator will participate in an open debate to be aired at 6:15 p.m. tonight on WMUA.

There are approximately 50 organizations sponsoring 100 films each semester on campus and there needs to be more emphasis on quality and educational programming, said James Riley, coordinator of student activities.

Riley expressed the need to discriminate against the showing of pornography for private capitalism.

"I really do think it (pornography) is probably a bad thing, but I guess I'm just a capitalist pig," said Douglas Mitchell, Baroque financial officer.

Sparks nonetheless defends his right to promote pornography on the UMass campus.

"Pornography is as American as freedom of speech," said Sparks.

"The strength of the sexes lies in the unity of the sexes," said Associate Dean of Students O.C. Bobby Daniels. "In this confused society there are far better causes than pornography to crusade which could benefit the community financially, culturally and spiritually.

Pornography supports a media market which already puts too much emphasis on sexuality and warps our values," said Daniels.

"To promote pornographic films is a classic example of exploitation of student energies and leisure time. Instead, cultural awareness films, music, art, and live entertainment should be the focus of student activities," said Daniels.

"Sparks has no right to assume that women as a whole are like the women in his narrow experience," said Sarah Williamson, student activities program advisor.

"Pornography illustrates women being considered nothing by the superior sex," said Williamson.

There is an Undergraduate Student Senate referendum in the making which would provide for a vote by the entire student body to determine whether these films are acceptable to the UMass community.

Nummo News to reappear next week

Nummo News will not publish this week, but will resume publication next Tuesday, according to Nummo editor Padmore O'Mard.

Nummo News is UMass' Black newspaper which is distributed with the Collegian the first day of every week.

Last day for registration

Tomorrow is the last day to register to vote in the Nov. 2 local and national elections. Students who want to register should go to the Amherst town hall sometime today or tomorrow. For more information, contact the Town Clerk at 253-9382.

Hampshire bookstore bankrupt

By RANDY GINZIG
Collegian Staff

A bank is running the Hampshire College Bookstore.

On Sept. 7, The First National Bank of Amherst foreclosed on the Uroboros Bookstore Incorporated, which functions as the source of student's textbooks, as well as servicing Hampshire College students with clothes, food, and other accessories.

While the bank claims its' action was legal, many creditors of the store apparently don't agree and are taking action against the bank in order to protect their investment, which they stand to lose in the present situation.

According to Judson C. Ferguson, vice president of The First National Bank of Amherst, the bank reached a voluntary bankruptcy agreement with Sam Gearhart, the owner and operator of Uroboros Bookstore, Inc., on Sept. 7.

Gearhart had been running the bookstore since its inception six years ago, and in that time had borrowed over $60,000 from the bank, of which over $50,000 was still outstanding at the time of the action.

The bank apparently had reached an agreement with the treasurer of Hampshire College, Alan L. Torrey, to keep the bookstore open for the sake of the college and the students. Thus the bank resisted foreclosing on Gearhart.

However, as early as last February Gearhart was unable to pay the creditors and stockers that were supplying him, prompting Gearhart to write a letter to those suppliers requesting them to wait for the payment that Gearhart could not make at the time.

No action was taken until the end of August, when according to Gearhart, representatives from the SKO Collection Corporation threatened to bring involuntary bankruptcy procedures against him unless they were paid the $19,000 their clients were owed.

If this action had been allowed, the store's inventory would have been sold and the proceeds distributed among the creditors.

At this point, the bank, which had an outstanding loan in the vicinity of $50,000, moved to protect its investment and reached a voluntary bankruptcy agreement with Gearhart, where he agreed to relinquish ownership and control of the store to the bank.

According to the bank's attorney, Stephen B. Monsein, the bank had a lien that it took out in February on all inventory, stock, and fixtures in the store, making it a secured investor. Thus the bank insured itself of some return should the store go under, by this action.

At the end of the summer the bookstore began filling its shelves with inventory and books to supply the students.

The bank, by waiting until it did to take action, took control of the store when its inventory was highest. According to the bank's interpretation of the lien they hold, they are entitled to all income stemming from the sale of this inventory.

Atty. Philip Hendel is representing 12 creditors who are challenging the bank's interpretation and are taking legal action to recover some of their lost investment.

Hendel has examined the bank's lien and claims that the bank has made a mistake in their interpretation of the document. Hendel has conferred with an attorney representing Martin Zanger, president of The Holyoke News Company, a publishing distributor that is the largest individual investor in the store with an investment of $34,000.

The unsecured creditors believe that a federal bankruptcy court will decide differently, said Zanger.

Zanger said he thinks the creditors who delivered their stock in the summer months deserve some compensation, and hopes that the court will rule in his favor.

Zanger estimates that the insecured investors can recover about 50 per cent of their losses. Hendel's clients stand to lose about $19,000.

First National Bank officials knew the store was in trouble and this may have prompted them to take out the lien last February, said Zanger.

The bank could have foreclosed in June when the inventory was estimated to be about $7,000 but purposely delayed until late August when the inventory was about $50,000, said Zanger.

The bank had no desire to foreclose and even agreed to give up principal statements for a year in an attempt to help keep the store open, in accord with their agreement to make sure the college had a bookstore, said Gearhart.

The bank only foreclosed to protect its investment when SKO representatives threatened to bring involuntary bankruptcy procedures against the store, he said.

Hendel denies that his firm threatened action in August.

This student seems unaware of the financial plight of the Hampshire College bookstore. The Bookstore is presently involved in bankruptcy proceedings. (Staff photo by Laurie Traub)

Companion Program: 'A hand of friendship'

By ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

The Companion Program, an Amherst-based "Big Brother - Big Sister" project can be a "mutually rewarding experience", according to Robert L. Klein, co-director of the program.

"The child gets a companion to share some fun with, the volunteers get a feeling of accomplishment and a new-found friend," said Klein.

The three-year old program operates with the assistance of volunteer "companions", people in high school, college, or from the Amherst community itself, who want to lend a hand of friendship two to three hours a week to an elementary or junior high school-age child.

"This isn't a psycho-analytic or case-work service with special kids. What it is, is a recreational relationship between an adult and an elementary aged youngster," said Klein.

The companion program is state-funded through the Department of Mental Health, the division of Drug Rehabilitation. However, Klein stressed that the program is more of an alternative to drugs than a rehabilitation center.

The way the program operates, said Klein, is that youngsters are referred through the combination of teachers, guidance counselors, and parents, with the parents having the final say on whether their child is allowed in the program.

A companion is found for the child by interviewing a volunteer, and then the two are put together to build their relationship, said Klein.

The volunteers must "realize the seriousness of the relationship," said Klein.

Klein said that the volunteers come from within the town and surrounding colleges and, at present, there are about 25 UMass students involved.

He stressed the present need for male volunteers, saying that there is a waiting list of 20-25 young boys looking for companionship.

Klein said that some of the kids in the program do have problems, however he said that most were just in need of a friend. He said that a lot had single parents who worked, or had older brothers and sisters that they just couldn't communicate with.

Being in the program gives these youngsters "someone that they can relate to," said Klein.

The program sponsors group projects every month, in order to bring all the kids and companions together. Last Thursday they held a movie party, showing the Little Rascals and W.C. Fields films.

There are plans for future projects, including a Christmas party and barbecue, Klein said.

Klein stressed that anyone interested in becoming a "friend" for a youngster, should contact either Jan Klausner-Wise or himself at 253-2591, or drop by the Amherst Community Resources Center, in the basement of Jones Library, 43 Amity St.

Klein wished that more people would join in the experience.

"It's fun," he added.

Peace Corps to recruit volunteers this week

By CHRIS WOODCOCK
Collegian Staff

The Peace Corps, a volunteer organization serving 68 developing countries throughout the world, will be recruiting the UMass campus Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday of this week.

Despite Congressional cutbacks which have curtailed recruiting and reduced the number of volunteers accepted into its various programs, the Peace Corps will continue to come to UMass three or four times a year, according to New England recruiter Doug Friedman.

"UMass has always been the best school in New England," Friedman said. "We always find a lot of qualified people here."

Friedman, a 1973 UMass graduate with a masters degree in Education, said he works out of the ACTION office in Boston, handling the law recruiting for the Peace Corps, and VISTA as well.

Fifteen hundred Peace Corps volunteers will be placed between January and March of 1977, Friedman said, adding that recruiters are especially interested in secondary math and science teachers, special education teachers, agriculaturalists, and plant and soil scientists.

Friedman explained that under the Peace Corps plan, developing countries in South and Latin America, Africa, and mid-East, and East Asia ask for qualified people trained in specific areas.

"A country might ask for 10 nurses, 10 English as a second language teachers, and five carpenters," Friendman said. "The Peace Corps might then say we can give you seven nurses, six English teachers, and three carpenters.

We won't offer people that they're not asking for," said Friendman.

Most Peace Corps programs require a college degree and experience, Friedman said.

"A lot of the requirements are made by the developing countries," he said.

"Generally, if they want a nurse, they will ask for one with a four-year degree and experience."

The volunteers that are accepted receive air fare to and from the country they are serving, Friendman said, plus money to set up their initial housekeeping.

They are also allotted a living allowance, designed to meet their basic expenses and leave enough extra for socializing, said Friedman.

A monthly re-adjustment allowance of $125 is set aside for each volunteer, Friedman said, so that at the end of the two year stint he or she will have accumulated $3000. This money can be used in any way the volunteer sees fit, he added.

All volunteers serve mandatory two year stints, he said, but they have the option of signing up for additional time.

Friedman pointed out that people who have served in the Peace Corps generally find it easier to acquire government jobs.

He added that students with government insured loans do not have to begin paying on them until they leave the Peace Corps.

Those students who would like an interview with a Peace Corps representative should contact the Placement Office on the first floor of Hampshire House. There will also be an information center located in room 905 of the Campus Center.

Concert review

Basie Orchestra triumphs

By JACK CAHILL
Below the Salt

The Count Basie Orchestra minus their namesake played the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall last Friday night and gave ample proof that they are a powerful musical entity even without the kid from Red Bank. Led by the highly respected, widely heard trumpeter Clark Terry, the band rattled the bones of the 1,300 listeners present enough to gain a resounding standing ovation at the close of the two hour concert.

With Nat Pierce, a suitable Basie stand in, at the piano, the band opened with "Hey Jim", a wide open charger that set the tone for the evening. Other versions of the Basie band have been far less compelling than this one which is decidedly not a resurrected hulk like the present day Ellington band.

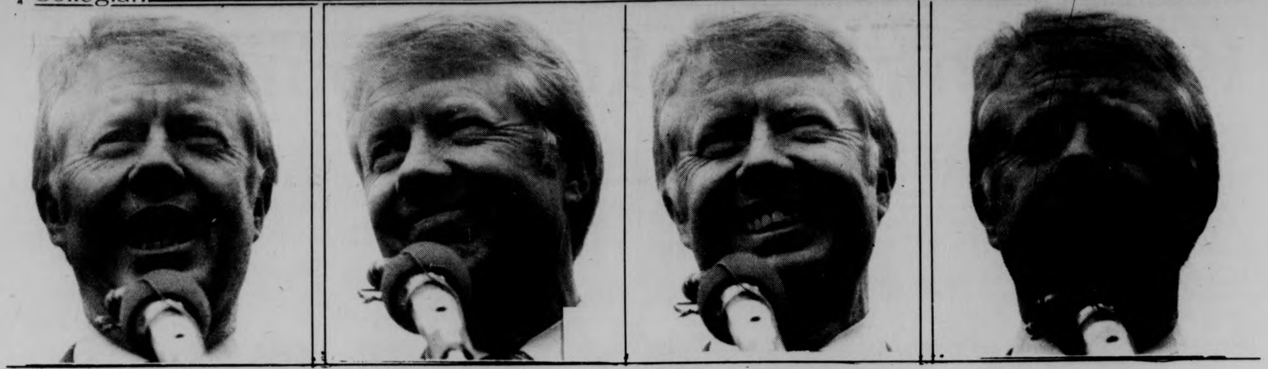
The easy strength and coordination of the saxophone and trombone sections anchored by such talent as Curtis Fuller and Eric Dixon was a fine surprise. The saxes, led by altoist Bobby Plater, blew some especially fine passages, switching from crisp uptempto on "Freckle Face" to a smooth, 40-ish grace on "The More I See You."

Clark Terry's delighted, but slightly confused intros gave special attention to the major soloists — the wonderfully clear and propulsive trombonist Al Grey who used his plunger mute to good effect throughout and tenor saxist Jimmy Forrest, an old band mate of Terry's.

Don't let this grey hair fool you," Terry warned and Forrest proceeded to change "Body and Soul" into the one totally transfixing moment of the night. His masterful combination of tone, attack and total assurance is nearly extinct today, more a part of the past giants who have propelled the Basie machine, but to hear him put his all into this one ballad was enthralling from the first massive note to the last triumphant cadenza.

Terry's flugelhorn presence was featured on his own "Sheba", his solo tasty and delicate. Vocalist Bill Caffie sang two blues with a powerful room filling voice. Aside from Lynn Biviano's extremely unpleasant trumpet screeches, everything and everyone in the band was tight and right.

After thirty years, the band's book is enormous and they served up a smorgasbord of charts: "Shiny Stockings" and "Basie Power" from the 1950's band, some more recent things. The closer however was straight from the Famous Door in 1939 and it was the indefatigable barnburner, "Jumpin at the Woodside" done up proper by Eric Dixon and Jimmy Forrest on tenors wailing above the band. The spirit there was undeniable.



Carter team visits Hartford

HARTFORD — Jimmy Carter was, by some accounts, keeping his Convention promise of campaigning around the country for Democratic candidates when he arrived in this city on Friday; only two candidates of the Democratic congressional slate did not appear Friday at his rally. They were, by no accident, both incumbents.

But there was something more important for Carter to do in last weeks Boston and Hartford rallies. It was a chance for Carter, before audiences that assuredly would roar approval, to come out and attack Gerald Ford in strong and assertive terms.

The Carter camp knows too well that going easy on the opposition can lose a debate, not to mention an election. So Jimmy Carter's sound traditional Democratic themes in traditional Democratic cities — while at the same time restoring his image as the candidate from outside Washington. His trip was a media success if not a crowd gathering event.

About 2000 people gathered to hear Carter speak outside the Civic Center in downtown Hartford, a city harshly treated by the recession. Many were the same ones most effected by economic hard times, the elderly and the jobless, and Carter, sounding like a true Democrat, spoke to them, on this his 53rd birthday.

"The Republican Administration does not let the people work. This is a welfare administration, not a work administration," he said, now on the attack, acknowledging the cheers with varying degrees of his ever-present smile.

The smile, along with his intangibles, like compassion, and love, and the concrete issues like the evil of Washington, were what allowed Carter to wrest the nomination, and to those he returned in his speech, careful not to sound like an establishment candidate.

"The worst part of the Republican policies is that they effect human lives. Collecting welfare hurts human dignity. It hurts the strength of families, our neighborhoods, and communities. This is an administration that does not care for the people," he said trying for an early score.

"This is an administration that does not care for the people. The Democrats have always cast their lot with the working people of this country." The workers in the crowd, including a contingent with bright yellow NAPA baseball caps, burst out as if on cue.

In Boston on Thursday, Carter had appeared at Boston College accompanied by Senator Edward M. Kennedy, whose appearance aided Carter more than vice versa. In Hartford, conversely, the main beneficiary of the days rally was, perhaps, Gloria Schaffer, who is trying to unseat Watergate hero and republican incumbent Lowell Weiker from the US Senate. And the happiest person of the whole weekend, was without a doubt former Governor John Dempsey, who is not a candidate, but who returned to the Hartford podium in a blaze of glory.

Schaffer who currently is Secretary of State, tried to make her appearance low key, helping to present a birthday cake to Carter, not indulging in any self-praise, choosing, instead, to praise Carter.

Of the enthusiastic rally, she said, "this shows that all of Connecticut has turned out to say we want you, Jimmy Carter, and this is a state that is a microcosims of all the problem in out country." But Ms. Schaffer a possessor of sound political instincts, could not help but allude to the fact that she too is an outsider trying to get inside for the people.

"Let's send a team to Washington with Jimmy Carter to do the job, and I hope that you will include me in that team."

Dempsey is an insider, makes no bones about that fact. The former governor though, probably could get elected again; he was a reversed figure when he served, as governor, and his speech in praise of Jimmy Carter, a man he does not know, was dynamic, and the most well accepted of the day. It could be that Carter would be well served to some of the old time politicians stump the states for he and the democrats. Dempsey gave a plug to just about everyone who was present.

"I am asking you to send Gloria Schaffer to Washington to help Jimmy Carter. You have taken Mr. Carter only halfway. That this election means is you. And Jimmy Carter has been talking and fighting for you," he said, sound both convinced and convincing at the same time.

"Today is Jimmy Carter's birthday. The one gift you can give to him, and the one gift you can give to the country, is to elect this man on November 2."

Dempsey even got off the podium to praise Carter, working the crowd with familiar vigor, shaking hands, giving rise to memories of old line Democrats.

The team effort was an attempt to strike a decidedly peculiar balance within Carter's stuttering campaign. He tried to ally himself with regular Democrats, which he did by the mention of Harry S. Truman and John F. Kennedy; at the same time, he rekindled his populist and outside appeal, by attacking the establishment government in Washington.

Senator Abraham Ribicoff, who was one of Carter's first Washington defenders, must have been perturbed when Carter said in memory of Harry Truman, "the buck doesn't stop in Washington, because nobody knows where the buck is!!"

And the candidate from Georgia was aided by a man in the crowd wearing a rubber Richard Nixon mask; his appearance, though unabashedly comic, evoked those not so pleasant memories of eight years of Republican power, which is exactly what Jimmy Carter wants the city of Hartford and the nation to be thinking about when they go to the polls on November 2.

Low Tide at Puffer's Pond

Located in North Amherst, approximately two miles off campus there exists a legendary pond called Puffer's. This notorious area is considered a favorite used extensively for recreational purposes such as swimming, fishing, hiking, picnicing, and ice-skating. However, there are few who are truly cognizant of the history of Puffer's Pond.

Over 120 years ago, a wooden dam, referred to as the "Great Dam" was used by numerous gristmills in the area of Puffer's Pond. This dam was replaced by the present dam in 1860 in an effort to supply surrounding mills with water power. Between 1860 and 1942 as many as twelve mills utilized the water facilities of the mill, river and dam. These mills consisted of four paper mills, two grist mills, three saw mills, two woodworking mills and a cotton mill.

Another feasible aspect of Puffer's Pond was its ice factory which operated from 1910 to 1942. During this period, Puffer's Ice, Wood and Coal Company harvested the pond for use in the summer by neighboring communities. In addition, UMass took advantage of the ice supply and kept their own warehouses on campus.

The old gristmill, currently located on Route 63 in North Amherst was one of the first mills in the area. Surprisingly enough, it is one of the sole remaining mills in Amherst and was converted in 1948 to a gift shop.

The present dam has been subject to repairs several times during the course of its existence.

In 1927, 1949, and 1973, parts of the dam have been repaired. Less than three weeks ago, the Amherst Public Works Department and Puffer's Construction Co. began to revamp the dam by reinforcing the walls, stopping the leaking, and installing a mud gate.

The cost of this project is approximately $20,000.

The town of Amherst is seeking federal funds for improving the recreational aspects of the pond. Subsequently, intrinsic work will be done on the dam and the community of Amherst will be able to enjoy Puffer's Pond once again.

What to do about Butz' slurs?

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Ford yesterday prepared for his second debate with Jimmy Carter while faced with the thorny problem of how to deal with the latest controversy involving Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz.

A furor has arisen over derogatory racial remarks attributed to Butz in a national magazine, and both Republicans and Democrats have called for the secretary to resign or for Ford to fire him.

An aide to the cabinet official told The Associated Press that Butz, in a conversation with an unnamed White House aide on Saturday, had mentioned the possibility of resigning and offered to do so, but then decided to "sleep on it."

Butz earlier had been summoned to the White House, where he was severely reprimanded by Ford and apologized, saying he regretted his choice of language.

Carter, who has been demanding Butz' ouster from the Ford cabinet for some time, termed the remarks "disgraceful" and said the Agriculture secretary "should have been fired long ago."

Although the White House remained silent on the subject, there was speculation the President wanted to resolve the problem before leaving today on a six-day campaign swing that will include the debate with Carter on Wednesday in San Francisco.

The Butz affair hung like a cloud over the White House as the President worked to clear up legislation piled on his desk by the 94th Congress. He met with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to discuss Wednesday night's second verbal faceoff with Carter. The debate will deal with national defense and foreign affairs.

Carter was being briefed by former Defense Secretary James A. Schlesinger, who was fired by Ford a year ago because of his criticism of administration policies concerning national defense and detente.

The reactions

From Wire Services) — On ABC's "Issues and Answers," yesterday, Democratic Govs. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts and Hugh Carey of New York said Butz should be fired, Carey adding that he was "mystified" why Ford hadn't taken such action.

Republican Gov. Robert F. Bennett of Kansas defended Butz, saying people in agriculture appreciated his work and farmers "have a great deal of respect for Butz." He said he didn't know whether Ford would fire him or not.

A number of Republican senators and congressmen are among those who have called for Butz' removal from the administration.

Ford's running mate, Sen. Bob Dole, has not gone that far but has called the secretary's remarks "totally tasteless... even if he's talking in his sleep he shouldn't be saying things like that."

President Ford should demand the resignation of Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz because of remarks he made about blacks, according to the chairman of the National Black Republican Council.

James C. Cummings Jr., Indianapolis, who was selected to head the council representing more than 5,000 organized black Republicans in 30 states at the GOP national convention in Kansas City, called for the resignation in a telegram to Ford he made public Saturday night.

"Butz, in his usual posture as offender of some of the people most of the time, has finally provided the Office of the President and the Republican Party with an unprecedented opportunity to serve the overwhelming majority of all the American people," Cummings said.

"He has unquestionably demanded that he be asked to resign his position in the Cabinet by uttering the crude, offensive statements about the political interests of blacks, together with his assumption that blacks are only concerned with the basest physical satisfactions," he added.

Cummings asked Ford to "accommodate" Butz, but if a request for a resignation was not enough to get Butz to leave, "I and blacks everywhere pray that you demand his resignation."

U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations William Scranton said the racial remarks of fellow Cabinet member Earl Butz "will hurt" the country's relations with black Africa.

He also left open the possibility the United States would vote to admit Vietnam to the world body but tied such a vote to getting more information on missing U.S. servicemen.

Saxe trial resumes tomorrow

BOSTON (UPI) — The prosecutor in the Susan Saxe armed robbery-murder trial, presenting his case faster than expected, says he plans to call only four or five more witnesses before turning the case over to the defense.

Prosecutor John T. Gaffney said Friday he had not made up his mind whether to call William A. "Lefty" Gilday, serving a triple life sentence for his part in the 1970 theft of $26,535 from the State Street Bank and Trust Co. and for shooting Patrolman Walter A. Schroeder.

Defense lawyer Nancy A. Gertner said she has filed a witness list with about 15 names on it, but didn't know if she would call less or more than that.

The trial resumes tomorrow. Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin scheduled today off because of the Jewish holy day, Yom Kippur.

Gertner has worked hardest at establishing reasonable doubt in the minds of the nine man, six woman, jury that the credibility and integrity of Gaffney's two star witnesses was impeachable.

The two, Robert J. Valeri and Michael Fleisher, implicated Ms. Saxe in testimony last week as participating in and planning the robbery.

Valeri, convicted for his part in the robbery, Friday said his testimony might even hurt him because of adverse publicity about his turning state's evidence. He objected to being called a "stool pigeon" by a Boston television reporter.

While Ms. Saxe faces life sentences for robbery and guilt by association in connection with Schroeder's murder, Valeri was sentenced to 10-15 years for armed robbery and a lesser charge of manslaughter.

Fleisher said he hoped not to have a criminal record when he finished testifying against Ms. Saxe. He has been indicted on nine counts of accessory after the fact of a murder.

Smith dead

ALEXANDRIA, Va. [UPI] — Former Congressman Howard W. Smith, a courtly Virginian who bottled up civil rights legislation during the 1950s and early '60s as chairman of the House Rules Committee, died yesterday at the age of 93.

Smith, known as "the Judge," died at his Alexandria home of heart failure. He had been ill several weeks.

Smith led a coalition of fellow Southern Democrats and Republicans that controlled the rules committee and often killed liberal legislation. He once told President John F. Kennedy he would support any of his New Frontier legislation, provided it would save the government money.

Smith was elected to Congress in 1931 after serving as a circuit judge in Virginia. As a result of Congress' seniority system he became chairman of the rules committee, which decides the precedence in which bills are sent to the floor for action.

He served in Congress until 1966, when he was defeated at the age of 83 in a Democratic primary bid for another term. Since leaving Congress he had farmed and tended business interests.

His funeral will be held Wednesday at Christ Church in Alexandria.

THE WIZARD OF ODDS.

If you want to figure the odds for or against something—probabilities, in other words—the Model 6030 calculator from National Semiconductor is just your cup of tea.

It figures mean and standard deviation with a single key calculation. Sums x and y values for correlation and linear regression. Calculates linear correlation coefficient and slope of curve. Lots of neat stuff like that.

And the odds are, you'll figure it must have taken some kind of wizard to figure out how to make a machine like this that sells at your campus store for a suggested price of under $35.

Two Irish women urge lasting peace

EDITOR'S NOTE — Two Roman Catholic women, who lead a Catholic-Protestant women's peace movement in Northern Ireland, bring their crusade to the United States this week. Here are profiles of both.

By BETTY WILLIAMS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland [AP] — "I know I might be shot by terrorists," Betty Williams said. "I know I'm placing my own life in danger. I'm aware of the risks, terribly frightened, but what I feel must be done overcomes my fear."

Ms. Williams, 32, a Roman Catholic housewife with a seafaring husband and two children, was talking, before leaving today for the United States, about being co-leader of a Protestant-Catholic women's peace movement that has attracted a large following in Northern Ireland.

She and Mairead Corrigan, 23, want to tell Irish-Americans to stop sending money to organizations which, they claim, help the Irish Republican Army.

Because of her leadership in the campaign, Ms. Williams has been branded a traitor by the IRA and thugs tried to burn her house down.

Williams started the nonsectarian campaign after the deaths Aug. 10 of three young children of a Roman Catholic family — the nephews and niece of Ms. Corrigan. They were hit by a runaway terrorist car whose driver had been shot by British soldiers.

Ms. Williams, who has a 12-year-old boy and a 5-year-old girl, said she was horror-struck by the deaths of the three children.

Until then, there had been little to distinguish her from thousands of other Northern Irish women, living amid the bombings, shootings and clashes that have taken 1,625 lives in seven years.

She said she often prayed for peace in her three-bedroom home and had attended earlier peace rallies. The deaths of the children changed her.

"My whole life has been turned upside down," she said. "I used to worry about dust on top of the television set and cleaning everything until it shone. Now it all takes second place.

"Essentially this is a protest by women. We are behind every family, even those with terrorists in them. To the mothers of terrorists, I can only say this: I think they should look up to God and ask forgiveness for what they have done."

Vaccine 'safe'

CINCINNATI [UPI] — Cincinnati Health Commissioner Dr. Arnold Leff says there is "little risk" in giving swine flu vaccinations to pregnant women.

Leff's comment contradicted a statement Friday by Dr. Richard T.F. Schmidt, director of obstetrics and gynecology at Cincinnati Good Samaritan Hospital, at a health conference in Winnipeg, Ontario, Canada.

"My own view is that people ought to be very much guarded about vaccinating pregnant women," said Schmidt, president of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

AFL-CIO endorses Spanos

NASHUA, N.H. [AP] — The New Hampshire AFL-CIO State Labor Council yesterday endorsed Democrat Harry Spanos over Republican incumbent Meldrim Thomson in the state's gubernatorial race.

It was the first gubernatorial endorsement in the state council's 20-year history.

The rest of the Democratic ticket-congressional candidate Joseph Grandmaison, Rep. Norman D'Amours, and Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale — was endorsed routinely by a standing vote.

Spanos and Thomson had appeared before the group's 20th annual convention Saturday. Thomson said he would veto right-to-work legislation that prohibits labor contracts requiring union membership.

Spanos followed Thomson and attacked his labor record.

The endorsement yesterday came after nearly two hours of bitter debate. The vote was 98 to 47, two votes above the required two-thirds margin.

Opposition to the endorsement came chiefly from a conservative faction in the Building Trades Council, led by Joseph Moriarity, a longtime Thomson champion.

Opponents of endorsement argued that the labor council should stay neutral, that it is politically foolish to endorse a candidate because if he loses, the winner may turn against labor's interests.

Besides Moriarity's lobbying for Thomson, opposition to Spanos also was generated by the candidate's stand against construction of the Seabrook nuclear power plant that represents 3,000 jobs.

The state AFL-CIO's executive council vetoed unanimously yesterday to work towards reinstatement of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire construction permit, suspended by the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Moriarity, named by Thomson to several state boards and commissions, praised the conservative governor as being "absolutely pro-worker ... He's gone along with us."

Two years ago, Moriarity led a successful convention move that declined to endorse either Thomson or his Democratic opponent, Richard Leonard.

Leonard's loss by about 5,000 votes was attributed partly to the lack of labor's official endorsement.

President escapes death

Builders questioned after explosion

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (UPI) — Military investigators yesterday questioned civilian workers who built a reviewing stand that blew up Saturday in the second attempt this year to assassinate President Jorge Videla.

The explosion at the Campo de Mayo army base 20 miles southwest of Buenos Aires only missed killing the president because a Signals Corps review ended 15 minutes ahead of schedule, military sources said. The bomb went off a few minutes after Videla left the reviewing stand and entered a nearby barracks. Two soldiers were injured.

The plastic charge, apparently activiated by a timing device, was placed inside one of the horizontal metal tubes of the framework just behind the national seal decorating the front of the stand, sources said. The president usually stands behind the seal.

Military sources said workers employed by the private film that put up the reviewing stand were taken into custody and military interrogators were also questioning officers and enlisted men assigned to provide security during the review.

Argentina's media observed a news blackout yesterday on the President's narrow escape.

Newspapers appeared without a word on the explosion. Radio and television newscasts did not mention the incident.

News media sources told United Press International there was no government order suppressing the information. Editors apparently decided to await official confirmation before publishing any version of the event.

La Prensa, La Nacion and Clarin newspapers printed accounts of the ceremony Videla attended, with photographs of the president on the reviewing stand, without mentioning the blast that wrecked the stand shortly afterward.

Protestor delivers writ

AUCKLAND, New Zealand (UPI) — A lone protester yesterday delivered a writ to the captain of the nuclear-powered U.S. cruiser Long Beach by canoeing up to the 16,000-ton warship and sticking the document on its side.

The protester, Donovan McGrath, said the writ summoned Capt. Harry C. Schrader, 44, of Sheboygan, Wis., to court for bringing into Auckland harbor an "injurious substance" — namely the Long Beach. McGrath said he obtained the writ from a court.

"I understand a sailor took the writ to the captain, who was watching from the Long Beach," McGrath said. "If Schrader is not in court tomorrow, I understand I have power to ask for his arrest."

Lawyers for Schrader say the writ was invalid due to a technicality: it was delivered on a Sunday.

McGrath said security around the Long Beach was not very good and a saboteur would find it was easy to reach her and cause a nuclear accident.

STUDENT SENATE COMMITTEES

There are currently two vacancies on the nominating subcommittee of the Student Senate. The sub-committee is responsible for appointing the membership of all other Senate committees. Both senators and non-senators are eligible for membership. Applications are available in the Student Senate office, 420 Student Union, and must be returned by midnight tonight. Interviews will take place Tuesday, Oct. 5 at 6:30 p.m. in the Senate office.

There are also openings on all Senate committees:

Governmental Affairs, Budgets, Finance, Academic Affairs, and Rents and Fees.

— Governmental Affairs Committee is responsible for SGA elections, recognition of student organizations, and reporting on amendments to the SGA Constitution.

— Budgets Committee reviews all applications for budgets from Recognized Student Organization (RSOs), and recommends to the Senate the allocation of the $1.1 million Student Activities Tax (SATF).

— Finance Committee allocates money to RSOs throughout the year for programs not covered within the SATF budget.

— Academic Affairs Committee watchdogs the academic side of the University, and makes recommendations concerning educational policy.

— Rents and Fees Committee watchdogs the University budget procedure, to determine how student money is spent.

Senators and non-senators are eligible for membership on these committees. Applications are available in the Senate office, and must be returned by Wednesday, Oct. 6. Interviews will be held from Oct. 7 to Oct. 13. Times and places for interviews will be announced.

Chancellor Schmidt leads in neck-and-neck election

BON (AP). — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's ruling coalition held the narrowest of leads in West Germany's neck-and-neck general election yesterday, according to the first computer projection announced by national television.

The First German Television Network said its computer projection, based on returns from a representative sampling of 111 of the nation's 50,000 polling stations, gave Schmidt's social Democrat-Free Democrat coalition a tentative 50.2-49 per cent lead over Helmut Kohl's conservative Christian Democrats.

Earlier on-the-spot surveys of voters yesterday showed a similar tight margin in favor of the socialist-liberal bloc. Less than one per cent was going to minor parties and independents.

Observers said at midday it appeared more than 90 per cent of the 41.6 million eligible voters would cast ballots.

Kohl hoped that the Sept. 19 Swedish election, in which the socialists were ousted after a 44-year reign, was indicative of a new conservatism in Western Europe.

In a campaign that centered on personalities more than issues, 3,244 candidates from four major parties and 30 minor parties and other groups ran for the 496 seats in the Bundestag, the lower house of the German parliament. A majority of the Bundestag will elect the chancellor.

Going into the election, Schmidt's Social Democrats held 229 seats, which together with the 41 seats held by the liberal Free Democrats gave them a 270-225 edge over the Christian Democrats and their allies of the Bavarian Christian Social Union. One seat was held by an independent.

Schmidt, 57, a former defense and finance minister, succeeded fellow Social Democrat Willy Brandt as chancellor two years ago. Brandt resigned after a close aide was uncovered as an East German spy.

Schmidt gained international attention with his successful economic policies and sometimes haughty personality.

Kohl, 46, who aimed to regain the popularity the Christian Democrats enjoyed under the late Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, took office as governor of the Roman Catholic-dominated state of Rhineland-Palatinate of 1969 as the youngest of 10 West German state executives. He has no experience in international politics, a fact cited frequently by Schmidt.

The two party leaders emphasized domestic policy in the campaign but differed little on the major issues.

Synagogue break ushers in holiday

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Just hours before Jews began the celebration of Yom Kippur yesterday, a group of Arabs broke into a synagogue at the Tomb of Abraham in occupied Hebron and tore apart furnishings and the holy books and scrolls inside, military officials said.

The government clamped a tight curfew on the West Bank city of 39,000 Arabs. Angry Jews congregated outside the Moslem mosque which covers the tomb to Demand action from the government and to ensure access to the site for Jews during Yom Kippur.

The incident, the worst in several years of religious strife in the biblical city, came after rumors spread that Jews on Friday had desecrated copies of the Koran, the Moslem holy book, in the Moslem section of the tomb, which is holy to both religions.

The military command said the rumors were false, but they were widely reported on Arab radio stations.

Military sources also reported scattered demonstrations in other areas of the West Bank of the Jordan River. Students boycotted some classes, hurled stones at Israeli cars and set up burning roadblocks in Nablus, Ramallah and some other towns.

The religious strife came a few hours before the beginning of Yom Kippur, the holiest day on the Jewish calendar, when Jews pray for forgiveness of their sins.

Israelies observed Yom Kippur with fasting and prayer yesterday. Traffic halted, airports closed and thousdands of Jews flocked to synagogues.

The Tomb of Abraham is normally packed on Yom Kippur with worshipers from the nearby Jewish settlement of Qiryat Arba. The Jews near Hebron have been carrying on a running battle with the town's Arabs over rights to pray at an abandoned synagogue in the town.

The government ordered the tomb closed on Friday because of stone-throwing incidents between Arabs and Jews.

Military sources said a force of more than 100 Arabs overwhelmed guards at the entrance of the cave before dawn prayers, ripped up several Torahs, or scrolls of Jewish law, and prayer books and scattered them around the cave. Furniture was gutted and the intricately woven curtains and coverings inside were torn to shreds.

Newsmen were prevented from entering the town, and independent reports were unavailable.

An Arab official of Hebron reached by telephone claimed the demonstration began peacefully but turned violent when army troops tried to clear the cave by force.

A town clerk of Hebron reached by telephone also blamed the violence on the Israeli army. The clerk, Khalid Iseili, said the demonstration began when students marched to the tomb waving copies of the Koran.

They entered the cave, but without any intent to destroy, Iseili said. He claimed the students used furniture "and anything that came to hand" to protect themselves from the soldiers trying to break up the demonstration.

Both Arab and military sources said there were injuries on both sides, but it was not known how many.

Equal education deprived?

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Pennsylvania could be headed for a constitutional crisis over desegregation, an issue that has brought fear and violence to both the North and South.

But the controversy here is not a racial one, at least not on the surface. It involves the busing of nonpublic school students — most of them white Catholics.

Pennsylvania Secretary of Education John C. Pittenger has ordered five school districts in Pennsylvania, including Pittsburgh, to bus non-public school children as much as 10 miles beyond district lines, or risk losing state transportation reimbursements.

The Pittsburgh case is tied up in Commonwealth Court. The city school board last week won a reprieve until the court reaches a final decision.

Two of the districts — Pequea Valley and Pittsburgh — said they would turn to constitutional arguments should Commonwealth Court find they are not already in compliance with state law.

Lawyers for the two districts said the busing order violates the equal protection and due process clauses of the 14th Amendment — the constitutional basis for court desegregation orders.

Pittsburgh's Assistant Soliciter. Percifor Oliver, said 95 per cent of the children who would be bused beyond the district would be going to non-public schools.

He said that would deprive public school students of their rights under the equal protection clause.

Pequea Valley's lawyer, Charles Grove, said a federal court had voided an almost identical Iowa law on the grounds it violated the equal protection clause.

In the Pittsburgh case, according to Oliver, not only would mostly non-public school children profit from the extra busing, but practically all of those students would be white.

This possible "white flight" would then deprive black students of equal educational opportunities — a violation of the due process clause of the 14th amendment, he said.

Some see a legal parallel to the Pittsburgh situation in the situation which existed in some parts of the South during the 1960s when counties, in an effort to avoid desegregation of public schools, diverted funds to private schools.

Two U.S. Supreme Court decisions have made such a strategy unconstitutional. In the mid 1960s, the court ordered Prince Edward County, Va. to reopen its public schools, ruling that the schools had been closed to deprive black students of their right to a public education in an integrated system.

British drought thing of past

By GREGORY JENSEN

LONDON (UPI) — The Great British Drought of 1976 was the reverse of an old cliche Sunday — forgotten but not gone.

Weeks of regular rain have made it seem that the worst British drought in 500 years never really happened.

Grass is green again, country lanes are muddy and there are puddles on main roads.

Water rationing became a thing of the past this weekend.

Supplies to the homes of more than 140,000 people in Devonshire, cut off completely when the drought was at its worst, are being switched on again — the county had its heaviest September rains in 16 years.

More than 260,000 persons in Wales, where water was cut to homes for 17 hours of each 24, have had supplies restored.

Tough restrictions on water use remain. It is still illegal to wash a car, water a lawn, fill a swimming pool or wash a building.

People are using more water than before restrictions were imposed. This, and the apparent normality of a rain-soaked country, has water officials badly worried.

"All this rain has encouraged people to relax their vigilance over water saving," said Gerald Payne of the Thames Water Authority.

"But the situation is still very serious, and it will be for a long time."

To underline the point, new water restrictions came into force for 4 million users in East Anglia Saturday — a day when some parts of the area were flooded by heavy rains.

Throughout September, contrary to weathermen's predictions, Britain proved the truth of another cliche: that it never rains but it pours.

In some areas September rainfall was the highest on record. Floods swept Glasgow, parts of Manchester and many country areas.

But much of the rain was in the wrong places. Much ran off baked earth straight into the sea. Too little ran into reservoirs which supply cities.

Continuing Ed offers Vet tech program

The UMass Division of Continuing Education, in cooperation with the Massachusetts Veterinary Medical Association and the UMass Stockbridge School of Agriculture, is offering a Veterinary Technician Training Program this fall.

The series of workshops is aimed at upgrading the skills of individuals currently employed as veterinary technicians. Workshops, staffed by veterinarians and technicians who are experts in their respective fields, will offer students the opportunity to participate in lecture and "wet-lab" classes according to the following schedule: Saturday and Sunday, Introduction to Animal Nursing; Oct. 16-17, Front-Office Procedure and History-Taking; Nov. 20-21, Introduction to Hematology; Dec. 18-19, Parasitology-Urinalysis; Jan. 8-9, Introduction to Anesthesiology.

This series of training modules is intended to meet the continuing education needs of individuals who serve veterinarians in small-animal health practices.

It is also the intent of this training program to provide students with a heightened awareness of their service role to the veterinarian and with an increased capacity to carry out their functions. Enrollment will be limited to individuals who are currently employed as veterinary technicians or who have considerable experience in related fields. Students will be expected to spend time in the laboratory, when appropriate, working with live subjects and performing tasks while learning new, or refining previously acquired technical skills.

All training modules will be conducted on the Amherst campus of UMass on weekends. Instructional activities will take place from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays.

Students may register for any or all of the workshops. The Division of Continuing Education will award Continuing Education Units (CEU) to each individual who successfully completes a workshop. The CEU is designed for in-service professionals and non-professionals who want to maintain a record of their participation in approved non-credit Continuing Education programs.

Further information on the Veterinary Technician Training Program may be obtained from the Division's Certificate-Training Program Office, 205 Hills North, UMass, Amherst, MA, 01002, or by phoning 545-3410.

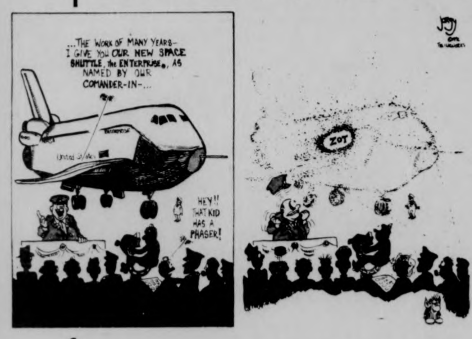
Winning the Trekkie vote

By BRYANT M. JORDAN

In the scramble for votes in November, Presidential Candidates, President Ford and Jimmy Carter have courted the American Legion the Labor Party, the nations farmers, and the Catholic hierarchy, as well as various ethnic groups.



...THE WORK OF MANY YEARS— I GIVE YOU OUR NEW SPACE SHUTTLE, the ENTERPRISE, AS NAMED BY OUR COMANDER-IN-...
United States
HEY!! THAT KID HAS A PHASER!
ZOT

Recently, however, in a move that Carter cannot match, President Ford overrode the decision-makers at the National Aeronautic and Space Administration and christened America's new Space Shuttle craft, the Enterprise; thereby wooing yet another organization: the Trekkies. This group, whose members number easily in the tens-of-thousands, and hail from any and every background, is an organization of fans dedicated to the memory and resurrection of the celebrated science fiction TV series, STAR TREK.

In the last year or two the Trekkies have carried on a massive letter-writing campaign to President Ford, petitioning for a Space Shuttle Enterprise, and though the Space Orbiter rolled out for display and tests bears no resemblance to its Star Ship namesake, and neither fires proton torpedoes nor derives power from dilythium crystals, still, it is the first re-usable space craft and designed to carry the John Does as well as the Neil Armstrongs "where no man has gone before."

About the size of a DC-9 passenger plane, the Space Orbiter will carry up to a total of eight persons and, in its cargo hold, a payload of 65,000 lbs. Mounted to a large liquid-fuel tank, the Orbiter will make a vertical launch from Cape Canaveral's Kennedy Space Center in about two or three years. Lift-off will be achieved mainly by the thrusts of two solid-booster rockets, also mounted to the large tank.

However, shortly after take-off, the boosters will break away from the main body and, parachuting back to earth like the earlier space capsules, will be recovered and used again. At apogee (the highest point of the crafts orbit) the liquid fuel tank will also blast away from the Orbiter and return to earth. The Orbiter, with its own rockets, will then put itself into its desired position for orbit.

The Orbiter re-enters the atmosphere and lands "dead stick". That means the pilots have no control over the movements of their craft as they come in for the landing. The calculations and preparations having been made before re-entry, the Orbiter, hopefully, will swoop down from space and sky and come to rest eventually on a special runway, three miles long.

While President Ford never mentioned the Trekkies or their letters when he announced his order to name the Space Shuttle, the Enterprise, there can hardly be any doubt but that the Trekkies shaped his decision on the matter. NASA intended to name the craft, the Constitution.

Perhaps the President is attempting to make himself out to be a Captain James T. Kirk and thereby put Jimmy Carter into the position of one of those nasty Klingons.

Politics, "the final frontier...."

Warp four, Mr. Ford, elections dead ahead!

Sociologically speaking

To the Editor:

Like Pumpkin Lady (letters, 9-30-76), I too have been watching recent developments in Southwest. She, however, watches with curiosity; I watch with growing rage.

The LEMMING: PEOPLE analogy is a brilliant stroke. (Let's pass this keen thinking on to the Soc. Dep't). But alas Pumpkin Lady, physiological and mental testing indicates that people are not lemmings. Your fantastic sociological analysis of Southwest, chalking up thrown objects to "persons unknown" and "environmental factors", is an incredibly dangerous way of divorcing people from responsibility for their own actions. (How about your toss, Pumpkin Lady?)

Objects falling from towers are potentially deadly. I suggest that throwing objects off of the towers is not a "nasty deed", but an act of criminal irresponsibility which certainly warrants expulsion from the University. Somebody does know who is throwing those objects. And we do control our own actions and should be responsible for them. The screens are merely a result of people forgetting this fact.

As for you Pumpkin Lady, if you did indeed throw something off of a building, thank goodness you are at least off campus — sociologically speaking.

Continental Walk

To the Editor:

We believe profound change can be achieved through organized peaceful action. Looking at the examples Martin Luther King and Caesar Chavez and the Vietnam Peace Movement, we know that if we have determination and numbers we can win our goals peacefully. We do not want an America filled with "armed police" and "bigger and better prisons."

We believe in democracy, in non-violent struggle. We will use every peaceful means, from voting to civil disobedience, from boycotts to mass demonstrations, never losing sight of our goals — an America where we have fewer prisons, fewer police, fewer guns — and real social justice for all people.

The Continental Walk, carrying the issues of peace and social justice into as many small towns as possible, will culminate on October 16 in Washington. In the Capitol, we will demand, immediate action toward disarmament, full exmployment at decent wages, an end to racism, equal rights for all women, full amnesty for all Vietnam war resisters, and immediate massive aid to our cities.

People from the Amherst-Northampton area who wish to go to Washington on October 16 can sign up at the Veterans' Coalition, Room 411 Student Union. People who wish to help set up information tables or help organize in any way may call 545-0712 or 584 8975 for more information.

Not a 'same old hack'

To the Editor:

This is a response to an article in Wednesday's paper, entitled ISC: The Same Old Hacks by Rick Gurreghian. I do agree with Mr. Gurreghian on one point, namely, the unfairness of the criticism of the ISC before its official inception. The meeting Wednesday night was more functional and orderly than last year's meetings. I am not claiming that the ISC accomplished a miracle; however there was improvement and the ISC played a part [be it large or small].

I am a bit confused about the logic of part of this article. He denigrates past Senate functions [with some right] and isn't all too crazy about our present and last two presidents. This remains open to some debate. But the part that threw me occurred when he criticized these along with the formation of the ISC on the grounds that student apathy abounds, when one of the goals of the ISC is to correct this situation.

The ISC hopes to generate student involvement, build a support base, and organize the Senate into a functioning unit. The means to achieve this are number one, increased student-senate communication and involvement [details are left to the individual senator]. This would generate that support base and also effect a compromise between the pro-anti union people. [The student-senator relationship will have some of the qualities of a union while also freeing some money from the organizing project.]

As a new senator in this early going I can't discern exactly the number of pro-anti union people in the coalition but I believe that it is a mixture of the two. I am not committed to either side yet and can't be because a major determinant in my voting will be as promised: the expressed wishes of my constituency — the students in Washington Tower.

The point I'm trying to make is that we must allow time to judge the success of the ISC in its expressed goals and we must also hold our judgement for the moment as to the integrity of its founders. The only thing for sure is that I, one ISC senator, will give my best effort to live up to my campaign promises and will not willfully be a part of any "backfighting" or "power play". So the answer is no, I am not a "same old hack".

Typical abortionist rhetoric

To the Editor:

Ms. Sains' column of Sept. 22 spouts typical abortionist rhetoric, attempting to justify the unjustifiable with superficial cliches.

She announces, "Money has always been able to buy an abortion." This is hardly an earth-shaking revelation, and moreover begs the whole question. It is obviously true that money has always been able to buy practically anything, including a contract on your favorite enemy. But instead of forcing blood money on the poor, why don't we offer them a less limited choice: present them with a list of all the things that the poor have traditionally had to go without (and which the rich have always been able to afford) and let them decide which of these things are to be given priority? The way out of the double-standard is to eliminate the death-dealing practices of the rich, not to make them equally available to the poor.

No one is demanding "control over the bodies of poor women," or any other women for that matter. It is sufficient that women and doctors cease their destruction of other, different bodies — those of unborn children. For this is the objective reality of abortion, which no subjective feelings, personal opinions, beliefs, evasions, or slogans can alter, a truth entirely independent of any majoritarian consensus. Indeed, it is strict biological fact that every individual conceived of human parents is a human person from the moment of conception, its genetic structure complete and uniquely its own, a new entity distinct from both parents.

Whether a child is wanted or not has absolutely no effect on his-her intrinsic humanity. Since the State exists to protect all human life, without exception, regardless of age, size, or condition of dependency, it follows that legislation prohibiting abortion is a logical consequence of laws against the taking of any other innocent human life.

Just as the Supreme Court sinned grievously in 1857 when it ruled that Dred Scott was essentially property, without inherent rights, so again in 1973 did the Court tragically err in conferring the "private right" to kill, on the grounds that the unborn child is not a "person in the whole sense." It thereby established an elite of the perfect, the planned, and the privileged, creating a new oppressed minority, a new class fair game for the ultimate in discrimination.

Society is now "free" to arbitrarily impose its will on its most helpless and defenseless members, unborn children — and the promise of the right to life is a hollow echo from the Declaration of Independence.

Sandbox senate?

Lastnweek Nelson Rockefeller had the honor of being elected a student senator at UMass. His commuter seat, won with a landslide three votes, was disallowed when someone suddenly discovered that Rocky is not a student here.

Now this little news item would be pretty damn funny were it not for the fact that it is quite true. And although I have no statistics, I suspect that this sort of voter turnout was quite typical of the election as a whole. In some areas there were NO candidates running for a seat at all, meaning that a senator will be appointed by the appropriate area government.

This ultimately leads to the question of why, in a community consisting of supposedly idealistic young people, student government fosters very little popular support. So little, in fact, that participation in national, state, and local elections is usually much higher.

The most common answer is that students have a limited interest in governing themselves, as the majority of them will only be here four years. This is a good explanation, but an incomplete one. Surely there are enough issues of crucial concern to students to give them at least a passing interest in voting. Faced with rising fees and declining services, we could all use some sort of influence over our own fates.

Part of the problem lies in the way the elections are held. Most of us who vote — and I confess to being a member of this group — have fairly little if any knowledge of the candidates and how they stand on issues. And many find it useless, it not plain wrong, to vote for someone they know nothing about. Perhaps the best solution to his difficulty would be the holding of informal candidates' forums in all the residential areas on and off campus, well publicized in advance. Even when only one candidate was on the ballot, such a session might lend an air of legitimacy to many votes.

But the real crux of the voter problem is that many students simply do not believe student government ever has served, ever will serve, or is even capable of serving their interest. The administration and state government are powers we can overcome only in token ways → it often seems that the concessions made to student pressure are merely appeasements; a good way to keep us happy.

Such an attitude occurs in much of the U.S., but it is especially strong on campuses, where the legal influence students have is severly limited. Yet while our legal power may presently be small, our unity of interests and goals is relatively large. We have the opportunity, even within the confines of the restricted college community, to make a system that reflects our ideals. That is why student government can be so important.

Still, many of our so-called student leaders insist that student government follow the example of other governmental institutions, rather than make a good example for those institutions. I recently overheard the conversation of two such people, and though they are both well-meaning chaps to be sure, their attitude reflected this narrow-minded concept of government.

One of them noted that the Student Government Association (SGA) is a "sandbox government" — that most senators have fun emulating the "real world", but not much else. He carried the analogy further, saying that while we students knew the shape and color our sandbox should be, we could never quite build it high enough to be successful.

It seems small wonder that student government continues to serve only a budgetary purpose and little or no political purpose when such an attitude is prevalent. If this is the best we can expect from a government where we are all peers with similar objectives, what possible hope can there be in the "real world"?

Perhaps student government is doomed to failure or obscurity, but I can't help believing that our efforts here could set a valuable example. And even if this is just a sandbox government, it can still be vastly superior to the manure pile the adult world plays in.

Oppression in Iran

By GREG BRYANT

Article No. 5 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, of which most nations of the world in theory subscribe, states that "No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment." Sadly, though, this statement has been blatently ignored. Rather, degrading treatment in the form of torture has flowered into epidemic proportions, actually evolving into an institution in many countries.

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, generally not one to be swayed by sentiment, surprisingly declared earlier this year that "A government that tramples on the rights of its citizens denies the purpose of its existence." A few months after this was espoused though, Mr. Kissinger was off again on another one of his diplomatic jaunts. On this occasion he was to talk planes and guns with the military dictatorship of the Shah of Iran.

Obviously Mr. Kissinger did not realize that the Shah, and his secret police (SAVAK), — according to the documented reports of Amnesty International and others — have suppressed and tortured "enemies" of the state ever since his takeover in 1953. The Shah, on the other hand, has emphatically denied these charges, declaring "We don't need to torture people any more." The evidence indicates otherwise. Among those arrested and tortured recently include Vida Hadjebi Tabrizi, a noted female sociologist; Gholamhossein Sa'edi, a playwright, and poet-critic Reza Baraheni, who now lives in exile in New York City.

Our government, dictated by the foreign policies of Mr. Kissinger, has found it convenient to negate these deliberate infringments upon " ... the rights of its citizens ... ". In fact, Washington has sold the Shah over 10.4 billion dollars worth of arms; over twice as much as to Israel over the same period. Congress' attempt for redress, by requiring reports on human rights conditions in countries receiving U.S. aid, was promptly vetoed by President Ford this year.

Until Mr. Kissinger and others in Washington begin to base their policies more on human concern and less on purely political commitments, the brutality such as that exhibited in Iran will persist.

Southwest:

Welcome to mice country

By MICHAEL ROBERTS

Southwest is characteristic of the urban development instant slum insanity that emerged in the waning years of the Johnson Administration. Assuming it was built with federal funds is superficial; perceiving that it harbors similarities to ill-fated Federal Housing Projects is essential for understanding it.

Southwest is basically a government housing project. Instead of providing low income housing to the poor in the city, it provides low income housing to University students. Its structures are poorly designed for humane living. It is overcrowded, dirty, noisy and smelly. Vandalism flourishes there. Its residents pay high prices for services, space and food. It has many people for too few toilets. It pressures students who are already compressed by courses, bureaucracy, and social behavior. SW is the classic slum built by government fiat.

Southwest oozes anti-social behavior. Its people are dirty — they litter and throw garbage in hallways and out windows. Why can't they keep their neighborhoods clean? They're lazy. Only few have jobs, many have government support. They abuse drugs. They don't spend money on food and clothes. They squander it on stereos and automobiles.

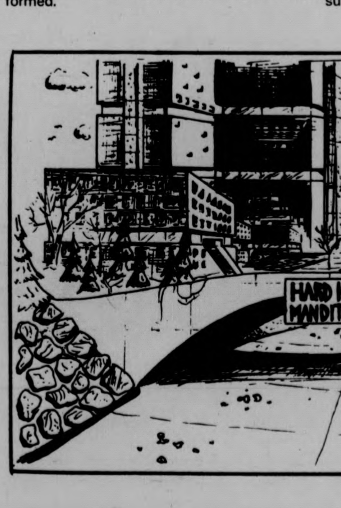
The crime rate is high; serious crimes go unreported. Destruction of property is common. They have no concern for others. They throw bedpans out windows; they smash elevators. These people are social deviants and perverts. SW subverts the moral fibre of American society.

Southwest, by standards of famous German political theorist, is the university in turmoil. Its students are rebellious and riotous. The university is in danger from within and without. Southwest needs law and order.

First, Southwest should be surrounded by an electrified fence complemented by security gates. Above each gate should be a sign, "Welcome to mice country."

Windows of towers should be blocked in with cinder bricks. Low rises should have bars placed in the windows.

Security guards should be given billy clubs. They should patrol hallways of dormitories twenty-four hours a day. Television surveillance should be implemented throughout SW. Dog patrols would be formed.



SWAT teams would be organized.

Students would be encouraged to join the Southwest Air Force. They could be motivated by special means to jump from towers.

Anti-aircraft guns should be set up to shoot objects falling from towers.

Machine gun posts would be constructed.

Floor counselors should be armed and given police powers to enforce University regulations.

Rights to due process should be suspended; proteotive custody statutes should be used as preventitive detention laws. The writ of habeus corpus should be suspended. The right of research and seizure should be ignored, especially so counselors can search rooms for lounge furniture. Civil liberties would be taken away.

Students not conforming to social norms should be harassed, tortured and subjected to psychological stress. Physical tortures and hazing could be encouraged as healthy to University life.

Students not complying with University regulations and social norms would be publicly executed on the pyramids. Make examples of them.

Would anyone wonder why?

Obviously, regulations and restrictions are not going to improve the quality of life in Southwest. SW is already a pressure cooker. Tensions cause the problems; more law is not the cure.

What the rules should tell us, is that policymakers are not interested in making life humane, but more controlled and restricted. The regulations are for efficiency; restrictions are to mold mechanical anthropods. As they regulate us into the Twilight Zone, the ultimate questions students must appraise are, "Do I really need the dehumanizing job on the outside when I graduate? Or can I live in a human social order, not left to some obscure future, but now?"

The process of control is familiar to our eduction. The cell blocks and slum walls are evident. Will they be swept away opening windows to a humane world? What happens here also occurs in society. We are also policymakers, we are free to choose or reject the law and order outlook. If we do not reject it, our lives will be reduced to bureaucratic and mechanical motions, and that will be the end of human life, our lives.

Welcome to mice country.

Suggestions for foliage viewers

Registrar of Motor Vehicles, Robert A. Panora, suggested that "motorists out to view fall foliage should bear in mind that they should not impede the flow of traffic while viewing the scenery since it could lead to collisions and tieups."

Pulling off the main highway into a rest stop or other safe place is advisable.

He also reminds the drivers that these same beautiful leaves can be as treacherous as ice when they have fallen to the ground and become wet. Speed should be adjusted to these conditions.

The registrar cautions drivers to be aware of children playing and hiding in piles of leaves during this fall season.

Registrar clarifies vehicle numbers

The compulsory motor vehicle inspection which ends Oct. 15 has caused some confusion for those owners of motor vehicles who discover that the vehicle identification number (vin) on their registration certificate does not match the vin on the vehicle itself, or that their vehicle does not have a vin on it.

Registrar of Motor Vehicles, Robert A. Panora, provides the correct procedure — as follows:

—If the vin on the registration certificate does not match the vin on the vehicle itself, go to the insurance company to make out a correction on RMV 3 form. One can then file this correction form at the nearest Registry office with a fee of $3.00.

—If there is no vin at all on the vehicle, go to the nearest Registry office and make out an application for replacement of vin (form RMV-T-V 29). The fee is $3.50.

Proposals sought for women's workshops

Everywoman's Center is currently soliciting proposals for Spring Project Self workshops. Project Self is an eight-week long workshop program for women, administered three times a year (Fall, Spring and Summer). The Spring series will meet from late February through mid-March, with most workshops meeting once a week for two hours. Proposals for day-long and weekend long workshops are also encouraged.

The deadline for submitting proposals is Oct. 29. Those interested should call or drop by Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell Hall or call 545-0812 to obtain a proposal form and discuss their ideas for workshops.

Amherst center consciousness help

The Amherst Center is offering consultation to Five-College students seeking to set up independent programs (under the supervision of Five-College faculty) in the areas of Consciousness Studies.

The areas of study that are offered include: Intuition, Body, Spirit, Occult, Eastern, Tribal and Planetary notions. The consultation and services that are offered are of interest to the student who has a goal the investigation of a variety of points of entry into the 'Aquarian Frontier' (the wide range of disciplines available to expand awareness and to explore the non-limiting aspects of the Mind).

The center would be happy to meet with any interested students; there is no charge for this service.

For more information, contact Martin Sussman or Dick Spahn at the Amherst Center. The center is located behind Faces of Earth in Amherst; the phone number is 253-2500.

University Health Services

HEALTH CARE FOR STUDENTS' SPOUSES AND CHILDREN

For the first time, a comprehensive health program for dependents of students will be available. Students who have paid the basic health fee may enroll their spouses and children at the University Health Services. Dependents will receive the same comprehensive package of services that is currently provided to students for an additional fee of $55 per semester. This is an inclusive fee and includes coverage of the spouse and all dependent children.

Parents may receive care for their children for one of the primary physicians and—or nurse practitioners or they may choose the pediatrician and pediatric nurse practitioners who are available for comprehensive child care. In addition, the program provides unlimited physician and nurse practitioner consultation as well as specialty consultation, including gynecology and pre-natal care. Inpatient care at the University Health Center is provided, as is 24-hour emergency coverage. Also included are allergy shots and immunizations, complete laboratory, physical therapy and x-ray services. Most medication prescribed by plan physicians are available with a 50 cent copayment.

Services include eye examination ($10 copayment), mental health consultation, including couples and family counseling; dental services including initial examination (except x-ray), emergency treatment and dental education. Other dental services are available on a copayment or fee-for-service basis as time permits. Health Education services include Cold Self-Care, and programs in alcohol, human sexuality and women's health just to name a few.

The BASIC PLAN described above is designed to interface with the SUPPLEMENTAL HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN to provide total coverage for the student and family. Students and dependents enrolled in the basic health plan are urged to also enroll in the supplemental insurance plan for an additional premium of $56.50 per year for the student and $42.50 per quarter ($170 per year) for the dependents. Services covered include hospital care, surgery, delivery, termination of pregnancy, and emergency care when traveling. Please remember, however, that services other than life threatening emergencies MUST ALWAYS BE AUTHORIZED IN ADVANCE BY A HEALTH SERVICES PHYSICIAN. Dependents who prefer not to enroll in the basic plan must pay $52.50 per quarter ($210 per year) for the supplemental insurance.

If you desire to enroll your dependents into one of the optional programs (Basic Health Plan, Insurance Plan or both) please complete the enrollment form below checking the appropriate program desired. Sign and date the form and mail it with a check for the appropriate amount, made payable to the University of Massachusetts, to the University Health Services. If you wish to enroll in person, you may present the completed form and payment at the UHS Business Office between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. Additional information and enrollment forms can be obtained at the Health Center.

WHOM CAN YOU TRUST? College students say college newspapers carry ads that seem "most honest and credible", according to a Dallas research film.

The sample queried also said it preferred Playboy to Time magazine. Results of their "trust" reading were college newspapers, 34.2 per cent, and magazines, 20.8 per cent.

Physicist discovers sex discrimination

By JACK SAUNDERS
Pacific News Service

Dr. Anna Torosian, a physicist at Washington, D.C.'s Federal City College for the last eight years, has problems.

"She's just a disrupter," says a male colleague who is finishing his first year in the teaching profession.

"Well, just take it from me," he replies when asked to be more specific. "She's constantly trying to stir things up."

"She's supposed to be a fabulous teacher, I'll give her credit for that. It's just that, well, the woman's got problems."

Indeed, as a woman dedicated to a career in science, Anna Torosian has always had problems. The product of an immigrant Armenian family that scorned higher education for women, Torosian married at 18 as the only "honorable way" to attend college.

While a graduate student in physics at New York University, her fellow students — all male — warned her to quit. She was expected, as the class female, to clean up the lab after experiments.

And as a researcher at the National Bureau of Standards, Torosian clashed again with male scientists — a problem her superior attributed to "personality problems" on her part.

But despite the problems of making it an almost exclusively male physics "fraternity" (where women account for just 5.5 per cent of the profession), Torosian denies that women need affirmative action programs.

"Nobody needs to search out women scientists," she says. "All they need to do is judge the applicants objectively."

BROKEN PROMISES

But ironically, the science professions — the bedrock of objectivity — remain an enduring bastion of sex discrimination.

The most frequent explanation — that little girls lack the mathematical abilities of little boys — doesn't hold up.

Reliable research shows that males and females have no difference in analytical reasoning ability. Girls tend to do better than boys at mathematics in the early grades.

When the National Academy of Sciences went through the old high school records of male and female scientists in 1965 they found that the girls who later earned Ph.D.s in science tested higher than their male classmates in all subjects. They graduated higher in their classes and their IQ scores were a significant five-to-eight per cent higher than their male counterparts.

But somewhere along the way the promise of a scientific career is sharply reversed for women.

Women associate professors — a mid-level rank — stand about one-quarter the chance of men to achieve full professorship, according to the National Science Foundation.

A woman who does make full professor, another report says, will earn one-third less than the average male professor. In fact, she can expect to earn less than the average male associate professor, whom she outranks.

MUA reviews referendums

Immediately following tonight's 10:00 news, WMUA (UMass radio, 91.1 FM) will broadcast a review of some of the more controversial referendum questions which will appear on the ballot for the Massachusetts general election Nov. 2.

Tonight's program is being presented as a special feature of "Focus", WMUA's weekly public affairs series produced and moderated by Kenneth Mosakowski.

A total of nine referendum questions will appear on the ballot for approval or disapproval by the Commonwealth's voters. Those which have generated the most controversy — and the most heated lobbying activity by opposing interest groups across the state — are the questions regarding a proposed equal rights amendment to the state constitution, adoption of a graduated state income tax, creation of a Massachusetts public power authority, abolition of private ownership of handguns, prohibition of the sale of non-returnable beer and soft-drink containers, and establishment of uniform electric rates for most users of electricity.

The deadline to register to vote in the Nov. 2 general election is tomorrow.

Attica's Big Black to speak on Brown, Gethers behalf

Attica Brother Big Black, a participant and leader of the September 1971 rebellion at Attica Prison in New York, and Dr. John Bracey, of the Earl Brown-Craemen Gethers Defense Committee will speak Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at Mahar Auditorium, UMass.

Black will talk about the meaning of the Attica Rebellion in 1976, and the prisoner organizing now going on in New York state. Bracey will speak about the efforts to free Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers, two Black men from the Amherst area convicted on armed robbery charges over a year ago.

The Attica Prison Rebellion of Sept. 9-13, 1971, represented a historical advance in prisoners bringing public attention to brutality and inhumanity of prison conditions. As outside observers noted, the men who lived in D yard of Attica prison for four days created a society of order, discipline, and racial unity that allowed the demands for changes in the prison system to be heard and understood throughout the country. The response by New York state Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, the assault on the prison on Sept. 13, left 43 prisoners and guards dead, and hundreds wounded.

Big Black will speak about the rebellion, efforts to free Attica Brother Dacajeweiah, the only person returned to prison for participating in the rebellion — a federal civil rights damage suit being brought against state officials by those who suffered from assault on the 13th, and bringing the issue of international amnesty for all prisoners who rebel against intolerable conditions before the United Nations. He will also speak on the strikes that have occurred in New York state prisons in the last two months, which are raising the same issues that were raised in September 1971.

Bracey will talk about the efforts being made to free Brown and Gethers, UMass students, convicted in Northampton Superior Court for the Hadley McDonald's robbery of the summer of 1974. Many believe their convictions came because of racism in the Valley, shown in the way the men were picked out for trial, how the prosecution prepared the testimony of the witnesses, the white jury, and the complicity of the UMass police set-up. Political pressure has forced the state to allow Brown out on an educational release during the week. Efforts continue to secure him a new trial. Despite passing two lie detector tests administered by an ex-New York police sergent, the judge who convicted Craemen in 1975, recently denied him a new trial. His efforts for appeal continue.

The speakers will share the same platform because one thing the spirit of Attica Rebellion means in 1976 is work for the freedom of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers.

For more information, contact Van Jackson, rm. 115 New Africa House, UMass, Amherst 545-0794 or Daniel Katz, 72 West St. Hadley, 584-3862.

Shepherd awaits master's return

MOSCOW (UPI) — Thousands of letters have poured in about the faithful German shepherd waiting at a Moscow airport for the return of its master and a woman even made a 600-mile trip to give the dog a meal, a Soviet newspaper said Sunday.

The dog has been meeting every Ilyushin 18 flight while dodging the dog catcher for the past two years at a Moscow airport in a vigil for its master who went somewhere in Siberia, the newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda said.

The newspaper said that since publishing an article several weeks ago it has been flooded with inquiries about the dog.

"Previously, the only ones interested in the dog's fate were the dog itself and a few friends among airport employes," it said.

However, the newspaper said one elderly woman flew from her home in Donetsk, a Ukrainian city 600 miles south of Moscow, just to bring dinner to the animal.

The newspaper said there was no sign of the missing owner, who took off for Siberia in the autumn of 1974.

Since being abandoned, the newspaper said the dog has lived on the airport grounds, meeting and seeing off every flight of an Ilyushin 18, the type of craft on which its master flew away.

— who accounted for 12.5 per cent of their profession — earned 25 per cent less than male chemists. Since then, two federal laws, an executive order and various affirmative action regulations have made such discrimination a violation of national policy.

Yet today:

—Women chemists earn 27 per cent less than men;

—Women Ph.D.'s earn less than men with master's degrees;

—Women chemists with master's degrees earn less than male chemists with bachelor's degrees;

—And in fact, according to 1973 American Chemical Society data, most women Ph.D.s earn less than most men with bachelor's degrees.

Why? Male university and laboratory officials deny systematic discrimination and blame the lopsided salaries on the ceaseless and aggressive job-hunting habits of talented males, a characteristic they say most women lack.

While men are inclined to scramble for the higher paying jobs, "women," says a senior male physicist at a prestigious government lab, "are maybe more dedicated."

In fact, National Science Foundation figures show that a stereotype-smashing 90 per cent of women scientists stick to their careers throughout their working lives and virtually none drop out during the childbearing years. In some disciplines, as many as half the women remain unmarried.

But while such dedication may help turn out fine research, it does little for career advancement.

GRANTSMANSHIP IS THE KEY

The way to the height of the academic tower is through what university deans and lab directors call "management potential." That means knowing how to survive in a brutally competitive environment where large research organizations slug it out in the corridors of government and private funding sources for the huge bundles of money that propel modern science.

The successful science managers, those who know how to push and pitch, return regularly from Washington and New York with fat research contracts that secure an institution's survival for another year.

And women, said one female physicist, rarely land those $40,000 to $50,000-a-year jobs because they are kept away from the kind of assignments that lead to management positions.

"Women tend to pick up the less visible jobs," said the physicist. "They do small projects on the periphery of major programs," and thus aren't recognized as the central achievers.

Yet those women who survive the years of frustration and stake out a scientific career tend to have the very qualities that make up "management potential" — aggressiveness, strong wills, assertiveness.

And therein lies the problem, says Dr. Sharon Johnson, 42, who is currently fighting a court battle with the Univ. of Pittsburg Medical School over sex discrimination.

"A woman scientist must never be bold," she says. "She is expected to dress femininely and neatly. She must not walk too fast in the hallways. If she breaks these rules, she'll find herself without students, without collaborators, and eventually, without an institution."

Dr. Torosian, 40, says she's broken those rules all her life. She generally wears blue jeans and a sweat shirt; she talks loudly, directly, bluntly. And it's hurt her, she says.

"Physics attracts a certain kind of man," says Torosian. "He tends to be bright, introverted, and he frequently lacks the interests that most men use to get their male egos massaged: things like sports, business success, social prowess."

But they see science, she says, as a "man's job. When they become physicists they can say to themselves, 'Wow, I'm a physicist. I'm a man.'"

"When they see a woman who can do the same job to which they stake their male egos," she adds, "their entire well-being is threatened."

Women who are able to overcome the negative incentives in childhood, the isolation and humiliations from college classmates and the frustrations and blatant sexism in the scientific professions are rare, says Dr. Johnson.

"A scientist is like anyone else," she says. "A scientist needs recognition."

ADMITTING DEFEAT

In a tiny, paper-and-book-cluttered office at an internationally recognized research lab, a woman biochemist known round the world by those who study heart disease admits her annual salary increases are low compared to her male colleagues.

But she insists she is not driven by a desire for fame. Her challenging work and important discoveries bring peer recognition, she says, and that's enough.

No, she says, women don't necessarily get low valued assignments, nor are they necessarily denied advancement. Many women simply lack "management potential," she says.

The interview over, she pages through a phone book to locate others who might have something to say.

Then, interrupting a question, she begins talking in a tense voice.

"It's very discouraging," she says, not looking up from her desk. "I know I'm not going to get any further here. I know that."

"You could say it's admitting defeat," says the woman who, 23 years earlier, drove herself through a grueling Ph.D. program at the Univ. of California-Berkeley. "But it's so frustrating."

WMUA airs porno debate

"OFF THE HOOK: PORNOGRAPHY?" — Tonight at 6:20, on WMUA 91.1 FM, Bill Files, Public Affairs director, will host Albert Sparks, chairperson of Baroque Enterprises and Charlotte Allen, women's coordinator for the Mass Daily Collegian.

They will confront each other on the issue of pornographic films, their definitions, educational quality and their future at UMass. The community is urged to call in with questions and comments at 545-2876.

The issue of porno has come to a head in the past weeks, since the controversy began last semester with the showing of "Deep Throat."

YOUR BIRTHDAY by STELLA WILDER

Monday, October 4 — Born today, you are one of those overly generous individuals who may spend more time and effort in the interest of others than in the interest of himself and his own loved ones. You possess an innate desire to bring happiness to others; because of this, you may at times actually bring unhappiness to those you would most like to please, serve and make joyful. An enthusiastic participant in all life has to offer, you never back away from events, no matter the what circumstances or situations of which they are made up. You expect rewards for the effort you put into projects and endeavors; more, you generally get what you expect -- favorable response.

Although you have many acquaintances, friends are harder to come by and harder yet to keep. You have a knack for meeting the "right" people -- that is, for making contacts that can be influential to your success, contacts that can move higher-ups in your favor. You do not necessary employ this knack to your own advantage, however; often, you are so busy seeing to the success and favor of others that you actually allow opportunities for serving yourself through the right word at the right time to men of influence to pass you by.

You enjoy adventure, but are somewhat inclined to take a back seat when it comes to initiating those new and different activities in which adventure is inherent. Perfectly willing to take part in those activities others have initiated, you seem to lack the particular kind of creativity necessary to the original endeavor.

Tuesday, October 5

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Time spent with younger people today is time gained tomorrow. Listen carefully to advice given freely, even if it is in a garbled fashion.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Extravagance goes unrewarded in every area today. Friends do not look kindly upon the Scorpio who overspends merely to impress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A question of change where your career is concerned may cause you some concern this morning. Wait before making up your mind.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Domestic affairs take on an air of difficulty that may be completely unexpected. Don't lose your nerve at the last minute.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Quarrels with loved ones may leave you somewhat spent by midday. However, you will feel your old self by evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A lessening of tension on the employment scene precludes what had seemed to be certain failure. Make your apologies to higher-ups.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Concentrate on conserving energy early in the day. There is much to gain through an involvement with persons you've recently met.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — An angry scene on the home front is sure to disturb relationships with children. Make yourself known to those who make the decisions.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Marital problems make it necessary for you to reevaluate your situation on the home front. You can save the situation through understanding.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Put your energy to the test -- but only to the point where weariness takes over. Don't over-exert yourself, no matter the prize to be had.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A joint project falls somewhat short of expectations. Take your time deciding to make a change; you may not really want to.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A relatively quiet day, calculated to bring you more peace than you care for. Relieve tension by a display of humor.

Sun position emphasizes move toward balance

By JACOB LOVE

The solar message of the day is balance with the Sun in Libra, the sign of The Scales. Our Self only exists in relationship to an Other, whether it's a partner, lover, or peer group. The general astrological pattern during the late summer emphasized this need for balance. Today the last wave from this pattern will come rolling in from the depths of time towards 1:06 p.m. as the Sun lines up between the Earth and Pluto.

Pluto is the outer-most planet and thus symbolizes the potential of our farthest growth. But just as growth requires decay for balance, he is also the symbol of our darkest death. As we move out towards Pluto we may suddenly find ourselves far removed from the light and warmth of the Sun. We find resurrection as we realize our need for the Sun and begin our return to the source of Light. And all the while, we learn the meaning of both polarities as we come and go between them.

Our own plutonic journey is paced by the motion of ol' Sol around the Zodiac as, each year, the Sun lines up with Pluto for an hour then flows on around the circle. This cyclical process will focus on our balance with an Other during the years 1971-1981 as Pluto moves ponderously thru the sign of Libra. Each time the Sun aligns with Pluto during this era, the process starts anew from Libra. As the Sun today completes a year's cycle, we will have symbolically grown thru every zodiacal phase of partnership. The last few days may have marked some last minute readjustments which were necessary to finish the last cycle, in preparation for beginning anew. Several related planetary connections Saturday night and Sunday afternoon may have added tears and tension to the readjustments but, at 1:06 this afternoon, it'll all clear up. We can start all over again in our partnerships, hopefully one rung higher up the spiral.

The Moon is in Pisces today so our emotions may flow thru the dreams, creative visions, and compassion of this sign of The Fishes. She forms a difficult square (90 degree angle) to Jupiter at 9:48 a.m. He is the planet of joyous expansion so, this energy wave peaks, we may find it difficult to smile. The difficulties may center on our inability to draw our inner dream of happiness into the outer world. Since Jupiter is in Gemini (communication), trying to talk about it might ease the flow.

During the afternoon and evening, the Moon forms three harmonious angles and the ensuing waves of emotional energy will offer us insight and compassion (3:18 p.m.), creative insight (7:32 p.m.) and a sense of balanced purpose in our relationships (10:25 p.m.).

Taken as a whole, the day could feel great, especially if we're engaged in reawakening our sense of balance, Self with Other.

And since all Others are unique, the general astrological forecast does not always apply to everybody. The individual's personal birth-chart and free-will forever moderates the general conditions.)

Free agent season begins

NEW YORK [UPI] — When the final pitch of baseball's regular season was thrown yesterday, it marked the opening of a new season — the free-agent signing season.

A total of 29 players from 11 teams, headed by Baltimore's Reggie Jackson, become free agents Monday and will be able to sell their talents to the highest bidder following a common draft Nov. 4.

Besides Jackson, those who chose to "play out their options" in 1976 include Don Gullett of the Cincinnati Reds, Bobby Grich of the Baltimore Orioles, Dave Cash of the Philadelphia Phillies, Bill Campbell of the Minnesota Twins, and seven members of the Oakland A's — Sal Bando, Don Baylor, Bert Campaneris, Rollie Fingers, Willie McCovey, Joe Rudi and Gene Tenace.

It marks the first time that players have earned free agent status, a direct result of Andy Messersmith's successful arbitration case against the legality of a reserve clause, which bound a player to his team until he retired or was traded. The owners challenged the decision in federal courts but were also overruled there.

In order to avoid chaos in signing players, details for an orderly draft were ironed out at the All-Star game in Philadelphia in July when baseball's owners and the Players' Association reached a four-year "basic agreement."

As a free agent, each player or his representative may talk with any team in the big leagues until Nov. 1 about general terms such as the climate of the city and how he will be used in the lineup. He may not, however, discuss money with anyone except his former team.

All talk then ceases for three days to allow time for a final list of free agents to be drawn up.

On Nov. 4, a draft meeting will be held in New York. The 24 existing clubs will then hold a common draft, picking in reverse order of the final standings. A player may be selected by 12 clubs plus his former team, thus restricting the free agent market to 13.

A team may not sign more than two free agents, unless it has had more than two signed by other teams. In that case, it may sign as many as it has lost.

Free agents

Baltimore Orioles — Wayne Garland, pitcher; Bobby Grich, infielder; Reggie Jackson, outfielder; Royle Stillman, outfielder.

California Angels — Lonnie Dade, infielder; Mike Miley, infielder; Tim Nordbrook, infielder; Billy Smith, infielder.

Chicago Cubs — Steve Stone, pitcher.

Cincinnati Reds — Don Gullett, pitcher.

Minnesota Twins — Steve Braun, outfielder; Steve Brye, outfielder; Bill Campbell, pitcher; Eric Soderholm, infielder.

New York Yankees — Doyle Alexander, pitcher.

Oakland A's — Sal Bando, infielder; Doy Baylor, outfielder — first baseman; Bert Campaneris, infielder; Rollie Fingers, pitcher; Willie McCovey, first baseman; Joe Rudi, outfielder-first baseman; Gene Tenace, catcher-first baseman.

Has Ali truly retired? Nobody really knows

CHICAGO [UPI] — Heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali failed to show up at a nation of Islam Mosque gathering Sunday where he was to answer questions regarding his announced retirement.

Ali's mysterious absence left questions about whether he actually will quit the ring or if he will change his mind again as he did after three previous retirements.

Wallace D. Muhammad, spiritual leader of the Black Muslim Movement in the United States, appeared before the packed house and said, "I expect the American people will join us and ask Muhammad Ali as I have asked Muhammad Ali — retire."

During a half-hour address, Muhammad said that he urged Ali to retire last week in Istanbul, Turkey, after Ali successfully defended his title against Ken Norton. But Muhammad said after he publicly made the request, Ali "stumbled around" before he finally said he was through with boxing.

Muhammad said Ali received a phone call from Chicago and "may have been going over his bills and the announcement brought shock among bankers and businessmen and people he had been dealing with."

He said he understood Ali had used the purse from the Norton fight "before he got it."

If money were Ali's problem, Muhammad said, "whatever I got I will give it to him because God has made me more accustomed to suffering than he is."

Muhammad said he was "wondering if Muhammad Ali is really indeed retired or whether he is making another empty announcement."

He concluded his speech by saying, "Muhammad Ali, congratulations for taking that stand whether you keep it or not."

Sox beat O's, 3-2 in finale

BOSTON [UPI] — Rick Burleson singled home Butch Hobson with the winning run in the 15th inning Sunday to give the Boston Red Sox a 3-2 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Hobson led off the 15th with a single, went to second on Cecil Cooper's sacrifice and scored on Burleson's two-out single.

The Orioles took a 2-1 lead in the 11th inning when Ken Singleton singled home Tom Shopay, but the Red Sox tied it in the bottom of the inning on Hobson's run-scoring single. Baltimore scored in the third inning on Al Bumbry's ninth homer before the Red Sox tied it in the fifth on Carlton Fisk's RBI single.

The story goes that this guy walked into a college bookstore and bought a calculator that worked backwards, or sideways, or something.
But once he got the hang of it, he found that Reverse Polish Notation meant he worked with only two numbers at a time, solving the most complex sequence calculations quickly, accurately and naturally.
The machine of all these and many other marvels is the Model 4510 (the "Mathematician") from National Semiconductor. Suggested retail under $25.

Netmen outclass Vermont

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team won its third match of the season in convincing style on Saturday, when it downed the University of Vermont 8-1 on the Catamounts' home courts.

Vermont, which has been the Yankee Conference champion for the past three years, was completely overpowered by a very hot UMass tennis squad.

In first singles, UMass' Adam Rosen defeated Vermont's Peter Cooper, 6-4, 6-2. Rosen, who is highly ranked in the East, seemingly had little trouble in beating his Vermont counterpart, who happens to be one of the top players from the Midwest.

Other singles winners for the Minutemen were Alan Green in second singles, captain Barnaby Kalan in third singles, Jim Barnhart in fourth singles and Steve Heyl in sixth singles.

Vermont's only win in the match game in the fifth singles, when the Catamount's Mark Campagon defeated Rick Shartow, 6-4, 6-2.

Green, Kalan and Heyl were overpowering in their matches. Green defeated Dick Hilmer, 6-2, 6-2, while Kalan easily handled Frank Babbit 6-3, 6-1.

In the doubles competition, the UMass netmen completely swept Vermont. The doubles combination of Green and Rosen won their match easily in two steps, 6-2, and 6-4.

The victory over Vermont now brings the Minutemen's overall season record to 3-2.

Spikers split weekend action; coach happy with performances

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team finished 1-1 in a meet against Bridgewater and Barrington last Friday at Bridgewater State.

Bridgewater won the over-all competition by defeating both UMass and Barrington in best-of-three game matches. Bridgewater-UMass games went 15-10, 15-10 (Bridgewater) for a quick two-game match.

UMass coach Dianne Thompson credits Bridgewater's strength to its comparatively taller, and stronger squad.

"We didn't do too badly against Bridgewater," says Thompson. "Actually we were down as many as eight points and came back. What hurt the UMass team was its weak blocking. Bridgewater's spikers were strong, which really made the difference."

Starting for the UMass squad were Pat "Busy" Bradley, Heidi Dickson, Jayne Greenberg, Shelly Soules, Dianne Bunker, and Debbie Kuzeba. This line-up played all the matches, except the second Barrington game. Joan Wotkowicz subbed at that point, and contributed some real "bench strength" with an effective back court serve, according to Thompson.

The Barrington match went three games for the UMass woman. The first game, UMass won 15-7. Shelly Soules proved to be the backbone of the scoring effort, serving 12. She found a weak spot in Barrington's back row, and served 12 well-placed points. While Soules served, Jayne Greenberg and Heidi Dickson got a "fantastic set and spike" together.

UMass lost its second Barrington game, 16-18. Barrington shifted to a no-block defense — they pulled back to up the UMass spike attack. There were no obvious weak spots as there had been in the previous game.

"We were really getting our pass, set, spike attack down pat," says Thompson. "I was really pleased because that's what I thought we'd be weak in."

The last game against Barrington was a win for UMass 15-8. Heidi Greenberg served five points this match, and upped the match record to 1-1.

"Even if we didn't win all our games, I was still pleased with UMass' performance. The team was really hustling and working on their dive and roll," said Thompson.

The JV team lost to both Barrington and Bridgewater. According to Thompson they "played well and it's a matter of time before they can get the score on their side."

Thompson plans to work out some different plays with the team to polish skills and compensate for any weaknesses. With Smith College as the next opponent, she hopes to strengthen UMass blocks.

Women golfers place fourth in EAIAW

By BETTY LOU CLANCY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's golf team came home with an upsetting fourth place in the EAIAW Tournament this weekend, held at the Bristol Harbor Country Club in Canandaigua, New York.

The five teams that participated were: Mt. Holyoke, Penn State, who was the defending champion, Courtland State, Brockport State, who sponsored the tournament and UMass. Penn State retained its title with a two day total of 336, Mt. Holyoke placed second with a score of 340, Courtland State came in a close third with a 353, and UMass missed the number three spot, by one stroke to come in fourth with a 354.

"We were very disappointed by our placement, but I feel it is probably the fact that our team is a lot less experienced than the others," replied UMass coach Jane McGahan. "The team just didn't play as well as they are capable and the course was very, very tight. The course is only a year old and the front nine was very intimidating. The girls tried to steer the ball and you just can't do that on that type of course."

The two low scorers for the Minutewomen were Debbie McCulloch, who had an 83.85 and Joanne Smith, with a 91,95. McCulloch also placed fourth individually.

"Debbie came in on the first day of play in third place, but she failed to keep up her usual good score on the second day. I think Debbie felt that she could have played a lot better than she did. Also a lot of the team members felt that their play wasn't quite up to par," stated Coach McGahan.

The linksters now have a record of 2-3-0, which they hope to improve on this Friday when they travel to Courtland State for a one-on-one match. So far, in the two tournaments that the UMass women have played with Courtland State they have been very, very close in scores, though time and skill will tell this Friday.

runner at VC Park. In the two meets he's run in so far, Staples has proven himself worthy of the confidence his coaches have in him, as he has been fifth man for the team in both meets.

If it seems as though the other two teams have been left out of the account of this meet, it's because they never really entered into the decisive stage of it. St. Johns did have one runner in the top ten, but he had no effect on the final outcome of the race.

Several facts made the UMass victory a little sweeter. NU had recently been ranked 14th nationally in "Harrier" Magazine. In the last 34 meetings of the two teams, each team had 17 wins. Both of those applied before last Saturday. NU was also the IC4A Champ last year, so this makes UMass' prospects for the remainder of the season interesting indeed.

With their performance, the harriers fulfilled one of their coaches' expectations and overachieved on another. The split between the first five runners was only 63 seconds, which is just about what the coaches wanted to see. The fast times however an unexpected but pleasant surprise.

"All in all, with these times being the seventh, 10th and 11th fastest times, that's not only a good feeling to beat them, but we were surprised," said coach Ken O'Brien. "We've timed our progress this year to come along slowly. Our times were about 15 seconds faster than I thought we'd n

Pats do it again; wipe out Raiders

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — Steve Grogan rifled three touchdown passes and ran for two other scores yesterday to power the New England Patriots to a stunning 48-17 wipeout of the previously undefeated Oakland Raiders.

After an opening loss to Baltimore, the miraculous Patriots have whipped Miami, Pittsburgh and now Oakland in successive weeks, with Grogan throwing eight touchdown passes and running in four TDs along the way.

Grogan threw TD passes of 21 and 15 yards to Darryl Stingley and hit Marlin Briscoe from 16 yards out. The second-year star from Kansas State also scampered two and 10 yards for touchdowns while Sam Cunningham rushed for a two yard score and former Raider Jess Phillips added an 11-yard scoring run.

The Raider scores came on a 14-yard pass from Ken Stabler to Fred Biletnikoff and a 44-yard field goal by Fred Steinfort. Oakland, now 3-1, added a fourth period score on reserve quarterback Mike Rae's one yard dive.

New England, in tying its victory total of last season's 3-11 team, set a club record of 296 yards rushing, 15 yards better than they picked up against Oakland in an Oct. 30, 1966 victory. Cunningham gained 101 yards in 21 carries and added 94 yards on five pass receptions.

The Patriots never trailed, jumping into the lead at the 3:51 mark of the first quarter after linebacker Steve Zabel recovered Clarence Davis' fumble at the Oakland 43. Cunningham romped 24 yards to set up the score, then dived the last couple of yards for the touchdown.

Grogan put New England ahead at 14-0 at 2:40 of the second period, driving the club 92 yards in 10 plays and finishing with the 21-yard flip over the middle to Stingley.

Oakland pulled to within seven points six minutes later on the pass to Biletnikoff but Grogan zipped a scoring strike to Briscoe late in the second period. The field goal by Steinfort, a rookie from nearby Boston College, pulled the Raiders to within 11 at 21:10 with four seconds left in the half.

Grogan iced the game at the start of the second half, marching the Patriots 76 yards in eight plays, capped by the second TD pass to Stingley, who cut inside defensive back George Atkinson. The big play was a 41-yard pass from Grogan to Cunningham down the right sideline.

Netwomen blank foe

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

Friday afternoon the women's varsity tennis team exhibited a caliber of play that should earn a lot of respect from future opponents. The women were both dazzling and determined in a 7-0 victory over Central Connecticut.

Tennis beginners dream of possessing the kind of smooth and seemingly effortless form that number one singles player Jennifer Ranz displayed in a 6-0, 6-0 blanking of Central's Joyce Ofiero. Number two singles player Carolyn Mooney lost her first set 4-6; then easily disposed of her opponent Mary Colacray 6-1, 6-1.

The number three, four, and five singles players, Kathy Sullivan, Martha Awiszus, and Dawn Minaai are all won their matches. Sullivan won her second consecutive match, defeating Juliette Shellman 6-1, 6-1. Awiszus had an easy time with opponent Nancy Greer, winning 6-1, 6-2; while Minaai had 6-1, 6-1 wins over Sue Reims. Awiszus and Minaai stretched their win skeins to three matches, and remain undefeated this season.

The days toughest matches took place in doubles. Karen Holt and Nancy O'Neil played together for the first time this season as the number one doubles team, and defeated Connecticut's previously unbeaten combination of Rose Rinduro and Jodi Kelly.

Coach Ken Rubin was understandably pleased with the women's effort, and said, "We've got fine singles players and the doubles are looking sharp now too. The team won only three matches last year, and we're 2-2 now and looking better every match; so we are showing definite improvement.

Golfers earn top spot in Toski Invitational

By GEORGE O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Flynt Lincoln fired a two over par 74, while Bob Sanderson and Tim Diskin chipped in with 76's to lead the men's golf team to an impressive eight-stroke victory at the Toski Invitational at Hickory Ridge CC last Friday.

The linksters finished with a 303 total, eight strokes ahead of Central Conn. Surprising Boston College took third place at 316, while Amherst took fourth, a stroke back at 317. Salem State and Southern Conn. tied for fifth at 320.

The battle for first place had been decided long before the tournament was over, but the war for low medalist honors raged until the last hole. Lincoln was even par with only 17 and 18 to play, while Southern Conn's Bill Day was one over with holes 11 and 12 ahead of him.

Day parred both, while Lincoln bogeyed both holes. He barely missed a three footer on the tough 17th, and at 18th, and took him to get down after just missing the green.

A very disappointed Lincoln, who didn't know how to close the fight was, said "I played pretty well, I got off to a slow start, but I really had it going pretty good until I got to 17 and 18".

Senior co-captains Bobby Sanderson and Tim Diskin both had fine 76's. "I played pretty well, my chipping and putting weren't so hot, I had six bogies, so I shot 76", said Diskin.

Bobby Sanderson, last week's frustrated medalist runner up, was less than enthusiastic with his score. "I didn't really hit the ball all that well, I three putted three of the first four greens. A 76 is all right, we won though and that's the big thing."

Commenting on his new role as team leader this year, Sanderson said, "Last year what I scored didn't make that much difference. If I scored well we won, and if I didn't score well we won anyway. This year it's different, there's a lot more pressure on me to do well, because of it, I'm doing better."

Sophomore Jim McDermott, fired a lop-sided 77. After going four over for the first six holes, he settled down and went one over for the final twelve, ending up 42-35-77.

Freshman Mark Powers, playing in just his second match for the Minutemen, shot an 86, that did not figure in the best four of five scoring.

Coach Fan Gaudette was very pleased with his teams performance, especially Flynt Lincoln's round. "We played very well, 303 is a good score. Last year we shot 303 and lost by a stroke to Temple. This year 303 is a winning score."

"I feel bad for Flynt, he played a super round today. It's too bad he missed being low medalist, but those things happen."

Attention now turns to the all important ECAC qualifying tournament coming up this Wednesday.

Harriers take first on Bronx course

A combination of youth and veteran talent enabled the UMass harriers to win a quadrangular meet in New York's Van Cortland Park. (Photo by Keith Kloza)

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Mike Quinn convincingly reestablished himself as the number one runner on the UMass varsity as he led the Minutemen to a quadrangular meet triumph on Saturday over Northeastern, St. Johns and Rhode Island.

The final tally had UMass scoring 26 points, NU 30, St. Johns 79 and URI 106.

Quinn's time of 24:41 over the five-mile Van Cortland Park course is the third fastest time ever run by a UMass harrier, only seven seconds behind All American Randy Thomas and two seconds off All American Bill Gillin's best mark. Those two times were run in 1974 when Thomas and Gillin finished second and fifth, respectively, in the IC4A's, which UMass won that vear.

Quinnah and NU's All American Jon Flora ran together in a pack with John McGrail and NU's Bruce Bickford, Bob Flora and Greg Senick for the first mile and into the uphill "horse path" section of the course. There, Quinn made his move, and continued to pull away over the last two miles to win by 13 seconds over second place Jon Flora.

The race for third and fourth places were just as intense as All-American McGrail battled Bickford throughout the course, only to lose to Bickford's superior speed. McGrail was able to pass the Huskie runner on the hills, but lost his advantage on the down slopes and flat sections of the course. McGrail's time of 25:19 was still a respectable effort.

The second of Nu's Flora twins, Bob, was the next finisher, as he finally came up to potential and ran at the front of the pack. At this point, NU was one point ahead.

However, at the next point UMass' forte came into the picture and sealed the verdict. As has been stressed several times this season, that strong point is pack running. The names may change, but the concept remains the same — if you finish three runners in á pack, the other team had better have a lot of bodies in front of your group. NU failed in this task and that was the ultimate story of a meet which, after the first five runners could have gone either way. This time around the key pack was made up of Lou Panaccione, Bob Martin and Cliff Staples, who came in sixth, seventh and eighth, respectively.

If John Savoie is the "Steady Eddie" of the Providence squad, then Panaccione definitely fills that role for UMass. In three meets so far, the sophomore harrier has finished as third man for the team twice and first once. His lowest overall finish was eighth in the abortive PC-Harvard meet. Panaccione's time was the seventh fastest UMass time ever at VC Park.

Martin's run could be described, as assistant coach Arnie Morse put it, as "not knowing any better", or more rightly as an outstanding effort by an outstanding young runner. Martin, only a freshman, was given a shot at running with the varistsity for this meet and he didn't waste a stride of it as his time of 25:42 was the 10th fastest time ever for a UMass runner on VC Park.

Staples, who along with Panaccione played a big role in Martin's success by helping with his pace, ran well himself to record the 11th best time by a UMass

Vermont rips UMass as booters lack kick

B, JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

Before Saturday's UMass-Vermont soccer game there was a clinic in which over a hundred kids were each kicking their own soccer balls. By the end of the game UMass goalie Mark Hodgdon must have felt that all of those balls were coming at him at once as the Catamounts tore apart the Minutemen, 6-0.

It was another frustrating loss for the Minutemen. The same problem which has plagued them all season, the lack of clutch shooting, prevented them from challenging the Catamounts, who are now 4-1 on the year. If UMass had only capitalized on one of its many scoring opportunities early in the game, it would have been a different story.

Vermont, on the other hand, made the most of its home-field advantage. The Catamounts now play their soccer games in the old football stadium. The field is somewhat smaller than regulation size, thus requiring more accurate passing and greater control of free kicks. Also, without competition from the football team, soccer is the top fall spectator sport at the university. Saturday's large homecoming crowd was instrumental in "psyching" the Catamounts.

UMass actually took control in the opening minutes. Aggressive defensive plays by Larry Aronson and T.J. O'Brien led to a couple of fast breaks, but the forwards were unable to set up any good shots. The Minutemen were beating Vermont to the ball and passing very well, but the Catamount defense was recovering in time to frustrate any scoring chances.

Vermont then began to penetrate the UMass defense, and fired two hard shots on Hodgdon. He made a nice punch save on the first and picked off the second, but he took too many steps while trying to clear the ball. Geoff Greig took the indirect kick for Vermont, tapped the ball to John Koerner, and he shot over the defensive wall just past Hodgdon's fingertips into the upper right corner of the net.

The same combination struck again for Vermont about seven minutes later. This time Koerner took the pass on the break, flipped it behind his back to Greig cutting to the middle, and he made a nice low shot past the diving Hodgdon. The ball rolled right under UMass goalie as he mistimed his dive.

The Minutemen were already two goals down midway through the first half. Forced to play catch-up, they didn't take the time to set up accurate shots. A Tony Biladeau direct kick followed by a Biladeau head shot were both saved by Vermont goalie Jim Taft. Mark Abbott had an open shot at the goal, but Taft also grabbed that attempt.

UMass obviously needed a quick goal in the second half to get back into the game. It was the Catamounts, however, who attacked immediately. After several pressure saves by Hodgdon, Vermont halfback Mark Stevenson tapped the ball in a scramble to teammate Koerner. Koerner, last year's leading Yankee Conference scorer, placed the ball right past Hodgdon for his second goal of the afternoon.

Koerner's goal was the beginning of the end for the Minutemen. Vermont was playing loosely and confidently before its excited home crowd while UMass was desperately trying to make up the three goals. The Minutemen defense weakened, leaving Hodgdon as a veritable sitting duck on several occasions. Greig picked up another marker for the Catamounts, while halfback Scott Goodman scored the final two goals.

UMass coach Russ Kid was generally impressed with the Vermont team. "They are much better team than last year," he commented. "They have a much better supporting cast to go along with their veterans."

Indeed, Vermont is a well-coached team. Second year coach Paul Reinhardt was voted national division one coach of the year in leading the Catamounts to an 11-2 record last season. His team plays good position soccer, resulting in numerous fast break opportunities.

Russ Kidd certainly didn't think his team was overmatched, however. "We should have been in the game," he said. "It should have been tied in the first half. We just blew too many shots."

Booter Banter: Dave Tagliavini and Ed Niemiec both sat out the game with ankle injuries...Tagliavini should be ready this week while Niemiec, who has a bad sprain, may miss another game or two...Vermont outshot UMass 43-21 and had eight corner kicks compared to the Minutemen's two...The Minutemen's next game is at Harvard Tuesday.

Stickers narrowly beat Centra

By SUSAN FAY

"I guess we'll have to learn not to take any team lightly."

These were the words of coach Judith Davidson after the UMass field hockey team narrowly defeated Central Connecticut State, 1-0 on Friday afternoon. Having beaten Central 2-0 in a shortened game on College Sportsday, the Minutewomen expected another easy time of it, but were held scoreless until midway through the second half when Cindy Hartstone scored on a rebound of a shot by Cheryl Meliones.

The first half was a stalemate with neither team making an outstanding play, although UMass did have several clear shots on goal. The second half was characterized by both teams moving up and downfield in vain attempts to score with the Minutewomen controlling play for most of the half.

UMass finally tallied after a flurry of activity in front of the Central goal. Central never really threatened until late in the game, but the UMass defense and a clutch save by goalie Kathy Gipps stymied their offense.

Although the score was close, statistics show that the Minutewomen outplayed Central, taking 10 shots on goal to Central's five. Penetration time (inside the 25 yard line), for UMass was clocked at four minutes as compared to three minutes, 10 seconds for Central.

Coach Davidson didn't think that Friday's close score was due to a vastly improved Central Connecticut team. "I think that our whole team had a bad day. Our biggest problem was that we couldn't stop the ball, and when we missed, no one was in position to recover it," she said.

Davidson did cite the steady play of Kelly Salls and Olivia Lovelace on defense, along with Kathy Gipps in goal.

The team missed the services of co-captain Judy Kennedy, wh injured her back in the Keene Stat game. "I'm not sure just how muc her absence hurt us," Davidso said, "but hopefully she should b back in practice next week."

Bromery repeats denial

500 sign music room petition

By MARY BETH ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Petitioners attempting to block efforts to relocate the music room and study lounge on the Campus Center concourse collected over 500 signatures yesterday while University administrators denied that the space was being eyed as a spot for a commercial bank.

UMass Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, who stated in Monday's Collegian that "we haven't received any bids for a bank," clarified that statement and said "Two years ago we went out for some bids, and several banks submitted bids."

Bromery said he believed the banks considered the bids expired, and said, "The project would have to be rebid." He maintained there are no current plans to construct a bank in the Campus Center-Student Union complex.

The music room space, across from the Bluewall, is one of several spots being considered to accommodate an expanded Cashier's Office. The present location of the Cashier's Office, in the Student Union, is too small for adequate security precautions to be carried out, and employes find the cramped quarters uncomfortable to work in, Bromery said.

"In the short run, they (the administrators) are telling the truth about not putting in a bank," said Michael Pill, member of the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG). "In the long run, they're lying through their teeth."

Setting up the Cashier's Office in the music room location is seen by Pill as an interim step to building a bank. Pill, a lawyer, conceded that "I agree with Chancellor Bromery that the present bank bids are invalid." At the same time Pill feels that the issue of a bank is far from dead.

Stuart Belkin, co-coordinator of the Union of Student Employes, is opposed to any efforts to move the music room and lounge from its present location, and he and over 30 others are attempting to halt plans to relocate by circulating petitions.

"The people who are signing the petition want the music room and reading lounge to operate in their present place," said Belkin. He cited the fact that "there are only ten sets of headphones that work, and over 100 tapes are broken," as evidence that the music room is being phased out.

"If they are keeping it open, why not keep it up to high standards?" asked Belkin.

In answer to Dean William F. Field's (Campus Center director) accusations made Monday in the Collegian that Belkin is "paranoid," Belkin said, "It's not me personally trying to stir this thing up — there are over thirty or forty people working on the petition. The only issue I'm dealing with is the music room and study lounge. Why not move the Cashier's Office to the Cape Cod Room in the Student Union (one of the alternative sites suggested for the music room) instead of the music room?"

Fields, when questioned about the bank issue, said "I did want a bank. I tried to argue this thing through." He found that student leadership opposed the move, and eventually gave up the notion.

"I'd be delighted if the chancellor formally cancelled the bids," Fields said, adding that he is sick and tired of the whole issue.

"It's mostly a matter of credability," said Fields, as to whether or not students believe that administrators are trying to slip a bank in under their noses. Bromery echoed his statement, saying, "If anyone will not believe in my integrity, they can go take a leap."

"I'm not even sure the banks would still be interested," said Bromery. In regards to the relocation of the Cashier's Office, he said, "I've got to have a safe and secure place for the cashiers to work — the present spot is not at all protected."

"We either have to move the Cashier's Office or close the whole thing down," Bromery stressed. Field said that if the Cashier's Office were expanded, it could cash checks for larger amounts for students, and even cash paychecks for University employes.

"The bank has become a political issue," said Bromery, and Belkin affirmed that statement by saying, "The issue is around the fact that the students intend to keep what is theirs."

Plans for relocation of the Cashier's Office will continue, and Belkin's forces will continue to collect signatures to halt any plans to relocate the office in the music room's present space, Belkin said.

Day care program reduced by half

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The state funded day care program in Amherst has cut back the number of spaces available for full-time day care from sixty last year to only twenty-five this year, according to Jeff Howe, Regional Day Care Coordinator for Western Mass.

Howe, who operates out of the Springfield office of the state Department of Public Welfare, said the figure for this year was taken from a computer readout on June 30. This was after the area colleges and universities had recessed for the summer, greatly lessening the number of eligible children in Amherst, Howe added.

"Last March a new welfare policy was implemented stating that training related day care would be limited to two years. The reaction to that decision was so strong that state welfare Commissioner Alexander Sharp reversed the decision to four years the next day in Boston," said Howe.

This fiscal year the legislature approved a $27 million budget for Western Mass. said Howe. This is broken down to about $19 million for contracted day care, $5.6 million for baby sitting services and about $2 million for an emergency fund.

Howe said he had wanted to get full time day care for 2,000 children for the Western Massachusetts area but that he was only able to get day care for about 1,700 children.

"The money we got was for a maintenance of effort," said Howe, "No expansion was allowed for."

Mark Segar, a member of the Amherst Area Day Care providers and part of the Child Care Office at UMass, said he thought the group got "no satisfactory answers" from Howe, concerning the lack of full-time day care.

"In theory they have taken care of all the needs of Amherst. Actually they have not because they haven't taken into account the needs of the University community."

Segar also said there is the possibility of some type of legal recourse for those parents eligible for the welfare benefits but are unable to use them due to the insufficient number of spaces for the children.

Howe also spoke on donated funds saying that a $10,000 donation from a city or town could bring $36,000 in services when matched with other available federal funds.

"When a city or town donates money," said Howe, "It controls four areas of the money." It can designate the type of service it may be used for, the specific value of the funds to be given to each agency, the geography in which the money is to be used, and the agencies which will receive the money, he said.

One of the people at the meeting expressed doubt that the town of Amherst would appropriate money for services that had been taken care of by the welfare office.

"I also don't understand how the welfare office can call a cut back of about thirty-five slots a maintenance of effort," a person at the meeting said.

Howe said there were about 88 vacancies for full-time day care in the western Mass. area, a large part of them being in Pittsfield. He also said some regulations made it difficult to transfer these spaces to an area other than that which they were contracted for.

Segar said the group is attempting to set up a meeting with Sharp.

Segar urged anyone and especially parents eligible for day care benefits who have been unable to obtain them to contact him at the Child Care Office, 221 Berkshire House 545-0333.

'To facilitate change where needed'

New program advisors hired

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

"I see myself in a position of power as a woman, and able to do a lot more with women's programs," said Irene Richard who, along with Sarah Williamson, were hired this summer as student activities program advisors. Richard and Williamson were hired by the Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) office out of over 200 applications for the position.

"The typical role of a program advisor is to work with student organizations who want to sponsor events, to provide support for those organizations, and to encourage student activities, in a way that is beneficial both to the University and to the group itself. We try to facilitate change where change is needed," said Jim Riley, acting assistant coordinator of student activities.

Richard's concentration is Campus Center-Student Union programs; for example, working with the Program Council, a group of committees appointed by the governing board to plan recreational activities. One of Richard's aims is "to help bring about better relations between RSO groups and some of the Campus Center departments."

Williamson's emphasis is in University programs, including recreational activities happening on other parts of the campus, such as the Fine Arts Center.

Williamson works with the Greek Council, the Distinguished Visitor's Program, the Skiing Club, the Outing Club, the UMass Theatre Guild, the Roister Doisters, and occasional conference groups.

"We have to work closely with a lot of the groups," said Williamson, "that means being present at a lot of the events.... and being able to get to a phone if there are any problems."

"Our job is to suggest programs, make sure the organization has enough money and a place to hold the event," said Richard.

"We investigate any unfair charges brought against the groups and help them balance their budgets," said Williamson.

Williamson graduated from Powers University in Washington, D.C., in 1973, with a major in psychology and a minor in political science. She worked in the RSO office for two-and-a-half years doing bookkeeping for Student Activities, prior to being hired as program advisor.

Richard graduated from UMass, with a major in Leisure Studies. During the spring of 1975 she worked as an intern in the RSO office. After graduation she worked there as a receptionist for nine months until the opening for program advisor came up.

"I knew everything, had been everywhere in the office and had started taking on duties that were more than those of a receptionist," said Richard. "I felt I was the most qualified person for the job."

Williamson and Richard are the only two program advisors in the office.

"Bill Hasson, the program coordinator, has helped us a lot," said Williamson.

Each woman has a special interest for a specific project.

"I'd like to see the African Ballet from New York, or some sort of African dance come," said Williamson.

Richard is excited about Women's Week, the week of March 6.

"I'd like to create a conscious balance in programming for that week, especially March 8, which is International Women's Day," said Richard.

"There is usually a monopoly by men of all forms of expression. I'd like people to be exposed for a week to entertainment predominantly by women," she said.

"We try to steer clear of any programs that seem useless to the campus environment, like porno films," said Richard. "I would not support any activity I felt was offensive to any group," said Williamson.

Williamson said she would like to see more of a variety of cultural events, including representation of different ethnic groups, as well as more women's entertainment.

"I think there is a whole voice on this campus that hasn't been heard," said Williamson.

Richard said she is excited about this school year. She was discouraged by the lack of response to the Bottle Bill benefit concert held on Metawompe Lawn, but pleased with the success of Holly Near's concert appearance Thursday night.

"I'd like to see some creative ideas put forth," said Richard.

Steven Young and Deborah Stimson will play the lead roles in the UMass Music Theatre Guild's production of "Kiss Me Kate". They and the rest of the cast are spending many hours each week practicing for the production which opens Nov. 18. (Staff photo by Chris Bourne)

Abortion issue not appropriate--caucus

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Collegian Staff

The Caucus for Democratic Women feels "it is absolutely outside the bounds of presidential politics to be dealing with the abortion issue" according to organization executive secretary Dolores D. Sutton.

A resolution unanimously passed at the caucus' Northampton meeting Saturday stated that "The Caucus for Democratic Women in the First Congressional District abhors the inappropriate introduction of abortion into the presidential election campaign. Abortion is a highly inflamatory and controversial topic. Pressure for a constitutional amendment intended to deny abortion without consideration of the complex social and economic implications is both short sighted and irresponsible."

The full text of the drafted statement will be sent to presidential candidate Jimmy Carter.

There are 88 towns in the First District including towns in Nampshire, Franklin, Hampden and Berkshire counties.

At the meeting were several candidates for public office, among them State Senator John W. Olver and Edward A. McColgan, candidate for the United States House of Representatives. Representatives of organizations concerned with referendum items were present, including a representative from MassPIRG.

One woman at the meeting termed the abortion issue in this year's campaign as "Ford's Missle Crisis".

Caucus membership is not limited to women, and their issues of concern are not either, Sutton said yesterday. "We consider ourselves mainstream politicians," said Sutton, "We don't see our issues as separate issues."

"We are the only district-wide organization in the state, she said. Sutton also said her organization has about 100 members and is about three years old.

Central coordinator sought

By ROSEMARY CONWAY

Motions to provide the position of Activities Coordinator for the Central area, and to allocate funds to buy sound equipment for the area were carried at a meeting of the Central Area Government last night.

Nominations for the Activities Coordinator position were opened until next Monday, when the election will take place. The coordinator will occupy a $10-a-week job which will include the responsibilities of organizing at least one activity every two weeks for the area, taking care of area equipment, helping dormitories plan activities, serving as chairperson of the Spring Concert Committee, and reporting to the Central Area Government every week.

In preliminary discussion, President Janice Perry said she hoped this would help "Encourage dorms to have more activities."

Treasurer Tony Burts agreed to the position's worth but reminded the representatitives that, "We don't have unlimited resources" and that the government can not supply funding for everything that is proposed.

Wayne Burns and Elizabeth Ventura were nominated for the position. Any interested residents of Central Area may run.

$150 was appropriated to purchase microphones, stands, and a mixer for the area. Dormitories in Central will now have to buy or rent their own speakers and power amplifiers. Burns informed the government that he would rent his equipment to interested dorms at "reasonable rates."

Dorms borrowing area equipment will be required to sign a statement agreeing to pay for repairs if equipment is damaged while in their possession.

The government was informed that there will be a lecture cosponsored by the Central Area New World Center and the 5-College Support Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa on "What is really happening in South Africa?" It will be held tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Hasbrouk, Laboratory room 20. The speaker will be David

Allen, Sparks debate porno on WMUA

By JIM GAGNE
Collegian Staff

Albert Sparks, representing "The right to free speech," and Charlotte Allen, representing "The rights of women not do be treated as sexual objects by the male-dominated media," squared off in a radio debate on pornography last night which left WMUA's telephone lines jammed with callers long after the debate ended.

Sparks is chairperson of Baroque Enterprises, a Recognized Student Organization attempting to bring X-rated films to campus.

Allen is the women's coordinator of the Mass. Daily Collegian.

The "Off the Hook" show drew the best telephone response in WMUA history according to Bill Files, WMUA public affairs directer and the show's co-host.

As a result, he added, there will be another show this month on WMUA dealing with the issue of pornography on campus.

The controversy on pornography started last semester when the Southwest Assembly denied permission to Baroque Enterprises to show the film "Deep Throat" in the Hampden Dining Commons.

Because the two debators couldn't agree on a definition of the terms "pornography" sexism, and "censorship," there was little actual debating. Instead the two responded individually to phoned-in questions.

Sparks maintained that movies such as Deep Throat are not sexist, and that they have no negative effect on people who watch them.

"In fact," he said, "they are a way to release our sexual fantasies."

He echoed the feelings of many of the callers when he said "We're talking about censorship, not pornography — and no one can define what pornography is."

Allen accused Sparks of sponsoring pornography "for the sole purpose of making money."

Sparks said that because pornography films are so expensive to rent, the profits aren't that high even though the movies usually draw the best crowd.

Allen told a caller there is nothing wrong with showing sex on the screen as long as it isn't exploitive.

"Men are always shown as macho and dominant, while women are submissive," she said.

Sparks said, "If you feel that way fine, but people should be allowed to go to the movie and decide for themselves."

Allen said, If people want to see pornography they can go downtown. "Pornography is oppressive to both men and women; there is no place for it at an institute of higher learning."

Before the show, Sparks said he started Baroque Enterprises as a protest against the programming at UMass.

"The usual programs here are geared towards the elite. We're shooting for the average student, with a C average or below." He added that half of the Baroque people flunked out of school last semester.

Sparks told the listening audience that he is aware of the rape problem at UMass, but said he doesn't believe pornography films have much affect.

"Women should come out against rape," he said, "instead they come out against porno."

Sparks cited a study done by a professor at Temple University that "showed people have stronger reactions to violence on the screen than they do to porno."

Although a few callers agreed that pronography should be banned, most of the callers spoke of their "right" to go to an X-rated movie.

One caller asked, "Charlotte, if people want to screw on stage for money, and people want to pay to see it, why not?"

Allen answered, "You're talking about rights. My rights are constantly infringed upon first as a human being, then as a women. Pornography perpetuates this by reducing and objectifying women."

After the show, Allen said she was surprised by the response, but not by the free-speech argument. "It's the typical liberal wishy-washy position."

In her closing remarks of the debate, she summed up her position, saying, "If someone on campus said they wanted to show a movie advocating the lynching of blacks it wouldn't happen. The pornography issue is analogous to this."

Sparks, who is Black, said "Society has become more

Collective bargaining--what it's all about

By BILL PARENT
and LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Faculty union, MSP, AAUP, collective bargaining; these terms don't mean much to students, but they should.

This semester, faculty here and at the Boston campus will be voting on whether or not to form a collective bargaining unit, a unit which will enable them to bargain directly with the administration.

What types of issues will they be discussing? Labor issues such as salary, tenure; budget issues such as where cuts ought to be made and money should be spent; and other policy issues will be discussed.

Furthermore, in two state colleges where a collective bargaining unit has been established, students have been granted a seat at the negotiating table. Will the same happen here? What about undergraduate and graduate students' or interests in collective bargaining with the administration?

Larry S. Roberts, President of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), one of the organizations competing to represent faculty in collective bargaining, said that such a system where students become a third party at the negotiating table would become "unnecessarily cumbersome."

"What happens is the administration and faculty would start to play off the third party, the student," Roberts continued. Roberts said that by including students as a third party on the bargaining table negotions would become more of a "political game."

On the students side of the coin, Carl Allen, Chairperson of the Student Government Committee on Governmental Affairs said a seat for students on the negotiating table would be useless since students are not given voting priveleges.

According to Allen, the Student Organizing Project has introduced a legislative bill to investigate students' role in faculty collective bargaining which is presently being heard by the state Ways and Means Committee.

Roberts said he believed the problem can be solved with "systematic communication" between faculty and students. Roberts explained that faculty would transmit information to students and would in turn present student recommendations to negotiators. Roberts cited Youngstown State University in Ohio where this system is working.

"We feel students and faculty have much in common and by creating this type of relationship, things will work out smoothly," Roberts said.

Joseph S. Larson, President of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP), the other organization competing for faculty support for collective bargaining, sees students working at a more grassroots level in the bargaining.

"Since it is up to the state Labor Relations Board to decide who actually votes in the bargaining process, I can't say that AAUP would mean direct student input," Larson said. "However, student input would be very important," he added.

Larson cited the student-faculty ration, and the amount of class time for teachers, as factors which would "definitely affect students."

"We would expect student input in the way of developing policies and proposals for faculty contracts. We are going to need students who are willing to spend hours in committee work — even without a vote," he said.

Larson added that student input which already exists, on the faculty senate and in department personal committee would "play a real part" in bargaining for contracts.

Larson also slashed out at the Community College Contract, recently drawn up by the Mass$chusetts Teachers Association (MTA), the statewide title of MSP, calling it "unfair to students in the evaluation procedure."

Graduate students are also in the process of forming their own collective bargaining unit. Will there be conflict with faculty?

Sherry L. Flashman, Vice-President of the Graduate Employees Union, said that through informal contact with the two organizations competing to represent faculty, there should be no conflict between graduate students and faculty needs.

Importantly also is the morale of the faculty. Students will directly feel faculty members attitude toward their job. And then there is the issue of budget cuts in relationship to classroom equipment.

The faculty, if they choose to establish a coleective bargaining unit, will have a greater say on where cuts should be made and money should be spent. And all this is in the interest of students.

Northwest Road 'could run $2.8 million'

A UMass official said yesterday that although the University estimated the cost of the proposed Northwest Road at $1.5 million, the cost "could run as high as $2.8 million."

In addition, figures on file with the state Department of Public Works (DPW) indicate the cost could be even more than that.

Gerald J. Grady, the UMass coordinator of Community Relations, said, "The million - and - a - half in the University's opinion covers the road from the end of Commonwealth to North Village, and the new road from North Pleasant Street to Route 116 in an intersection similar to that now between Meadow Street and 116."

The proposed Northwest Road would be built by the DPW with federal and state funds.

Grady said that $2.8 million is "the most it (the road) could run."

He said although the University is seeking a relatively uncomplicated designed road, the state may want to put more on the road.

A major item involved is the cost of adapting Rte. 116 to the proposed Northwest Road, he said.

University plans for the Rte. 116 — Northwest Road intersection would be "two roads coming together on grade," which he said is the most elementary intersection they could have, and is without tunnels or overpasses.

Grady said there are three clover leaf-like designs that are more complicated and would involve greater costs.

Also in question is how far, if at all, Rte. 116 would be "double-barrelled" to handle the excess traffic from the Northwest Road, Grady said. Double barrelling Rte. 116 would mean two lanes running in either direction.

According to cost estimates in the Project Information System (PIS) at DPW, construction of sections planned for the Northeast Bypass now included in the Northwest Road could reach the vicinity of $5 million. The PIS is a computerized list of basic data for DPW projects, according to DPW official Thomas Richardson.

The Northeast Bypass was defeated at town meeting last May.

Preliminary cost estimates in the PIS of that road put the cost of double-barrelling Rte. 116 and a road leading to the Commonwealth Ave. proposed extension, and the intersection of these two roads, at $2.8 million.

The extension of Commonwealth Ave. north and then east to East Pleasant Street would, according to the PIS, cost $5 million. The University is asking for the latter road only to the point where it intersects North Pleasant Street, roughly half the distance of the $5 million section.

The University proposal for the road states it would be "generally in conformity with the plans for the Northeast Bypass."

Richardson emphasized that PIS figures did not cover details and may have been refined since they were fed into the system.

Alexander Mackenzie, DPW expediter for the Northeast Bypass project, said the project was terminated after town meeting voted it down in May, and final estimates were never received.

Plans for the Northeast Bypass were being prepared for the DPW by Bayside Engineering Associates Inc. in Boston.

The University will ask the town of Amherst to endorse plans for construction of the road at the Amherst special town meeting Oct. 18.

"Angels" have helped us along many times from Massachusetts to Missouri. In North Adams (Mass.), Madison (Ind.) and Cape Giradeau (Mo.), we found the Salvation Army a willing angel.

Once we crossed the floodwall into Cape Giradeau, we encountered a typical city-problem. We couldn't just set up camp anywhere. Fortunately, Cape is blessed with a Salvation Army Transient Center. The army provides a bed, meal, and a dose of Gospel for the rail, river and road hoboes that drift into town. Their main objective is to "Save Souls", or at least practice a little "Christian Charity."

Tom Thompson, the 20-year-old manager of the center, took Transcontinental Canoe Lines to heart and gave us VIP transient status. He dispensed with the usual Gospel samples (although he did make it clear that all army literature was at our disposal) and got clearance from his Lieutenant to give us keys to the center. He admired our freedom and wanted us to come and go as we pleased.

We wandered the streets of Cape for hours, admiring the old French style architecture of tile, stucco and wrought iron. Giradeau is the home of SEMO (Southeast Missouri State College). Although only half the size of UMass, SEMO sports 11 and 12 story dorms to conserve space on its limited campus. It's a small campus, but almost all steep hills. It must be brutal making an early class in winter-time.

We encountered a small problem in Cape. We had little more than enough cash for a week's groceries. Stan had money coming in St. Louis and had already commandered my touring money for groceries. His wallet had two dollars and a little change in it.

The plan was to go as far as we could in a week. If we couldn't make St. Louis, we'd stop and pick corn for a week or so. That's where the army came to the rescue.

Tom knew we were broke. Next morning, when we went out to grocery shop, he persuaded his commander to provide us with a $5 grocery order. That bought us an extra three dinners. Then he added $5 from his own pocket!

As we packed, planning to shove off at noon (after local TV and newspaper interviews), Tom came up with another surprise.

"The lieutenant has a truck coming in to pick up some rags today. He said if you guys aren't in any hurry, we'll put you up for another night and pay you $2.30 an hour apiece to load the truck. If you don't mind hanging around."

It was an easy decision. Tom had expected it to take four hours to load the truck, but with four of us (counting Tom and another army worker) we finished in two. The lieutenant called us in and paid us $15 each. His math is crazy, but his heart's in the right place.

With a little extra cash, we spent another night wandering. I left Stan headed towards a Dairy Queen to indulge an ice cream fetish. I traveled through SEMO and into Smitty's Tavern. After we met up again, we got an offer from a local woman to join a party. He begged off, because we were launching early after doing the postponed interviews. I accepted and only got two hours sleep before a long day's work.

The work got harder and the days got hotter after Cape. Stan's temper kept flaring up. I think it was partially heat and humidity, partially because the rock dikes create unusual currents in the river. I had to keep my temper in check, due to the disparity in our sizes (Sroka is five inches and 50 pounds bigger). When he flared off the handle, I'd let myself remember that "discretion is the better part of valor" and that in a fight, it'd be no contest.

The countryside started changing again. Bluffs appeared on the Missouri side, while the Illinois side stayed mostly flat. It's amazing how good a hill can look after staring at table flat land for weeks.

Many days you need a boost to encourage you on a 10 hour paddling day. On most other rivers, we'd run into several people during the day for a little conversation. The Mighty Mississippi is a fairly desolate river, due to its bad habit of flooding. When you can't find people to break up the day, you turn to nature.

About two hours before dark every night, bank swallows skimmed over the river, feeding on moths and mosquitos. Occasionally, turkey vultures would stare at us from shore or circle high overhead. I started wondering just how skinny I'd gotten. Sandhill cranes wheeled with their own awkward grace, flying along ahead of us.

I got a little superstitious about cranes. They had led us along since we entered New York State. Now, 11 rivers later, the long legged, steel-grey birds still looped up the river with us.

Budget big concern--Martus

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Two of the primary roles of the Undergraduate Student Senate are to be a "watch dog agency for the UMass administration, and to make sure the lower-level Whitmore administrators do their jobs during the upcoming multi-fee schedule and preparation of the UMass-Amherst annual budget," said Student Government Association (SGA) co-President Jay A. Martus in a recent Collegian interview.

"It's our money that's paying for our education, so therefore the UMass budget is our greatest concern. We're the ones who are going to be screwed over. But we are not going to screw ourselves," Martus said.

Approximately seven months ago, Jay Martus and Paul M. Cronin were elected SGA co-Presidents. In that time, they have launched a series of investigations of the University budget, University fees, the rhetoric program, and the raising of academic credit from three to four credits per course. In addition they have checked the possible reimbursement of unused meal tickets and the development of student unionization through academic departments.

Martus and Cronin reflected on the progress of these reforms and stated their goals for the remaining term of office.

"The UMass-Amherst fiscal 1977 budget, ready to take effect July, 1977 is slightly higher than fiscal year 1976," said Martus. The budget for the Amherst campus is $68,088,789, an increase of $1,647,900 or 2.5 additional funding.

Martus said that the priority of the administration is to fill faculty positions from the present 15 per cent vacancy rate to approximately 7 per cent.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery agreed with Martus' statement concerning filling the faculty vacancy rate but also said that priority would be given to filling teaching assistants for academic departments.

"This budget," said Martus, "is still a bare bones budget. Inflation hits the hardest in support areas such as clerical, paper, and software. The inflation impact on costs is tremendous. Not having enough faculty means jacking up class size onger lines and a backlog in paper."

"Not only does this cost students more money in the end it also cuts-up potential from federal grants because the staff isn't there to develop the grants," said Martus.

The budget request for fiscal year 1978, said Martus, will be $74.6 million would be committed to the University personnel. Martus said that the remaining monies would be used in the "sorely neglected student affairs."

"Although we will have more money than we actually have now, quality education at a low cost is still sorely lacking. We're getting there but we are still a long way off," said Martus.

Bromery agreed with Martus' previous statement. He said that the UMass budget would require another seven million dollars to reach the level of the 1975 fiscal year budget.

"If we try to get back to 1975, and take care of inflation, it would be 81 million dollars. Our proposed budget is a slight improvement from this year but it won't get us back to the level of 1975, said Bromery.

Martus, Bromery, and acting Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dr. Robert L. Woodbury said more staff is needed in the offices of the Registrar, Bursar, and Financial Aid, and also in the student counsellor program.

"Every year, said Martus, "We go through fiascos of long lines. It seems that every semester, Whitmore says, 'Well, we got through that crisis.' But every semester, they don't prevent the crisis from happening again."

Bromery said the second priority of the '77 budget would be to scale student staff support areas and staff counselling. Bromery has sent a memo to Woodbury suggesting methods of increased efficiency of office procedures in the Registrar, Housing, and Financial Aid offices. Bromery has also suggested to Woodbury that these offices for the first few days of each semester extend their hours into the early evening hours to alleviate the long lines.

It's a shame for anyone who stands in line for a few hours to then have the line close, said Bromery.

Woodbury said the opening of this semester was a big problem but that it was the smoothest opening in five years.

"A big reason for the confusion was that we were terribly understaffed and in some areas a number of personnel left just prior to the beginning of the semester. We

Nader featured at nuke teach-in

By ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader, Prof. William Heronemus of the UMass Civil Engineering Department and anti-nuclear power activist Samuel Lovejoy will highlight the Nuclear Power Teach-In to be held tonight and Wednesday in the Campus Center.

Sponsored by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), the teach-in will include a series of speakers, workshops, music and films aimed at educating students and faculty on the nuclear power issue.

The following events will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium:

TUESDAY

7:30 p.m.
— Introduction and Music — Pat & Tex, a folk group.
8 p.m.-8:45 p.m.
— Daniel Ford (Director of Union of Concerned Scientists) — an overview of nuclear power.
8:45 p.m.-9:30 p.m.
— Diana Sidebotham (New England Coalition Against Nuclear Power) — citizen involvement in nukes, how to respond to the nuclear issue and New England activities.
9:30 p.m.-10:15 p.m.
— Guy Chichester (Clamshell Alliance) — action at Seabrook, N.H.
10:15 p.m.-11 p.m.
— Discussion and Questions from the floor.

WEDNESDAY

Butz quits in wake of 'slur'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz handed President Ford his resignation yesterday, saying it was the price for "gross indiscretion" — a racial slur that was becoming an issue in the 1976 presidential campaign.

Butz apologized for his remarks about blacks and said in a statement, "By taking this action, I hope to remove even the appearance of racism as an issue in the Ford campaign."

He said his decision was entirely voluntary, and there was "no pressure" from the White House.

"President Ford is a decent man with high moral values, who insists that every American be treated equally and with dignity," said Butz. "Every member of his administration must and does subscribe to the same values."

Ford said his decision to accept Butz' resignation was "one of the saddest" of his presidency. He praised Butz' work in agriculture and called him "a close personal friend, who loves his country and all that it represents."

Ford reprimanded Butz Friday for "highly offensive" remarks made in a conversation with former White House counsel John Dean and actor Pat Boone on a plane from the GOP National Convention.

Dean reported the remarks in "Rolling Stone" magazine, attributing them to an unidentified Cabinet member.

Butz, asked why more blacks do not vote Republican, said all "coloreds" want are three things — good sex, "loose shoes" and indoor toilet facilities. His language was so coarse that most newspapers and broadcast stations did not use his exact words in reporting the reprimand.

Teary-eyed after meeting with Ford yesterday, Butz read to reporters his resignation letter saying, "I sincerely apoligize for any offense that may have been caused by the unfortunate choice of language used in a recent conversation and reported publicly."

Besides his letter of resignation and his oral statement at the White House, Butz issued a written statement saying, "This is the price I pay for a gross indiscretion in a private conversation. The use of a bad racial commentary in no way reflects my real attitude."

Then Ford, his face grim and aides shielding him from reporters' questions, entered the room and said Butz was wise and courageous enough "to recognize that no single individual ... should cast a shadow over the integrity and good will of American government by his comments."

Butz had been reprimanded once before by Ford in 1974 after he repeated a joke about the Pope's position on birth control, causing an uproar in the Roman Catholic community. Ford told him then to apoligize for commenting: "He (the Pope) no playa da game, he no maka da rules."

WASHINGTON: Saying he had to pay the price for his "gross indescretion," Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz tells reporters at the White House yesterday that he has resigned because of his disparaging racial remark. Butz, 67, served five years as Agriculture Secretary under Presidents Nixon and Ford. (UPI)

Gunman kills King's aide in alleged anti-regime act

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain (AP) — Assassins waiting in ambush along a downtown street opened fire on approaching traffic with machine guns yesterday, killing one of King Juan Carlos' advisers and three bodyguards and wounding 10 persons.

It was the bloodiest attack against the Spanish regime in the 10 months since the death of longtime dictator Gen. Francisco Franco. Authorities said Basque separatists apparently were responsible.

The official, Juan Maria de Araluce, 59, a member of the ultraconservative Council of the Realm, was cut down virtually on his doorstep as he was being driven home to lunch in the downtown section of this Basque city.

The gunfire brought his children rushing from his apartment, where they found his body riddled with more than a dozen bullets.

Police said a lone gunman stepped suddenly from a doorway on one of San Sebastian's main streets and swept Araluce's automobile with machine gun fire. Gunfire also struck 14 other cars, including a police escort trailing Araluce, killing the three bodyguards. Araluce's chauffeur was seriously wounded.

Witnesses reported seeing three other armed men in a white getaway car used by the assassin to escape and later found abandoned nearby.

An anonymous telephone caller told a San Sebastian newspaper that the Basque separatist organization ETA claimed responsibility for the assassinations of Araluce "and his guardian dogs."

Araluce, president of the council of the Basque province of Guipuzcoa, whose capital is San Sebastian, was reported to have received death threats from the ETA.

The killings sent shock waves through the government in Madrid, where the king was reported safe but under tight security. Premier Adolfo Suarez called his cabinet into emergency session.

Police launched a massive hunt for the assassination squad in the San Sebastian area. Patrols virtually sealed off the nearby border with France, a traditional haven for ETA members. Coastal guards also were alerted.

In 1973, ETA commandos assassinated Premier Luis Carrero Blanco and two other persons by setting off a bomb under a Madrid street as the premier drove by.

Despite a record as a rightist, Araluce was said to have been working for restoration of some of the autonomy the Basque region enjoyed before Franco took it away at the end of the Spanish civil war in 1939.

The 16-member Council of the Realm is not involved in the day-to-day operation of the government but advises the king on such matters as the selection of a premier. Araluce, who fought as a pilot on Franco's side during the civil war, was also a member of the right-wing national parliament.

Reactions to Butz assorted

(UPI) — Black Sen. Edward Brooke said Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz' resignation after making a racial slur was "good for the country," but Undersecretary John A. Knebel called yesterday a sad day for American agriculture.

Campaigning in Denver, Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter said Butz "never should have been secretary of agriculture and he should have been fired a long time ago."

Some farm groups said they were sorry to see Butz go — racial slur or no — because they liked his farm policies and did not think the Cabinet member was expressing his true feelings when in August he repeated a comment about the sexual and bathroom preferences of blacks.

Brooke, the Massachusetts Republican who is the Senate's only black, issued a statement saying, "Secretary Butz's resignation is good for the country, the President, and the Republican Party."

But Knebel, who becomes acting secretary until a successor for Butz is chosen, said in Mansfield, Ohio: "It's not a happy day for me at all. It's not a happy day for American agriculture."

Oregon Gov. Bob Straub, a Democrat, called Butz "a bigot," and said his resignation was "entirely appropriate."

"Nobody in a prominent position has a right to malign a large part of the people and get away with it," he added.

Sen. Robert Byrd, the assistant Democratic leader, said Ford should have fired Butz the moment he learned of the offensive statement, instead of trying to ride out a wave of public reaction and acting out of "political expediency."

Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said he was "gratified at the vindication of the American system."

Rep. Paul Findley, R-Ill., called Butz "the greatest secretary of agriculture in American history," but said he acted wisely in resigning.

Some farm groups had called on Ford to retain Butz.

"It would be a tragedy if this distinguished and compassionate man should be forced from office because of an unwise comment which is totally out of keeping with his basic character," Allan Grant, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, said Monday before learning of the resignation.

"It's unfortunate and it shouldn't have been said, but most people are guilty of telling ethnic jokes at one time or another," said Roy Keppy, national chairman of Farmers for Ford.

"Some farmers said they would forgive Ford for the embargo, but if he let Butz go, they wouldn't be so happy about it," he said.

Victor Marchetti, former C.I.A. executive assistant and 14-year veteran with the Agency, told an Anaheim conference sponsored by the Church of Scientology that the Agency once wired a live pussy cat for sound in a bizarre attempt to use the pet for eavesdropping purposes.

According to Marchetti, the cat was intended to be placed in an area where potential enemy agents might be discussing covert plots against the Americaa government.

However, Marchetti said that problems began to crop up when the wired cat developed hunger pangs, and often wandered away for the targeted discussions search

But hunger wasn't the only animal instinct bugging the electronic kitty, said Marchetti. As it turned out, the tune-in tabby was a "he cat who liked she cats," and he tended to wander away whenever the urge for romantic action hit him.

Money lures diGrazia to move southward

(Compiled from Wires)

Montgomery County, Md., council is expected to vote today to approve the appointment of Boston Police Commissioner Robert J. diGrazia as chief of the county's 951-member police department.

DiGrazia was picked Friday by County Executive James P. Gleason. A three-member advisory committee which had screened more than 100 applicants for the $46,000-a-year job had recommended the outspoken Boston police official.

A controversial street cop who injected pride into the police force while feuding with its union, said his reason for leaving Boston is financial.

He will be paid $45,500 in Maryland compared to the $35,000 he has earned in Boston for the last four years.

"I talked to the mayor Kevin H. White very hard during the last four months" trying to get a raise, diGrazia told a news conference at police headquarters. "Over the months he stated that something could be done or would be done. As late as last night he told me something could be forthcoming."

By that time, diGrazia said, it was too late. He had informed the Maryland officials he would accept their offer to head the 900-man force and could not renege because he is "a man of his word."

"I would have been very happy to stay here until it was time for me to retire," he added. "I've grown to love this area."

DiGrazia said he was "very conscious" of his financial situation and implied he could not afford to stay on with two sons in college and a daughter in a Catholic high school.

Nuke erection costly

MANCHESTER, N.H. (AP) — Public Service Co. of New Hampshire said yesterday it had underestimated by $400 million the cost of the proposed Seabrook atomic power plant. It now estimates the cost at $2 billion.

PSC also said the federal delay of construction of the seaside plant will push the project's total cost even higher.

The Atomic Safety and Licensing Board on Thursday withdrew the plant's building permit after a federal court ordered a national review of nuclear waste disposal problems.

William Tallman, PSC president, said at a news conference concern about atomic waste disposal is a "non-problem" and that building costs will rise by $10 million a month during the delay. The plant is expected to be operating by 1984.

PSC had contended steadfastly — despite assertions to the contrary by anti-nuclear groups — that the plant would cost $1.6 billion. Tallman said the new estimate is a "definitive" price.

Seabrook's opponents have claimed the plant will cost more than $2.5 billion; but Tallman said PSC's new estimate does not mean the anti-nuclear lobby was correct in its assessment.

He said PSC is not ready to concede that the cost of the plant has outstripped its merit, saying that such predictions are premature.

The decision to halt construction, Tallman said, was "insensitive to reality"; the board did not consider the need for the plant's power; the cost of delays; and loss of jobs.

He said 350 workers will be laid off when construction ends Friday. He said the need for the plant has been proved by PSC's estimates of a 75 per cent increase in power demand in the next decade.

The state AFL-CIO Executive Council on Sunday unanimously called for resumption of work at the plant, whose construction ultimately would provide 3,000 jobs.

News in Brief

Supreme Court upholds Boston's busing

BOSTON (UPI) — The U.S. Supreme Court yesterday rejected an appeal to Boston's controversial three-year-old court-ordered desegregation plan. But the decision caused barely a stir among antibusing groups experienced with legal setbacks.

The court refused to review a June decision letting a lower federal court busing order stand. Less than one third of the city's more than 75,000 public school students are bused.

"I'm not surprised," said School Committee member Elvira Palladino, an active leader of antibusing movement.

"The Supreme Court is a liberal court, but there's no court in the land that can convince me that the federal court in Boston did not go beyond its jurisdiction when it applied its remedy citywide."

"Innocent people" were involved in the remedy, said the East Boston politician, arrested last month in an antibusing sit-in outside an integrated high school in Charlestown.

Playboy interview OK'd by Carter

STORRS, Conn. (UPI) — Jimmy Carter had the chance to retract any part of the now famous Playboy Magazine "adultry in my heart" interview, according to the editor who conducted the interview with the Democratic presidential nominee.

"Carter's moment of humanity may have never had reached print if the nominee had sought retraction," assistant managing editor G. Barry Golson said in an interview published Monday in the Connecticut Daily Campus, the University of Connecticut newspaper.

"However, Carter never used the opportunity."

Golson and free lance journalist Robert Scheer taped the interview July 21. It is scheduled for publication in the magazine's November issue. He suggested Carter's phrasing "was an attempt to use everyday examples to convey an important point."

Golson said he felt Carter said what he said in order to relate to younger voters.

Bottle ban opponents 'distort' facts

BOSTON (UPI) — A well-financed campaign to defeat a Massachusetts referendum outlawing one-way bottles has "grossly misrepresented" an Environmental Protection Agency study, federal officials said yesterday, requesting immediate cessation of "distorted advertising."

Widely advertised claims by the "Committee to Protect Jobs and the Use of Convenience Containers in Massachusetts" that a ban on non returnable bottles "could cost your family over $100 a year," are "totally absurd," said John McGlennon, EPA administrator for New England.

"Quite frankly the advertising completely distorts" a review by EPA of the impact of Vermont's three year old ban on non-returnable bottles, McGlennon said.

Court action to force suspension of the advertising campaign was unlikely because it would take too long, McGlennon said. "I hope that they will be responsive to our request.

Settlement made on new contract for auto workers

DETROIT (UPI) — The Ford Motor Co. and the United Auto Workers reached agreement yesterday on a new contract that will end a 20-day-old nationwide strike and give workers their first big step towards the four-day work week, sources said.

It was not known when the auto firm and the union would make the official announcement at Ford world headquarters in suburban Dearborn. But local UAW officials who represent the 170,000 Ford workers said they were being told that the agreement had been reached.

"All that's left to do is to dot the I's and cross the T's," one high union source said.

The union reportedly won agreement on reducing working time in a plan that will give workers four extra paid days off in the first year, eight days in the second year and 12 days in the third year. The union said this will force the auto companies to hire more workers but labor observers said it would ultimately lead to the four-day work week, a longtime goal of organized labor.

The new agreement reportedly also includes a 3 per cent annual wage increase, continued unlimited cost-of-living improvements, financial aid for retirees and greater financing of the Supplemental Unemployment Benefits Fund that gives idled workers up to 95 per cent of their take-home pay.

Free universities offer the 'bizarre'

(CPS) — With courses like "Raising Catfish in a Barrel" and "Be Good to Your Back," the nation's 200 free universities provide classes that most colleges wouldn't dream of offering.

Every year hundreds of thousands of people enroll at free universities, which offer classes without the burden of grades or credit. These alternative schools specialize in unorthodox subjects that traditional universities ignore.

What we're doing is getting back to the oldest, most basic type of education, where instructors are people who want to teach and students are people who want to learn," explained a spokeswoman for the Experimental College in Seattle, Washington. "We're trying to get away from the preoccupation with teaching certificates and degrees and move towards learning for enjoyment."

Free university courses are usually taught in the homes of teachers, who are paid little or nothing for their work. The instructors generally aren't required to have a teaching certificate or even a college degree.

Students are attracted by "the informality, the shortness of the classes and because the price is right," said Sandy Bremer of the Open University in Washington D.C.

Staff workers at free universities report that the classes usually cost between $5 and $15, although some are priced at $100 and a few cost nothing.

Most free university students are young (between 25 and 40), single, professional people with college degrees, according to Bremer. The majority have some background in academic classes so they come to a free university looking for something different. Seminars on yoga and sexuality are particularly popular with this group, she noted.

Other free university staffers report that classes on astrology, meditation, personal problems, women's studies, health and arts and crafts are well attended. Instructors are generally free to select any subject for classes — from traditional literature to witchcraft, flute making or gardening.

College Life

Leaders renege unusual promises

(CPS) — "When our opponents say issue, we say Gesundheit," chortled Jay Adkins and Skip Slyfield last spring while stumping for the top two spots in the Student Government at the University of Texas (UT).

At the outset of the campaign not many sharpies were placing bets on the absurdist Arts and Sausages Party that Adkins and Slyfield promoted. Even less took them seriously.

Undaunted, the Arts and Sausages combed the campus, performing guerilla theater and sing-outs, hosting question and answer periods and theatrical skits.

The party platform promised euthanasia on demand, the disarmament of UT police, pay toilets for faculty and administration restrooms, and groundskeepers armed with wolverines to protect the campus.

They suggested that the University be renamed "Fat City."

No one gave them a chance, but Adkins and Slyfield stomped their rivals silly in the election. Three times the number of usual voters were wooed to the polls — mostly because of the Arts and Sausage's original promises and off the wall campaign tactics. Once he was in, president-elect Adkins announced, "We're gonna drag student government wailing and screeching into the streets where students can deal with it."

Of course this was all last spring. Most cynics worth their salt would probably claim that these crazy characters pulled the election caper just for a goof, and were never intent on following through in the fall.

But Adkins and Slyfield didn't have time to back out. The day after they were elected, the newly enfranchised duo attended a reception for the Board of Regents. They pressed flesh and swilled ritzy liquor while attempting to mingle with top Texan brass.

They didn't cut it. The next day the Arts and Sausages were informed the Board of Regents had voted to suspend funds for the Student Government. "They cut our balls off, left us standing naked, one-legged by a telephone booth," recalls Slyfield.

"Put your money where our mouth is" was the motto for a series of student fundraisers called the "Arts and Sausages Traveling Road Shows." The appearance offered more skits and songs, hustles and pitches, in fact, any wild antics that have lived up to the campaign promise of a spectacle each month.

And apparently these gypsy-like stints went over big, because the Arts and Sausages raised more money among the students than is usually allocated by the Board of Regents.

"We tell the people, here's the money, if you have any problems we'll help. Otherwise, we don't want to hear from you," says Slyfield.

The pikes are looking for a few good men.

We are Pi Kappa Alpha. We're new and different. A national fraternity on campus looking for something extra from UMass Frat. Life. What is important to us?

1. Maintaining sound academic performance.
2. Living the good life, but with common sense.
3. Social expansion, but maintaining our individuality.

What's NOT important to us?
1. Hazing.
2. Maintaining fraternity hierarchy.
3. The stereotyping of UMass Greeks.

We're new and challenging. Your influence will help shape the future of this fraternity. If this is what you've been looking for, take the initiative! Check us out, call Brian or Rich at 546-6132 or come to our meeting tonite, Tues., 7:00 p.m. in C.C. See assistance desk for room. We're looking for a few good men.

Mothers worry about hungry students

(CPS) — For about four bucks, E.R. Yokum's Philadelphia restaurant will write home to tell your mother you're eating well. In addition to dinner, Yokum will dash off a postcard that reads: "Dear Mom, Your brilliant college kid was seen eating a decent meal at E.R. Yokum and Company. Yes, we're sure it was your kid. (Student's name) was eating soup, salad, entree, roll and butter. So stop worrying already! Sincerely, E.R. Yokum and Company."

There's also a P.S. at the end of the card. "(Student's name) says to send more money."

Campus cliches cloud conversations

Ever hear these phrases? Throat, jellyroll, gut, cake course, or bookin?

These expressions and countless others inundate the conversations of college students all over the country, from the Grant Coulee Dam to the Capitol.

Here's a few examples:

Throat — (Northeast) Someone who is always studying, who knows the date of the big exam before the teaching assistant, who fills out grad school applications for grins,and for whom an A-minus is not good enough.

Wisconsin co-ed 'stood up' by senator

(CPS) — Kathy Anderson, a Wisconsin student leader, offered to drive Senator Proxmire on a campaign trip following a request for volunteers from his staff. Ms. Anderson was hastily jilted and when she wanted to know why, she was told by a senatorial aide, "Well, you know — it would look funny."

Ms. Anderson commented in the National On Campus Report: "He's just perpetuating the myth that a man and a woman couldn't be together for purposes of business or politics."

The Wisconsin fringe benefit will just never be written, thanks to Senator Proxmire.

Strength in unity

The turnout at services for Yom Kipor, the highest holiday of the Jewish year, was especially good this year. Sunday night services had standing room only, and at the day-long services Monday, enough people were in and out of the Student Union Ballroom to keep it fairly full all day.

As a friend and I waited for services to begin Monday morning, she looked at the crowd around us and asked, "What did we do last year?"

What she meant was that Yom Kipor last year seemed a forgotten holiday for many of the Jews on campus. Many skipped services, and few bothered with the traditional day-long fast, which symbolizes sacrifice and reflection.

Yet this year, the trend seems reversed. Jews here have skipped classes rather than services, and in the Union as well as around the rest of the campus, if you listen hard, you can hear the stomachs rumble.

Perhaps this revival of interest is an indication that we, as Jews are once more realizing that unity is what keeps us strong. Sticking to our beliefs, through all that we as a people have been through, is what has kept the Jewish religion alive for over five thousand years.

Now especially, when Israel is threatened by the loss of United States aid, and Soviet Jews are still imprisoned behind an iron wall, it is important to show the world that we are still strong, still united in our beliefs.

The solid showing at services here indicates that Jewish students are proud of being Jewish, and lets the UMass community know it.

As another friend of mine put it, "High-holy day services are the only mass showing we make all year, and the more people that go, the more we'll be respected for it."

Irrational nukies

By DON MICHAK

I had breakfast in town this morning, which is becoming something of a habit for me. Today, however, I did not regret the extra money spent enriching the Amherst bourgoisie.

As I read the morning paper, I happened to overhear part of the conversation that was going on next to me. Now when conversations going on next to me are relatively interesting, or at least better than the morning's news, I usually listen to them. Today's was an exceptional conversation, though, so I took notes.

Seated to my right were two Western Mass. Electric types, junior-level execs from the public relations or employee relations division. Articulate "staff coordinator" types. When my first cup of coffee came, they were discussing Seabrook. Now the Seabrook story is somewhat dear to me, so my ears tuned them in.

"And that picture, the one in the newspapers...it was in almost all the papers, they even carried it nationally. Well, hell, anyone could sympathize with that guy in the wheelchair — he was blind or something. That kind of thing is just no good."

'The conversation was developing into a kind of monologue, and I suspect the speaker intended the rest for me to hear.)

"Anyone would have human sympathy for the fellow. We understand the protesters... Students are getting back to a more "rational view, though. But there are still a few revolutionaries over there (indicates UMass...laughs). And they're concerned about the environment and the world threat (I am unsure exactly which world threat he was talking about). Business, I think, should share more in the discussion. It should be party to the discussion. Its unfortunate that they're getting incentives over there, course credit... (MASSPIRG is mentioned)...more ways. We should be there. Its no wonder that graduates — when they start working, like with us, have to be corrected for being unrealistic. Now its the engineers, we've got to talk to the kids before they get here. I really need their help, like in this Seabrook thing."

The conversation speaks for itself. But looking through these NUKESpeople's window; I really can't resist the temptation to editorialize.

"People at Seabrook were irrational and the entire NO NUKES protest experience has been regrettable." But our friends misunderstand. It is not we who are irrational, but rather themselves, the NUKESpeople, the power and wealth behind the development of nuclear power. It is they who are attempting to put profits ahead of people. Moreover, it is the NUKESpeople who are developing an irrational source of power. Those of us against the development of nuclear power have no regrets about demonstrating at Seabrook, about the arrest of a disabled comrade in action. But the NUKESpeople sure do (You can safely bet that picture won't win a Pulitzer or be featured in the Globe like pictures of helpless families faaling out of burning tenements).

My two public relations friends do not understand Seabrook. They do not understand the protesters. They probably will not be able to allow business to "share in the discussion of environmental affairs" (a code phrase for massive propaganda favoring Big Business — like the anti-bottle bill campaign going on now). They will not get to build Seabrook. They will not grow richer. Despite their veiled threat, they will not stop student revolutionaries at UMass. They will not stop MASSPIRG, even with the help of their friends, the trustees. And they will never again have sheeply graduates as willing nuclear engineers.

They do not understand all of that because they have lost touch with the reality of people taking control over the decisions which affect their lives. Which is what Seabrook, environmental discussions, student revelutionaries, MASSPIRG, and critical new employees are all about. We the people are developing rational power.

Every vote counts

To the Editor:

Just a reminder that today is the last possible day to register to vote in the November elections. You can do this at the Amherst Town Hall on Main St. (across from Russell's) any time today.

While the trend of Student apathy is still prevalent here as well as elsewhere, we feel that it is crucial for the student population of this campus and this state to VOTE. The victory of John Durkin last year by one vote and the victory last week of eleven votes by Ed McColgan from Northampton prove to us that in fact "one vote does count."

Please take the time to register.

Sack Butz

To the Editor:

For the past several days, the press has covered the issue of racist statements by Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz. The statement itself however has not been reported, leaving doubt in some minds as to the extend of the racist sentiments involved. The statement to John Dean and Pat Boone was in regard to the absence of Black Americans in the Republican Party.

> I'll tell you why you can't attract coloreds, because colored only want three things. You know what they want? I'll tell you what coloreds want. It's three things: first, a tight pussy; second, loose shoes; and third, a warm place to shit. That's all! (Rolling Stone, October 7, 1976)

Obviously Butz is a racist of the most virulent sort. Equally obvious is that Butz should be immediately sacked. But perhaps less clear is the wider implications of Butz' behavior. If we see it as the actions of one individual racist, we have missed its significance, as Jimmy Carter did in denouncing the statement, but not the sentiment.

Earl Butz heads an arm of government which employs 104,549 individuals (1975) and among other things is in a position to influence the well being of 2.7 million (1974) farm workers. It would be surprising if Butz did not act upon his hateful attitudes in his official role. Just how would one with the above sentiments act toward Black employees and Black farmworkers and what type of white staff would such an individual accumulate?

Finally, what is called for is a thorough investigation of the extent of racism within the Department of Agriculture and a plan of action to deal with the results of the investigation.

Male ignorance, again

To the Editor:

In reference to yesterday's Letter to the Editor, once again the voice of male anger, ignorance, and thus inadequacy rises up over the abortion issue. Perhaps Laing, and all others of his ilk, if you understood any one of the following three facts when you would not be so quick to condemn women for demanding the right to control their bodies.

1. There are no safe humane birth control methods for women, save abstinence which in dealing with men like you is not such a bad idea.

2. Women, not men, bear full responsibility for the prevention of pregnancy.

3. If a child is born the woman traditionally bears full responsibility for the rearing of that child.

Try directing your anger to the sexist male-dominated medical profession. You may be getting closer to the root of the problem.

The veteran and the administration

To the Editor:

As you may remember, the Administration of UMass-Amherst attempted to initiate a policy of reorginazation within the Veterans' Affairs Office (VAO) at the close of the Spring Semester. UMass veterans, recognizing the potential detriment to the excellent existing programs of the VAO, rallied against this reorganization in support of then-director Francis X. Cotter. A committee of veterans investigated the proposed changes, and in a series of meetings with various Administration representatives, made recommendations as to how the best interests of the veteran at this campus could be served. From this group of concerned veterans arose the Veterans' Affairs Advisory Committee (VAAC).

It was determined that the VAAC would consist of two members each from the Veterans' Coalition for Community Affairs and Beta Chi, the veterans' social fraternity, and at least two members from the remainder of the veterans' community; these latter two positions were filled by volunteers during the summer for the sake of attending to pressing business. An understanding was reached that general elections would be held in the fall to fill these two or more at-large positions.

On Tuesday, October 5th, at 7:00 p.m., the VAAC will conduct a meeting to accept nominations for these positions. The meeting is to be held in Room 163, Campus Center, and all veterans, as well as dependents eligible for beneifts under the G.I. Bill, are encouraged to attend. If it is the consensus of those in attendance, elections for at-large representatives to the VAAC will be held. In addition, the members of the VAAC will summarize the events of the summer regarding changes in the VAO staff and structure, will introduce the new Director and Assistant Director of the VAO to the veterans' community, and will conduct discussions of problems currently affecting the UMass veteran.

The VAAC's purpose is to provide communication between the veteran and the administration; if this is to be done effectively, input is needed. If you have questions regarding the events and changes of the summer, ideas, comments or criticisms of the VAAC or the VAO, or if you simply want to talk about veterans' problems, come to the meeting. The VAAC exists to help YOU, the veteran, but they need your help to be effective.

No easy answers

He was a friend of a friend. I hardly knew him. We were driving through the Berkshires in his brother-borrowed van, holding hands. He had kissed me on our walk through the North Leveritt woods, so it was expected that we hold hands. Not entirely lulled by the passing countryside and the changing of the leaves in the crisp, clear air, we fell into conversation. At first it was rather superficial, but then the conversation took a strange twist...

"... and two years ago I was in New York again. I walked the streets alone for three hours or so. My girlfriend was in a clinic off of Second Ave. doing the abortion route and I had come to hold her hand only they wouldn't let me stay with her. I got tired of watching all the nervous boyfriends and mothers in the waiting room, so hit the streets to buy some roses for her. If her boyfriend couldn't be with her, at least she should have some roses. Good logic, huh?"

"You hit on a pretty deep — (pause) I mean, who's to say who's right. A woman should have the right to choose what sort of life she wants, to mother or not to mother, but she has friends to lean on either way and the fetus has no one. I mean, there it is — the whole thing — the fetus has nobody in the courtroom and the woman is stuck with the rap either way.

"How do you choose, ya know? You're not giving the baby a chance and it might have the key to cancer research locked in its little brain, but even if it did, how much good would it do in a world where he or she wasn't wanted or loved? How do you make laws about something like that? It's damned frightening."

"It's not even like deciding about capital punishment, because there's no burden of proof, no guilt, well not really any guilt you can pin down and condemn for life and it's not like having twelve people, a judge and a whole state process behind you when you debate your decision. You're there alone. And here are these old men in the Supreme Court deciding on something with just theories in their hands, they'll never have to choose. And if they point thumbs down, how many women will die on backroom tables, denied the chance for a healthy choice? And how many women will feel as if they have to go through with an operation they are not really psyched for, if they vote yes?"

Silence.

"There aren't any easy answers, at all, are there — about abortion and the law, I mean?"

"No."

Long silence.

"You're looking awful pretty in that dress. What are you doing after dinner?"

We smile across the van.

Victory at Seabrook

By JIM LEAS

A victory was won by opponents of the Seabrook Nuclear Power Plant. Last Thursday, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission decided to include Seabrook in its Moratorium on construction.

The Moratorium is a temporary halt in licensing new nuclear plants. It was called by the NRC on August 13 in response to a court order ruling that the NRC had failed to adequately consider some atomic power risks — particularly those associated with disposing of the radioactive wastes.

But Seabrook was not originally covered by the Moratorium because its license had already been issued — barely two weeks before the Moratorium took affect.

The NRC order means that construction at Seabrook must stop by this Friday. But this victory could be short lived: The August 14 Boston Globe said that "the Commission hopes to begin issuing licenses again sometime between the first of October and the end of the year."

Activists in the growing movement against the Seabrook nuke feel that the NRC decision could be an attempt to defuse the momentum building against construction. They have called for a massive rally and anti-nuke fair for October 23 in Seabrook. "The NRC is under great pressure from demonstrations we've had so far" said a spokesperson for MassPIRG. We welcome the decision to halt construction but if we are going to win a permanent halt we need to keep the pressure on. That is why we are encouraging people to come to the Teach-In at UMass on Tuesday and Wednesday to learn about what nuclear power means and come to Seabrook on October 23 to act against nuclear power."

The decision of the NRC to include Seabrook in the Moratorium even though they were under no court order to do so further legitimizes the position of those who are opposed to Nuclear power. Their hesitation to build the plants shows that even the top supporters of nuclear power are not totally sure of themselves.

The September 8 New York Times reported that a 172 page report prepared for the Energy Research and Development Administration concludes that radioactive waste at the nations nine storage centers is a major health hazard. The report also points out that the nuclear industry has a sorry record in preventing "leaks" of highly radioactive material. The Times article reported, "At the governments major storage area in Hanford, Washington, 18 leaks have resulted in losses of 430,000 gallons of high-level waste into the surrounding soil."

The Hanford site is the same place which was rocked by a chemical explosion on August 30 that contaminated eight workers with heavy doses of radioactivity.

Another recent incident relevent to the Seabrook plant, which is located on the New Hampshire coast about 50 miles from Boston, was reported in Florida at another coastal plant. The Miami Herald reported in mid March of this year that large quantities of radioactive liquid produced by the Florida Power and Light Nuclear Power Plant has been seeping into Miami's Biscayne Bay for the last two years.

What does radioactivity do to our bodies? If the dose is high enough it can cause immediate death. Lower doses can shorten life by radiation induced cancer, or affect future generations through genetic mutations. No level of radiation is considered safe.

Most of us don't know enough about nuclear power to be sure about whether to support or oppose it. The Teach-In in the campus center Ballroom tonight and all day tomorrow is designed to give us some of this information and to mobilize support for the peaceful, legal, and orderly demonstration that will be held on October 23 in Seabrook, New Hampshire.

An anniversary to remember

By CHRIS BOURNE

October 5, 1966. Ten years ago today. No this isn't one of those Bicentennial minutes. It's not the anniversary of the day George's horse got new shoes or something like that. Most people probably couldn't think of anything important happened on this date ten years ago. In a way it's understandable, but in another way it's very sad.

October 5, 1966. At 3:10 p.m., on that date, we almost had an accident. By "we" I mean the entire country. It wasn't an ordinary type of accident. We almost buried Detroit and a good chunk of Michigan under a cloud of radioactive gas. At 3:10 p.m., an operator in the control room of the Enrico Fermi Reactor Unit 1 saw the temperature start to rise in the reactor. Seconds later he shut down the reactor by shoving the control rods all the way in. One of them jammed but by repeating the operation he was able to get it in. The problem was far from over; in fact it had just begun.

Deep in the core of the reactor, four fuel assemblies had melted. The maximum accident that the designers has envisioned was one fuel assembly melting. The instruments in the control room showed that between two and six fuel assemblies had melted but no one could be sure. No one would know until months later when the damaged assemblies were pulled from the reactor.

The worst possibility that the men in the control room had to face that afternoon was that there might be an explosion. The Fermi reactor was a new type of reactor known as a liquid metal fast breeder reactor. Unlike any other type of reactor, this kind can explode. Not with the force of an atomic bomb. But just enough to break its concrete and steel shell and release radioactive material into the air. If that happened, all of Detroit would have to be evacuated.

Sitting there that afternoon, the control room crew didn't know what had happened exactly. But they didn't dare probe within the reactor for fear that the slightest jolt might disturb the core and set off the explosion.

After weeks of waiting and consulting with the best nuclear engineers in the world, the crew removed the cover of the reactor and began the long process of determining what went wrong. Using special cameras lowered into the reactor, they would find that a piece of the shielding in the reactor had come loose and blocked one of the coolant nozzles. A small piece of metal, that ironically wasn't on the plans, but had been added as a safety measure had negated all the elaborate precautions. A small piece of metal had almost wiped out a good portion of Detroit.

The reactor was rebuilt and new fuel assemblies added. Finally, in May of 1970, they were ready to try and start the reactor again. Then a coolant pipe burst and 200 pounds of radioactive sodium flowed out of the reactor. The damage took months to repair. Again they tried. But, on August 27, 1972, the AEC ordered the plant closed down and dismantled. It took a long time to do even this and it cost over $4 million dollars.

Even today the empty shell of the reactor sits there. Sits there to be guarded for the several thousand years. It is only a monument to failure; but it is better that it isn't a gravestone to the citizens of Detroit.

The shell of the Fermi plant is still there. Inside it are several hundred 55 gallon steel drums labled: DANGER RADIOACTIVE SODIUM. But beside the shell of this plant is a new reactor: Fermi Unit 2. It isn't as dangerous as Fermi 1 was but that's only a difference of degrees.

Of all the issues that we face this election year the most critical is the question of nuclear power. Perhaps some may disagree saying that abortion or the economy or poverty is more important, but I think not. For the decisions we make about nuclear power will be with us and our descendants for the next 200,000 years. It is not something we can change our mind about 20 years from now. For every day that reactors continue in operation, radioactive waste is produced. Waste that must be stored for thousands of years. Waste that must be forever isolated from our environment itself at the risk of humanity's survival.

Tonight in the Campus Center Auditorium, there will be a teach-in on nuclear power. It is ironic that it is being held ten years to the day that the potentially most lethal nuclear accident we have had happened. If you care about nothing other than your survival you owe it to yourself to be there. Nuclear power isn't an issue that anyone can avoid. It isn't an issue that will affect only one group. For radioactivity is very democratic: it kills without regard for race, creed, sex, or national origin. It is the most important issue that we can face. It is a decision that must be made on a calm rational level, not by a bunch of screaming meemies. There is a great deal of bullshit put out by supporters and detractors of nuclear power. We must sort out the facts and decide.

Be there tonight. Read up on nuclear power. A recent issue of "Skeptic" was devoted to nuclear power. It provided excellent views of both the pros and cons. In addition there was a list of books on nuclear power. Read up on it. It may be the most important reading you'll ever do.

Congress probes King conspiracy

By WAYNE CHASTAIN, Jr.
Pacific News Service

Wayne Chastain is a veteran newspaper reporter who while writing for the Memphis Press-Scimitar was one of the first reporters on the scene after Dr. Martin Luther King was shot. He has now investigated the King murder for over eight years.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 4 — Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. may have been the victim of "security stripping" — a technique used by intelligence agencies to expose a victim to assassination by removing his protection — involving the Memphis police and possibly a federal intelligence agency.

This is the theory that convinced the House of Representatives to create a special 12-member committee to probe both the 1968 King murder and the 1963 assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The Black Caucus in the House, acting on new information in the King case, was responsible for breaking a stalemate and pushing the investigation thoroughly.

The new information was given the Black Caucus by two investigators: Mark Lane, author of the best-selling book on the JFK assassination, Rush to Judgment, and Abby Mann, author of Judgment in Nuremburg.

They and Newsday reporter Les Payne found in scores of interviews with those involved in the King investigation that:

— Ed Redditt, the black Memphis police detective in charge of protecting King, was removed from his post across the street from the motel where King was shot just two hours before the slaying. Redditt told PNS he had set up a contingency plan to seal off the area in the event of violence, but it "was never implemented."

Director of the Police Department Frank Holloman — a former FBI agent of 25 years who had worked with Director J. Edgar Hoover — told him he was being removed because a murder plot against him had been discovered. After being taken home and watched by Memphis police for two days, he was put back on duty — and never heard another word about the murder plot.

Because Holloman told him of the plot in the company of a man he identified as a Secret Service agent, Redditt assumed "that Holloman had gotten this information from the Secret Service." But that agency denies having any record of sending an agent to the meeting.

Representatives from the FBI, military intelligence, National Guard and other agencies were there, however.

— Redditt's assistant told investigator Mark Lane that he too had left the command post opposite King's hotel before the slaying, but refused to discuss the circumstances surrounding his removal.

— An informal security force of four members of a local black militant group, including one undercover Memphis police agent, was also relieved from duty just before the murder — by someone in the King entourage. Stationed with arms on the same floor as King, they were already downstairs when the shooting took place.

— The only two black firemen assigned to the fire station across from King's Hotel — Redditt's command post — were also "stripped away."

Both were temporarily transferred to other stations the night before the murder. One, Floyd Newsum, told Lane that the deputy chief of the Fire Department told him the transfer order had come from the Police Department.

— According to Redditt, "The FBI never talked to me about this even though I told my story to anyone willing to answer." Newsum says he has never been questioned by a law enforcement agency about his removal either.

— Arthur Murtagh, a former FBI agent in Atlanta, has stated that agents in the Atlanta office "literally jumped for joy" when they learned King had been assassinated. He said the FBI intelligence squad in Atlanta — King's home town — was assigned "to somehow or other get King, to bring him down, break him or destroy him."

After the murder, Lane says, the same Atlanta intelligence squad was assigned by Hoover to head the investigation. "My superiors, both in the Atlanta bureau and Washington," Murtagh told PNS, "washed out leads suggesting a right-wing conspiracy."

"Had a more thorough investigation been conducted by the FBI, I believe links would have been established between the King assassination and the Kennedy murders — both those of JFK and RFK," he added.

In an interview with PNS, Redditt pointed to another area he thought should be investigated. He says he learned after the assassination that the Memphis police had heavily infiltrated a black militant organization called the Invaders that was directly responsible for King's return to Memphis. Newsday's Les Payne has reported that police and FBI informants may have played a part in the violence.

The Invaders had organized the disruption of a massive Memphis march led by King a week earlier, launching a riot that killed one, injured scores and led to 238 arrests. After the violence, apparently intended to discredit King, the non-violent leader vowed to return to prove he could still lead a peaceful demonstration.

"Dr. King would never have returned to Memphis if the violence had not happened," according to the Rev. Jesse Jackson, a key King aide. "We never intended to get bogged down in Memphis."

Newsday has reported that, according to a former leader of the Invaders, a Memphis policeman who had infiltrated the group "was one of the most provacative members of the Invaders," very active in planning confrontations.

That undercover agent, according to both Newsday and Redditt, was one of the four Invaders in the informal security force for King, created by an agreement between King's staff and the Invaders on his return trip to Memphis.

"He left the police department shortly after that," Redditt told PNS, "and the word was that he went to Washington, D.C. Then a couple of years after the King slaying I ran face to face with him in downtown Memphis. He was wearing a disguise."

Redditt says he stopped him. At first, the man pretended he was someone else, but finally acknowledged he was the man Redditt thought he was.

"He acted very mysterious, saying that he was now with the Central Intelligence Agency, and begged me not to blow his cover," according to Redditt.

The congressional decision to probe the King murder follows years of efforts to puncture the official version of how he was killed. Just a day after pleading guilty, the alleged assassin James Earl Ray tried to reverse his plea to not guilty, arguing that he had been tricked into pleading guilty by his lawyer to escape the death penalty.

In 1975, Ray told PNS, "I was set up and sucked in." He charged that his orders to drive to Memphis — because they came three days before King publicly announced he would return there — "could only have come from either someone in King's own camp or some high Justice Department official having access to information gained from wiretaps on King's telephones in Atlanta."

hope for a better opening next semester and we are meeting with members of the Housing, Registrar, Financial Aid, and Bursar offices and with Martus and Cronin to determine the best possible procedure for a smooth opening," said Woodbury.

Martus would like to see more money spent in the residential student counsellor program.

"I have felt that for the longest time, student counselling has been neglected. Many times the only contact for freshpersons and students with the official University is the residential student counsellor, said Martus.

Woodbury said the counselling program on campus is very expensive. Counselling is not only limited to residential student counselling but it also includes academic, psychological, and special counselling.

"I don't know what the right amount of money counselling deserves but counselling should be a high priority on our budget, said Woodbury.

Woodbury also said he is recommending to Bromery that more money be spent on placement and career counselling, for counselling for commuting students and first year students.

Another primary concern to the co-presidents is this and next year's University budget on the renovation of dormitories. Martus has suggested to the administration that a moratorium be held on all renovations of dorms until a financial audit by an outside firm be given to determine the true daily costs of maintenance and operation of the dorms and potential cost of refurbishment of the older dorms.

Martus said that under the present system of dormitory operations students are paying for the purchasing of the dormitories, the day to day operations and in the case of the deteriorated older buildings money required to pay for their renovation.

With just minimal structural improvement of the dorms, the University treasurer's office has estimated a rent fee increase in five years to be $900 if all the revenue were to be taken from student rent.

"This idea of day to day maintenance and being asked to pay for renovation is not my idea of low cost quality education," said Martus.

Bromery said the idea of a financial audit of the dormitories is an excellent idea.

"I think this is a great idea because we are actually seeing whether we are spending effectively the daily costs of running the dorms. In the past we have spent a lot of money on frills that we find now students don't like and aren't using. We must speculate on what the dorms will be like ten years from now physically and from an environmental aspect," said Bromery.

Cronin said the administration must forget about the idea of students paying for a full renovation cost.

"They can't expect students to pay when the goal of the University is to be committed to low cost education, said Cronin.

Woodbury agreed with Cronin that students cannot be expected to pay the full cost of dorm renovation.

"The idea that rent revenue can pay for the total cost is too high priced. People can't afford to pay for it," said Woodbury.

The senate, in additiion to asking the state legislature for state help in the renovation of the dorms is seeking private architectural firms to do a study of the physical conditions and structure of the dorms.

"It's only logical," said Martus, "that the legislature and the state help pay for the dorms because when the bond or deed is paid off, the state will own it. Hills North and South is a good example of a building that when paid off was taken over by the state. Hills is now the center of Continuing Education."

"The legislature's reaction to dorm renovation is to say to the UMass administrators — "It's your problem, find a solution," said Cronin.

Martus also commented on the establishment of the multi-year fee schedule which would give students an idea of what they could expect to pay for fees over a period of four years.

Previously, the past schedule released the preliminary estimates of the fees to the senate on February 28, allowing the senate until late April to develop any challenges. The final decision of the fee rate, made by the UMass Board of Trustees was not set until June 1.

"Students," said Martus, "up until now have no idea as a freshman of what the costs of their room and board, tuition, campus center fee, fine arts, and health fee will be from year to year. The schedule of fee increases was released at the same time the yearly University budget was formulated. The result of this was a rush effect and there was no real time for discussion."

Martus said the multi-year fee schedule will force the administration to justify each portion of the budget with the included fee.

"There will be no way," said Martus, "the administration can adjust the fees upward if they have realized they have made a mistake in the planning of the budget."

Martus said this multi-fee year schedule and also the monthly print-outs of the University Accounting Office will help to make the senate aware of how the previous year's budget was spent and also information about money transfers in departments.

Amounts of money," said Cronin, "that are under $20,000 and have been secretly transferred in the past will be accounted for. For example the UMass Dorm Clearance Account which is like a conduit between the Physical Plant and the Residence Hall Trust Fund show that extensive amounts of money was used to buy heavy equipment tools for exclusive use for dorm maintenance."

"It's very questionable whether these tools were used in the dormitories," said Cronin.

★ Porno

permissive, women are going to x-rated movies for the first time. We can't have a vacuum here at UMass."

In response to caller's questions, Allen said she has no plans or "simple answers" on how to ban pornography.

"It's up to the area governments. I'm only offering an opinion on the subject," she said.

Sparks said he hopes to bring pornography stars Linda Lovelace, Harry Reems, Marilyn Chambers, and John Keyes to campus to speak and sing.

"Contrary to what you might think, they will not be raffled off for the evening."

The Undergraduate Student Senate is planning a referendum to see how students feel about pornography on campus.

★ Northwest Road

Opponent to road construction plans Richard H. Minear said yesterday, "This mistake in figures put out by the University simply underlines the importance of having a town committee study the whole issue of traffic circulation and all possible solutions to it."

The Northwest Road is designed to relieve roads around the University, particularly North Pleasant Street, of traffic congestion.

"Up until now the only group involved in the study of this problem has been the University."

Both Minear and Grady will present arguments about the Northwest Road before the Undergraduate Student Senate tomorrow night at 9 p.m.

What's Happening

Parent workshop at Skinner tomorrow

The second in a series of Parent Workshops co-sponsored by the Infant-Toddler-Playgroup and Health Education will be held tomorrow night, beginning at 7:45 in Room 17 at Skinner Hall.

The subject will be nutrition, and will be presented by Helene Yass, Community Health Educator.

Yass will cover maternal and infant nutrition, changes in eating habits and needs of the young child, nutrition and breastfeeding, vegetarian diets and also answer questions from those in the audience.

These workshops are open to all interested people, and are of particular interest to families with young children, expectant women, and people who work with young children.

The programs are conducted flexibly, with open questions and answers throughout the presentations, and audience dialogue and sharing encouraged.

Future workshops include topics such as contraception, motor development in the young child, discipline, first and emergency aid, and sexuality and the young child. Anyone with a question can contact Susan Mackey at 665-2885 or 545-2403.

South African liberation speaker lectures tonight

A leading international spokesman for Black South African (Azanian) liberation will speak at UMass tonight at 8 in Hasbrouck Hall, Room 20.

David Sebieko, director of External Affairs and Permanent Observer-Representative to the United Nations of the Pan African Congress of Azania, will report on the Black rebellions which have broken out in South Africa recently.

Sebieko will present new information on the range and scope of Black resistance and the systematically brutal government policies of repression which the Afrikener government is attempting to cover up.

In what is expected to be a major statement, Sebieko will analyze the international aspects of the Azanian situation, the domestic policies of the Vorster regime, and the Kissinger initiatives in Southern Africa.

Sebieko, is considered a key figure in the mobilization of international support for the rights of Black South Africans. In 1964 he served six months in solitary confinement in Robben Island on charges of stealing explosives from the Afrikener army and allegedly planning the kidnaping of then Minister of Justice Vorster and Prime Minister Voervord and three other cabinet ministers. The case was dismissed for lack of evidence. Sebieko first left South Africa in 1964 for Dar As Salaam, Tanzania where he joined the staff of the external headquarters of the P.A.C. Mr. Sebieko, in seeking support for Azanian liberation, has travelled widely in the Third World and Europe leading a P.A.C. delegation to the People's Republic of China, addressing the Security Council of the United Nations.

The appearance of Sebieko is the first of a series of event splanned by the Five College Committee on Southern African Liberation. The committee made up of faculty and students of Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire, Amherst and the UMass project a series of events and activities including speakers, films, symposia, rallies and demonstrations calculated to raise the level of understanding and awareness in the five college area of the political struggle in South Africa.

Team of reporters to probe murder of fellow journalist

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI) — A national team of investigative reporters arrived yesterday to begin a probe of crime in Arizona "to show that the media is united" in the effort to learn who killed reporter Don Bolles and why.

Pulitzer Prize winner Bob Greene of Newsday, Long Island, N.Y., heads the 18-member task force sponsored by the Investigative Reporters and Editors Association, of which Bolles was a member. The group held its first national meeting one week after he was fatally injured in a bomb blast under his car.

A suspect in Bolles' murder, John Harvey Adamson, 32, is expected to go on trial later this week or early next week. A Superior Court judge has been hearing pre-trial motions in the case for several weeks.

Judge Frederic Heineman Monday denied a defense motion to move the trial out of Phoenix on grounds of pre-trial publicity.

Greene said the task force will have 18 reporters working off and on but hopes to have at least six working on a full-time basis. The goal of the task force is to publish a series on crime in Arizona within about three months.

He said he believes the effort will be "extremely worthwhile."

"If you can kill one reporter, you can presumably kill other reporters in an effort to halt these kinds of investigations," Greene said. "We are here to show that the media is united in this task."

He said the task force hopes to focus national attention "on the problems of crime and the Mafia moving into Arizona."

Bolles, an investigative reporter for The Arizona Republic in Phoenix, had written many articles over the past 15 years on infiltration of organized crime into Arizona business, on white collar crime at the state and local level, and on numerous fraudulent land sales companies in the state.

Although Bolles had not been working on investigative matters for nearly two years, he had been following up a tip he told fellow reporters he received from Adamson about involvement of Arizona political figures in land frauds. Bolles had told other reporters that he did not feel that the tip was valid and was only a political move to discredit a candidate.

Bolles went to a midtown Phoenix hotel to meet Adamson on June 2, received a telephone call while waiting in the lobby, then left to return to his desk at the state Capitol pressroom. As he started to drive away in his car, a bomb exploded. He died June 13.

Honors member sought

The Honors Council is currently seeking one new student member from UMass. Duties of council members are: 1) campus-wide Honors Program policy-making; 2) establishing and maintaining departmental Honors Programs contact; 3) research and writing on questions of Council concern; 4) attendance at scheduled meetings. Interested individuals should contact Lynn Santoro at 545-3821.

Beginning with the class of 1977, graduation with cum laude distinction will be based on a QPA of 3.2 or better, while graduation with higher honors will be restricted to those students who are formally enrolled in a Departmental Honors Program. Each Department on campus, working with the University Honors Council, either has, or is in the process of formulating a Departmental Honors Program.

Any student interested in applying for a Departmental Honors Program should contact either their Departmental Honors Coordinator or the Honors Program for more specific information.

Gambling spices up math class

DURANGO, Colo. (UPI) — Gambling won't make anyone rich but it can make mathematics more interesting.

That's the conclusion of administrator Larry Johnson of Fort Lewis College, which offered a special course that included a two-week on-the-scene study in the nation's gambling capital, Las Vegas, Nev., three years ago.

"I became a fulltime administrator right after that course, so I didn't have the time it takes to stay involved in it," Johnson said. "But I think it's a good idea, and we're considering the possibility of offering it again."

The course was part of an "innovative math course" at the southwest Colorado school.

"We just went out to observe," said Johnson, 34, who holds degrees from Western State College and Wyoming University. "There was actually no gambling. The purpose was not to make expert gamblers out of them, but to get them interested in mathematics."

The course received nationwide publicity and before the trip Johnson "received a couple of calls from Las Vegas" that indicated some people were worried about it.

"But we weren't planning to try to beat the system or anything like that. That wasn't the object. The object was to interest people in mathematics and to prove it plays an important part in their lives. We just were taking advantage of a national laboratory that exists."

Johnson said five women and three men took the course. Three became mathematicians, but none decided to turn to gambling for a living.

Two candles burning

Today is a Pisces Moon, and a Libra Sun. The Moon has just gone quincunx the Sun, a 150 degree angle; this means she has just entered the Sun's sixth house — a time when we begin to refine and sift our expression, and weed out non-essentials. The combination of Libra and Pisces today should help us bring a broader, more unconditional love to our relationships. Earlier this morning the Moon made a trine with Venus in Scorpio and soon thereafter a square to Neptune in Sagittarius. Venus rules Libra, and Neptune rules Pisces. This gives us strength today to share our earthly joys as we develop a new foundation of compassion. As we discover our own inner light we will find our ability to relate strengthened. Venus is in Scorpio now, so we may be tempted to use someone else as our own possession, but this will only bring us to disillusionment. So let's use the 6th house Virgo Sun Moon phase to weed out the pieces of ego that keep us from letting our light shine.

Can you separate the light of two candles burning next to each other? It is the same with our relationships. If we can shine forth, we'll know there's no sense in trying to possess or be exclusive with our or anyone's light, because it's all from the same source. But if we have to depend on someone else to light our way, we may be lost in the dark today.

We are moving towards a new awareness of self as related to others at the Full Moon on Friday — but what is an essential prerequisite to that is our relationship to our own inner Self. This is something entirely different from what we normally consider ourselves. We mistake our ego for the real thing all the time. But our ego is entirely made up of the opinions of others, standards of society; all reflections of the outer world. So the ego-based relationship is nothing but a confusing play of reflected images with no solid basis, direction, or purpose. Our ego searches for its ideal reflection much the same as "mirror, mirror, on the wall... who's the fairest of them all?" If the mirror says "you are", then we love it. If it doesn't, we smash it.

If we're afraid to be alone, we'll always be lonely, no matter how many friends we have. But the more we can face our selves with no compromises or excuses, the more we can face others honestly, with open eyes.

Tonight is rather uneventful astrologically, except that all evening, until one o'clock tomorrow morning, the moon moves towards a difficult but expressive sesqui-quadrate to Uranus-in Scorpio. Tonight we may be driven to over-indulgence by our compulsions, but by one o'clock we may be regretting it a bit if we're too drunk to stand up. Let's remember, we can't escape from our own Life no matter where we run, or how stoned we get. But if we face our fears, we'll discover we have the most precious Gift of all living within us, and that will bring more joy to us and to others than anything money can buy.

Sebeko, a representative to the United Nations.

Nominations were also opened for a Central Area student senator at large, who would be the area government's representative in the Student Senate. The position will entail attending senate meetings and reporting back to the Central Government. It is open to all Central Area residents, and elections will be held next Monday night.

McIntyre House is seeking two people to serve on a Central-Orchard Hill Art Council which will set up places for area artists and art colloquims to hold exhibitions. Perry asked representatives to inform their dormitories of these open positions.

A Figure Drawing colloquium was allocated $35 to help pay the salary of a model. The instructor, Peter Hopkins of Butterfield, said the course was an "essential" step for the developing artist, but difficult to obtain, due to the high salary demands of models. Fifteen places are being offered for the 1-credit colloq, which begins tonight. The sign-up sheet is located in room 230 in Butterfield dormitory.

A motion was also carried to give a $150 movie guarantee to the Butterfield Arts Group BAG). Speaking for the organization was Frances Schwartzberg, who said that BAG would be showing "Dr. Strangelove" in the Campus Center Auditorium on Tuesday, October 21st. The movie has been shown for the past two years and has done well, she said. There will be two shows with tickets sold at $.75 each.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, October 5 — Born today, you are one of those for whom only the permanent, the solid, the exact and the forceful hold great appeal. You are irritated to the point of genuine anger by circumstances that disallow the making of feasible plans; in the same way, you cannot bear anything that smacks of the weak, the wishy-washy, the timid or the vacillating. You believe in convention, in those conservative policies upon which, in your own case, the "good life" is built. Institutions of long-stauiding, antiques, beliefs long held by your fathers before you: these will ultimately become the mainstays of your life, supporting you in times of stress, providing you with a measure of healing when what many call progress wounds you in body and soul.

You take tremendous pleasure out of your own family, out of at-home projects that bring family members into close association with each other. Nothing pleases you more than an evening spent in the presence of loved ones -- and if you and those loved ones can be engaged in mutual effort toward mutual goals, so much the better. You will make every effort to create for yourself and for those within your own domestic circle the cozy, warm, inviting atmosphere of love.

You possess extremely strong emotions, along with an extremely strong tendency to display them. Never ashamed of tears, you allow them to flow freely when sadness or sympathy overwhelm you; likewise, you laugh with relish and ease, guffawing lustily or giggling quietly as the occasion demands.

Wednesday, October 6

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The comfort of close friends can mean more to you today than anything else. Financial gain means little.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Whatever is connected with a position you held in time past must not be allowed to haunt or hurt you now.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You cannot expect to possess the wisdom of the ages. You can, however, apply your intelligence to the problem at hand -- and win!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — There is an inner power that directs your actions today. Listen carefully to your conscience; it may be quite subtle today.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Don't tackle a large problem until you feel completely ready to do so. Otherwise, you may find yourself a failure by evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — People make the difference between a fine and a dull day. Turn your attention to a new friend who may unexpectedly be in trouble.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Take care not to rush into the signing of a contract. You may be tempted to give away more than you gain in the end. Don't!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Uncertainties may cause you more concern than you had bargained for. Personal projects may have to take a back seat to another's eandeavors.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Go about your business as usual this morning -- though you may have some difficulty doing so. Children add to joys at evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Avoid committing yourself to any new financial outlay. You will need to take advantage of your own savings within the month.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Resolve a health problem early in the day. Otherwise, you may have to postpone taking advantage of an opportunity for gain during the afternoon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Information that will influence others in your favor is available to you today -- if you can worm it out of a higher-up before noon.

WORK-STUDY POSITIONS

The Southwest Men's Center is looking for a few good men to work in office. Call 5-0263 for interviews.

WORKSTUDY POSITIONS AVAILABLE

We have openings for one and possibly two workstudy students for between 12-20 hours a week (depending on students' F.A. allotments) at Everywoman's Center. The positions would be with the Educational Alternatives workgroup which administers the Project Self workshop program.

Project Self is a series of weekend and 8-week long workshops designed by, for and about women and offered on a semester basis. The positions would involve planning for the coming Spring and Summer series, which would include sharing in responsibility for the following: soliciting and selecting workshop proposals, designing a brochure, publicity, registration, scheduling, ongoing facilitator contact and evaluation.

Qualifications include a commitment to developing educational alternatives for women, commitment to feminism and commitment to working collaboratively.

If interested, please call Marilyn or Linda at 545-0812 to arrange for an interview.

Ex-UMass hurler Flanagan reminisces about rookie year

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

It was not a storybook ending for number 46 of the Baltimore Orioles, watching Rick Burleson's seeing eye single mercifully end the 1976 baseball season. Another loss would be added to the final record book as Mike Flanagan, a 1973 UMass graduate, completed his first season in the "big leagues."

The southpaw, a native of Manchester, N.H., finished with statistics which are not overly impressive (3-5, 4.10 ERA, 85 innings pitched, in 20 appearances); however, they are misleading.

"In the beginning it was rough. I didn't know where I fit in with the team, and it was tough adjusting to the majors. Earl (Weaver) had me working long relief, probably the worst job in baseball, just sitting in the bullpen, never knowing when you're going to get some work. During one doubleheader early in the season I warmed up 17 times, and never got in the game."

With his appearances coming few and far between Flanagan became rusty and eventually ineffective. This prompted management to demote him to the minors early in July, in order for him to gain some game experience.

"At Rochester I was 6-1, it was just what I needed. I regained the confidence you need to pitch in the majors. I learned how to pitch down there, I throw the same stuff as in college, but now I know when and how to use it."

Upon returning to Baltimore in August, with the Yankees seemingly too far ahead, Flanagan was inserted in the starting rotation. The vote of confidence, and extra work boosted his spirits, and after returning to the parent club he sported a 3-1 record with an ERA around 2.00.

Also in August he ended his contract dispute with the Orioles, by signing a two year pact. "Jerry Kapstein, (where have I heard that name before?) was really great — he handled everything for me."

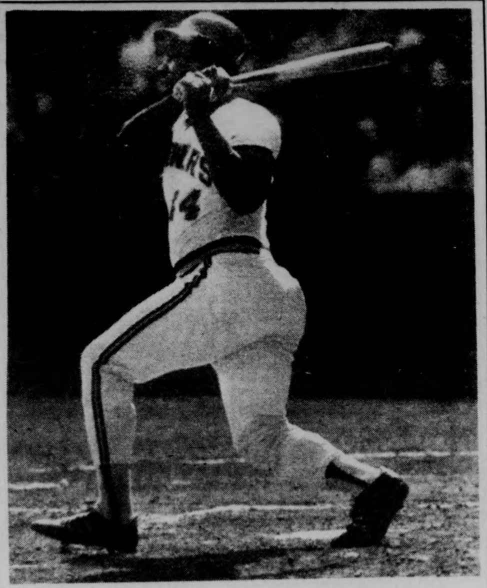
His best performance was a late season complete game 2-1 win over the New York Yankees, and Catfish Hunter. "We hadn't been eliminated yet, so the win really meant something to the team, it was a great thrill."

Since that time papers around the Baltimore area have been clamoring that Flanagan should have been inserted in the starting rotation from opening day. However manager Earl Weaver felt differently and struggled with the aging Mike Cuellar.

"The ball club owed Cuellar the starting job, he'd given them the best years of his career. It might have been different had Reggie (Jackson) not sat out the first month of the season, and had Lee May been healthy all season. We never could recoup and catch up with the Yankees.

"If I had it to do all over again I'd want it to be the same. It looks as if I've earned a spot in the starting rotation for next year, so I'm pleased. I'll do some hunting and fishing during the winter, and rest up for next year."

For Mike Flanagan the adjustment from college to pro ball has not been an overwhelming experience. "The major leagues is the top of the ladder, it's the place I always wanted to get to."



Hank Aaron singled in his last major league at bat on Sunday the 3,771 hit during his long and illustrious career.

McRae cools down

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — The disappointment of the American League batting race behind him, Kansas City Royals designated hitter Hal McRae said yesterday he was only thinking about the American League championship playoffs against the New York Yankees, which opens Saturday.

"The season has gone too well to make a big deal out of it," said McRae, who batted .332 and finished second by a point to teammate George Brett for the batting title. "It is best to put that (the batting title) out of your mind and start thinking about what still has to be done."

McRae and Brett were both upset with the way the race was decided. They felt Minnesota Twins' left fielder Steve Brye allowed Brett's catchable fly ball in the bottom of the ninth inning to fall in for a hit Sunday and give the Royals' third baseman the title.

On the play, Brye started to come in on the ball but then just stopped and watched the ball bounce over his head for an inside-the-park home run.

"As long as everyone knows how I lost it, I think the issue is over," said McRae. "I'm glad George won the title, but I just wish it could have been a clean hit that won it for him and I'm sure George feels the same way."

McRae, the only Kansas City player who has seen playoff action before, said he felt the Royals were holding the upper hand against New York because the series opened in Kansas City Saturday and Sunday.

"I think the Yankees are sort of afraid of the artificial turf," said McRae, who went home to Bradenton, Fla., Monday and Tuesday. "They don't have as good a club defensively as we do. Their only standout defensive player is Thurman Munson and that makes a difference on the tuf."

Royals manager Whitey Herzog said he was sure the batting race would make no difference on the way McRae, who came to the Royals from the Cincinnati Reds before the 1973 season, would play against New York.

"Knowing Hal McRae I'm sure he is going to come out smoking," said Herzog. "We've given everybody two days off and we will start working out on Wednesday."

Robinson signs as manager only

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Frank Robinson signed a one-year contract to manage the Cleveland Indians Monday and ended his legendary 21-year major league playing career by giving up his status as a playing manager.

The decision cost Robinson, the only man ever named most valuable player in both major leagues, not only the extra $120,000 salary he received as a playing manager the past two years — leaving him at $80,000 a year — but also left him short of a few career goals.

His 586 career home runs — fourth highest of all time — left him just 14 short of his goal of 600. He also has a 2,943 career hits, about half a season shy of his goal of 3,000.

But asked if he might "go active" during spring training, as he did this year, Robinson said sharply, "that's out. Last year it was my choice. This year it's strictly out."

In limited duty last season, Robinson hit .224 with three home runs and 10 RBI's, batting 67 times in 36 games.

Ruggers return home after splitting matches

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass rugby club split two tough outings in Boston this past weekend, bringing its record to a highly respectable 4-1-1. The ruggers annihilated the Engineers of MIT, 21-3, in Cambridge on Saturday. But Sunday was a different story altogether as the Sorcerer's Club from Medford crushed the Minutemen, 30-10.

Rainy and drizzly meterology hampered the ruggers from recording an even more lopsided margin, as the UMass forwards pummeled its intellectually aloof counterparts. Joe Peloquin raced 40 yards to open the scoring for the Minutemen.

Hugh Chester Jones, a front-line stalwart, enjoyed his most productive afternoon of the season, as he tallied three conversions, one penalty kick and one try for a grand total of 13 points.

Bob Hopley, for the third time in the fall campaign, stumbled upon the elusive pigskin for a score. after the Engineers had been brutally thrown backwards over their own goal line.

The UMass pack continually pressured their cerebral opposition, constantly threatening to break the game wide open. Twice the visitors capitalized on the decisive mismatch and converted for the points. MIT trailed 11-0 before it could muster a lone penalty kick shortly before intermission.

Ancient Hormel Stadium in Medford was the site on Sunday where the ruggers saw their five game unbeaten skein snapped rather abruptly, 30-10. The veteran Sorcerers exploded to an insurmountable lead of 18-0 early in the contest. UMass battled back to close to within eight points at The half as Peter Crane tallied.

Hugh Chester Jones successfully booted the conversion, but then the Medford based club side totally dominated the wide open contest in the second stanza. Frank Kenney played well, but to no avail, as the home team pretty much scored at will.

The UMass 'B' fifteen was decimated 24-8 by Black Sunday - a unit which only plays on Sundays and is highly touted in Hub rugby circles. The undermanned ruggers were never really in this one.

Minutemen nine rally, down Westfield, 7-5

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The key hit and the big play.

The UMass fall baseball team used those factors, plus a little bit more, to defeat Westfield State, 7-5, last Friday at Lorden Field.

UMass trailed, 5-3, entering the seventh, when things began to happen. Freshman pinch hitter Rick Flynn singled, and was doubled to third on a drive off the first baseman Gary Beard's glove by left fielder Mark Sullivan.

After shortstop Ed Skribiski and first baseman Bill Hendy struck out, designated hitter Dale Stone and catcher Kevin Crowley drew consecutive walks to force in a run. With the bases full, third baseman Art Weinslaw rapped a line single to center which was booted by Westfield's Mike Ciampa, allowing three runs to score.

Westfield State came right back though, in the next inning. After a leadoff double, Steve Perry lined a shot toward right that looked as if it were going to drive in a run. But UMass second baseman Mike Stockley lept high in the air, speared the line drive, and threw to shortstop Skribiski to catch the runner off base and complete a double play that killed the Owls rally.

The Minutemen scored their first run in the second on an RBI infield single by Stockley. After Westfield went ahead, 3-1, in the fourth, UMass tied it on another RBI double by Stockley and a throwing error. The Owls took their short-lived lead in the sixth due mainly to sloppy UMass defensive play and a couple of costly walks.

Four UMass pitchers saw action in the game. Starter Dave Tewhill was the most effective, allowing only two hits and one unearned run in his three innings of work. Dave Robidoux, Leo Kalinowski, and Dave Stoller each pitched two innings. Kalinowski got the win, his first of the year.

Weinslaw and Stockley had two hits apiece for the Minutemen, who upped their fall record to 4-1 with the win. UMass plays Springfield today at 3:00 at Lorden Field in its next game.

Havlicek rejoins Celtics' camp

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. (UPI) — The world champion Boston Celtics head for Wichita, Kan., Wednesday for their exhibition season opener with Kansas City and guess who'll be there — captain John Havlicek.

After an 11-days AWOL from the Celtics' training camp at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy overlooking Buzzards Bay, the 36-year-old veteran going into his 14th season with the Celtics finally showed up Sunday.

In hand. Havlicek had a one-year player's contract which owner Red Auerbach said was sufficient to keep his superstar in the fold.

"At the end of the year, we'll get together," Auerbach said. "If he feels he can play and we feel he can play, that's fine. There's no limit to this at all."

As for missing camp, Havlicek said, "in no way did I ever have any intention of going anywhere else. I didn't ever want to leave Boston. But we hadn't reached the monetary value I was seeking, and now we have."

Technically, Havlicek should be fined $3,000 for his absence. But he said, "I haven't received my paycheck yet, so I haven't seen any deductions."

Auerbach said he was still negotiating with the other standout AWOL Celtic, forward Paul Silas. "We are negotiating with Paul and have an appointment in the near future to go into it more thoroughly.

"But now it's as it was. His case is different than John's," Auerbach said of Silas who will miss the exhibition opener with the Kings.

Forzano resigns from Lion helm

PONTIAC, Mich. (UPI) — Underfire Rick Forzano resigned as coach of the Detroit Lions Monday night — two weeks and two losses after a win-or-else mandate from club owner William Clay Ford.

The club issued a terse, two-sentence announcement saying Forzano has "submitted his resignation and it has been accepted by Mr. Ford.

"He will be available to answer questions at a press conference Tuesday morning. A successor will be announced later Tuesday," the club said in its brief announcement following Detroit's 24-14 loss to previously winless Green Bay Sunday.

There was no word as to the fate of Lions' General Manager Russ Thomas, whom Ford said would also go when he revealed his disgust with both and with Detroit's offense following a 24-10 victory over Atlanta Sept. 26.

Detroit produced all 24 of its points in the final quarter of that win but lost, 10-9, on a botched extra point to the Minnesota Vikings and then to the Packers.

Speculation on a successor immediately centered on Forzano's assistants since it would be difficult to bring a new man with a new system in from outside.

Top candidates appeared to be well-traveled defensive coordinator Jim Carr, 43, special teams coordinator Jerry Glanville, 35, and defensive line coach Fritz Shurmur, 43.

Deterioration of the coaching situation intensified when dissension surfaced in training camp for the second straight year. The once-jovial Forzano became more tense and grim with each passing week.

Detroit's 1-3 record, coming on the heels of a 3-4 exhibition season in which the offense was largely impotent, prompted growing criticism of Forzano, head coach at Navy from 1959 through Roger Staubach's Heisman Trophy year of 1963.

Detroit went the first seven quarters of the season without a touchdown, even from its normally productive defense. Forzano pinpointed breakdowns in pass protections along the veteran offensive line as the source of the club's troubles but it failed to improve even after Ford's startling revelation.

Ford said after Detroit's only win he had given the coach and general manager a mandate to "win-or-else" the previous Monday!

We need not pity the Pats no more

Yes, it's true. It is really true. The New England Patriots, the heretofore hapless New England Patriots, the former dregs of the National Football League, the New England Patriots, mind you, are in first place.

Believe it. The team that finished last season at 3-11, that was ripped apart by any halfway decent quarterback, the team that hasn't had a winning season since about the time the Denver Broncos stopped wearing vertical-striped socks, has eaten up the heart of the American Football Conference.

You remember the Patriots. The Boston Patriots, coached by Mike Holovak. They charged onto the Fenway Park field led by Babe Parilli, Jim Nance, Jim Hunt, Larry Eisenhauer, Nick Buoniconti, Gino Cappeletti...

Or, of more recent vintage, into antiseptic Schaefer Stadium with Kent Nix, John Outlaw, Mike Taliaferro, Tom Beer, and Dennis Byrd leading the pack.

You can see that the quality tends to fall off quite a bit.

But even when the Patriots had talent, they couldn't win their division. New England-Boston has appeared in only one playoff game in its history, which turned out to be a pure annihilation by the San Diego Chargers for the 1963 AFL championship.

So even when the mere mention of the term "post-season play" crops up in these parts, it is done so with hushed, reverent tones. It is also all so much foreign language to Patriots fans, and makes about as much impression on them as Sanskrit. After all, the playoffs only come to the Miami Dolphins, Pittsburgh Steelers, and Oakland Raiders of the football world.

But during the past three weeks, the Patriots showed that they could not only play football with those people, but that they could beat them too. And, in Oakland's case, crush, stomp, pulverize, whip, make mincemeat out of, and do all of those other nasty things to the Raiders that had been done to New England these many frustrating years.

Oh yes, it is a different Patriots team that is trotting onto the field this season. It is a team that will not give up as soon as the opening kickoff is returned. It will not fold after the first five games of the season. It just won't quit.

As Cappeletti, now a color broadcaster for WBZ-radio, put it Sunday in the midst of the rout, "I can't believe this team. It's as if they can't wait to run another play.

It would not be foolhardy to compare the Patriots to a fired-up collegiate team, such as a Penn State, a Michigan, a Texas, an Ohio State. Or an Oklahoma.

Chuck Fairbanks, the former wizard coach for the Sooners, is now plying his trade with New England. In his tenure, he has installed some rather collegiate plays and sets, such as the 3-4-4 defense, the quarterback option, the quarterback keeper, and the like.

But until this year, Fairbanks really couldn't get his act together in the pros. Call it lack of talent, lack of polish, whatever, but it just wouldn't work. But now, ah, it's getting to be a little different.

Wise draft picks, intelligent trades, and improved coaching and morale is beginning to pay off. And, carrying the Oklahoma analogy a little further, Fairbanks is starting to see some very interesting personnel comparisons between the Patriots of 1976 and his "Boomer Sooners" of the late 1960's and early '70's:

The tough-running, accurate-throwing quarterback (Steve Grogan vs. Jack Mildren), the big fullback (Sam Cunningham vs. Steve Owens), the wide receivers (Daryl Stingley and Randy Vataha vs. Albert Chandler and Tinker Owens), the big, quick defensive linemen (Julius Adams and Ray Hamilton vs. Lucious Selmon and Ray Hamilton!), and finally, to glue the whole thing together, the monsters up front in the offensive line (Leon Gray and John Hannah vs. Tom Brahaney and Dean Unruh).

Fairbanks has instilled a collegiate spirit and flavor into his men, and the results have been phenomenal. Even if the Patriots don't make the playoffs this season, at least they can say that they beat the best three weeks in a row.

And that is more than most can claim.

Spikers set sights on Smith, seek strong second showing

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team travels to Northampton today to face Smith in a best-of-three game match at 7:00.

Last year the team split with Smith, winning 13-11, 15-13, and later losing 12-15, 6-15. This year the Smith team is an unknown entity. According to UMass coach Dianne Thompson, Smith should prove to be fairly strong, however.

"I haven't seen Smith play this year yet," says Thompson. "In a match against Mt. Holyoke this season, Smith won. With Mt. Holyoke being a solid team, Smith will give us some of the best competition in the area."

Starters for tonight's game will be Pat "Busy" Bradley, Heidi Dickson, Jayne Greenberg, Dianne Bunker, Deb Kuzdeba, and Shelly Soules. Coach Thompson anticipates subbing Lynn Decosmo in place of Dickson, and Joan Wotkowicz in place of Kuzdeba. Co-capt. Sue Sabia has an injured shoulder and won't see any action this game.

Substitutions are allowed three times per person. This means that each time a player plays, it's counted as one time in the game. Three are allowed. According to Thompson, her strategy for subbing lies in specializing each player to one position, at least for a start.

"By first specializing in a position, we can become more efficient players," explains Thompson. "By subbing Lynn and Joan in the back court, they can concentrate on the set. These two don't really have the height it takes to play the front right now, and Deb and Heidi have proved to be the strongest spikers. Not only will this help the team strengthen its front and back courts, but hopefully, more players will get out on the court. From here we can go farther to learn more skills."

With a roster of eight varsity players, and injured Sabia, time on the floor is maximum. Endurance-wise, the team hasn't really hurt. According to Thompson, UMass did slow down towards the end of the Bridgewater-Barrington games, though.

"The team shouldn't get too tired with all the running we've been doing. They will have to do more conditioning on their own, though, to keep in shape. We need all our practice time to work on skills — it'd be a shame to lose a half hour of practice," Thompson explains.

In Invitational tournaments such as Rhode Island and Maine, where the women will be playing five to six hours of volleyball, conditioning will prove to be all-important.

The JVs will start the Smith matches tonight at 7:00, (with the varsity following). JV coach Linda Wetherby commented on the match:

"We didn't win our match against Bridgewater or Barrington, but we were by no means out of the games. I was really pleased at the way we played, and tonight, we should do as well."

As with the varsity team, Wetherby will substitute players who will specialize in their positions. Coach Thompson also hopes to eventually bring up at least one JV in a varsity position.

The first home game for the women will be this Saturday at 1:00 p.m.

Under-manned booters to clash with Harvard

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Injuries to two key starters is forcing soccer coach Russ Kidd to change his team's style of play when the booters play Harvard this afternoon in Cambridge.

The Minutemen will shift to a 4-3-3 type offense to try and get more mid-field play.

Ed Niemiec and Dave Tagliavini were injured in last Wednesday's victory over Keene State. Both players were victims of cheap shots by Keene State players, as was Joel Mascolo, who was also kicked by an opponent from the New Hampshire school.

Mascolo was the only one of the trio to return to action. Niemiec will definitely miss today's game, while Tagliavini "may or may not play," according to Kidd.

The booters are coming off a 6-0 loss to Vermont on Saturday, which dropped their record to 1-3.

"We're not discouraged," said Kidd. "We are going to work like hell to try and get even on the year."

That won't be an easy task as Kidd said "there are no soft spots on our schedule."

Kidd tried unsuccessfully to juggle his personnel Saturday, but it didn't work so he is making the change, going with the 4-3-3 at least until Niemiec is healthy.

The Minutemen had only one day to practice the new style.

"Under the circumstances, the kids are doing well and working hard," said Kidd.

Harvard, coached by George Ford, has an outstanding player from last year returning in Lyman Bullard.

"They appear to be improved over last year," Kidd said.

Last year the Crimson and Minutemen battled to a 1-1 overtime tie in a game played in Amherst.

"Team attitude is good," added Kidd. "We know where our weaknesses are and are doing our best to try and overcome them."

Mark Hanks will be back in goal for UMass. Mark Hodgdon was in the nets against Vermont.

"Although we lack a dominating scorer, we are still capable of putting together a balanced attack," Kidd said.

Field hockey versus Lyons

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's field hockey team meets Mt. Holyoke today in a 4:45 game at South Hadley.

UMass defeated Mt. Holyoke last season in both a pre-season scrimmage (1-0), and a later, official game (3-1). According to UMass coach Judith Davidson, UMass will be "up" for the game despite last year's indications, because "we can't go in taking any team lightly.

"That was our biggest problem in last Friday's game against Central Conn," explains Davidson. "We'd beaten them easily on College Sportsday, so we went into the game thinking it was going to be easy. Because we went in there with that attitude, it made winning the game that much harder."

The loss of right link and co-captain Judy Kennedy to a back injury could hinder UMass' game. As one of the team's most consistent players, her leadership will be missed. "Judy tends to be a balancing force on the team," says Coach Davidson. "She's a steady player, she rarely misses passes, she's aggressive, and she has good speed for short spurts, as well as for the longer distances."

Other than missing Kennedy, the UMass line-up will vary little from last Friday's. At left wing, Sue Kibling, left inner, Cindy Hartstone, right inner, Cheryl Meliones, right wing Ginger Bulman, left link, Lynsie Wickman, right link, Sue Kreider, left half, Jody Wickman, center half, Karen Zimmerman, right back, Kelly Salls, stopper, Gayle Hutchinson, and goalie, Kathy Gipps.

Two obstacles coach Davidson cited have been communication and tenseness. "We need to communicate on the field more," says Davidson. "We end up with two people on the ball or both backing off. Other than that, we've got all the ingredients we need to be a good team. We just have to relax and play," finished Davidson.

The varsity game will be preceeded by a JV game at 3:30.

This women's field hockey player will be hoping to display her textbook form verses Mt. Holyoke this afternoon at 4:45. (Staff photo by Stuart Eyman)

S. African spokesman hits western capitalist rule

By KATHE SANDLER
Collegian Staff

"It is the twilight time for apartheid facism..." said David Sebeko, a leading spokesman for the South African liberation struggle, in a speech last night at Hasbrouk lab.

Sebeko, the director of External Affairs for the Pan-African Congress of Anzania and permanent Observer-Representative to the United Nations, presented an analysis of the international aspects of the Southern African situation, the activities of the American state department, as well as the racist Vorster regime.

Sebeko described the national uprisings following the massacre of marching school children last spring, stating that, "Our people have demonstrated that they have an indominable spirit of resistance, that they are not lacking in courage and that they are ready to pick up arms in resistance to colonial domination."

He spoke in praise of the "Coloreds", African people of mixed blood, acting in unified resistance with the Black South Africans in downtown Capetown before the Johannesburg massacre of school children occurred, and of the extreme involvement of the young in the subsequent national strikes and demonstrations.

In speaking in this first of a series of events planned by the Five College Committee on Southern African Liberation, Sebeko drew strong parallelisms between the media's portrayal of Black unrest in the United States and its handling of African rebellion.

Stating that the media reports as if there was no political motivation "other than an incentive that visits Black people during long, hot summers."

He drew similar parallelisms between Western manipulation of the South Vietnamese in the Indo-China war, and Western attempts to use the same tactics with the elitist class in South Africa.

Sebeko spoke of South Africa as an example "of men dominating men," and looked to the past saying, "after three hundred years of colonial rule, sixty years of organized political protest... we then say thus and no more."

"The West is eager to maintain apartheid as a form of slavery because it facilitates the highest returns; apartheid is supported by foreign monopoly capital," he said. An independent African government is a threat to the West because it would deny it free access to South Africa, added Sebeko.

To an enthusiastic audience, he delivered the following words, "It is appropriate that Amherst should be the one place to launch a campaign in the United States of America to supplement the heroic uprising of our people," referring to local support for the South African situation. He said there is meaningful, concrete political support here.

Sebeko's speech will be aired tonight on WMUA (91.1 FM).

Health Services probe reaches records storage

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

The investigation of the University Health Services has been expanded to include the manner in which some patients' records are being stored, said State Police Trooper Thomas O'Connor of the Hampshire-Franklin County district attorney's office.

O'Connor and the UMass Police are presently investigating the health services for possible corrupt financial practices.

O'Connor said yesterday that he was contacted by the student-financed Legal Services Office and given information the office received from a confidential source concerning the storage of records and other patient information in an attic in Marshall Hall, across from the Public Health building.

The source had also contacted the Collegian last week and expressed concern about blood and other test results, x-rays and complete patient files being kept in the unlocked attic of the building.

Camille J. Stark, head of the Medical Records Department of the health services, acknowledged that records are kept in Marshall Hall and expressed the opinion that it was acceptable. She said she

Veterans discuss semester activities

By ROB THAYER
Collegian Staff

Members of the UMass Veterans community met last night in the Campus Center to update summer developments relating to the Veterans Affairs Office (VAO) and to discuss what is in store for veterans this semester.

Leo Riley, a member of the Veterans Coalition for Community Affairs (VCCA), opened the meeting with a brief rundown of last spring's controversy which led to the formation of a Veteran's Advisory Committee (VAC).

In May, administrators abandoned plans to merge the Veteran's Affairs office with Financial Aid after strong protests from veterans. Subsequently, a committee of six veteran representatives was formed to "watchdog" the VAO and to serve as a liason between veterans and administrators.

A new director and assistant director for Veteran's Affairs were introduced to the gathering last night. Art Hilson, the new director, began with the news that a bill now on President Ford's desk, expected to be approved, provides for an across-the-board increase of eight per cent in educational benefits for veterans.

Hilson then outlined some programs which he plans to implement in the Veterans Affairs Office this semester, including a job-bank for unemployed veterans and a group counseling program for veterans and their wives.

Lynn Edmunds was introduced as the new assistant director.

The program then moved to a discussion of some of the problems now facing the veteran at UMass. Director Hilson told the veterans that he would try and make arrangements for some kind of work-release program for imprisoned veterans with local authorities.

According to Hilson, his office has been instructed to work immediately towards reducing the number of "liabilities" or veterans who are receiving more than their share of benefits. Hilson said that each veteran's file will be checked for discrepancies which could be causing overpayments.

The final item on the agenda concerned the nomination and election of new members of the Veteran's Affairs Advisory Committee (VAAC). It was agreed, however, that last night's turnout was too small to merit an election.

The low turnout of 12 was apparently due to the fact that the veterans newsletter, which was mailed from the Whitmore office last Thursday, was delayed and did not reach the veterans in time for the meeting. Another meeting has been scheduled for Thursday, Oct. 28.

According to VCCA representative Riley, "For those of us that did attend, this meeting was very productive. If the second meeting, with the larger group of people, is equally rewarding, I'll be very happy."

Commuters OK Saxe funding

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

A plea by a member of the Women's Political Support Group for $90 in order to finance a community dinner to raise money for Susan Saxe's defense, was approved yesterday afternoon by the Commuter Collective, the commuter area government.

The collective, according to their spokespersons, works to support the struggles of students and community groups for self-determination. With money allocated from the Student Activity Tax Fund, the council supports programs for tenants' rights, rent control and tenant unions, as well as child care and the unionization of University students and workers.

The Women's Political Support Grou aids women prisoners in their bid for a trial, and tries to gather money with which to present a solid case, according to a spokesperson.

The $90 request includes $5 for 300 posters, $25 for a speaker and $20 for food. The dinner will be a potluck, with the speaker a supporter of Saxe's defense bid.

Collective co-spokesperson Maurice Chabuz gave a financial report for the group, explaining that out of the original $65,000 they were allotted, there was $43,800 left, about $35,000 of which has been committed to various groups.

The collective hopes to raise additional funds showing series of movies, every Tuesday and Thursday night in Herter Hall.

A motion to give the Student Video Tape Committee $100 in order to show half-hour documentaries of the Seabrook nuclear power site takeover, was tabled because of lack of information.

The council also voted to release a statement against the proposal Northwest Rd., which the Undergraduate Student Senate is expected to vote against tomorrow.

The collective, said Chabuz, has two proposed alternatives to the road, first "to improve North Pleasant St. and make bike paths for it," and also "to utilize existing routes not directly leading to the University."

The Northwest Rd. is a North Pleasant St. - East Pleasant St. connector, and the Northeast bypass is an overall plan to reroute traffic away from North Pleasant St.

A regular meeting time and place was decided upon for the collective which will meet in Rm. 404 of the Student Union building at 5:30 p.m., Tuesdays.

S.W. purchase orders missing

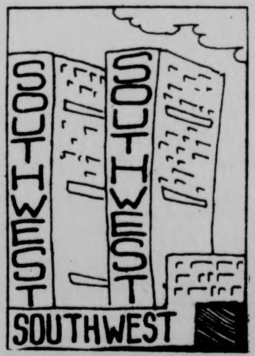
By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Collegian Staff

The disappearance of a purchase order pad and a deficit about $700 less than was originally expected, were announced last night at the Southwest Assembly meeting in Hampden dining commons.

Treasurer Mark Gardner said that the Recognized Student Organization director Bud Demers has begun to trace down the 15 or so missing purchase orders believed to be stolen. So far, Gardner said, two checks totalling $44 and made out to Stop and Shop and The Sun record store, have already been cashed.

The purchase orders have a maximum value of $25 each.

In other business last night Cance representatives Martha Awiszus and Sherri Goldberg requested help in starting that dorm's racism and sexism programs, without which, Cance would become ineligible for assembly funding.



President Chris Durkin said he would check into the possibility of the Southwest Women's Center, Men's Center, and the Center for Racial Understanding running workshops and classes in Cance.

Fifteen assembly seats, including all eight Third World seats, remain to be filled, it was announced.

Three bills involving assembly allocations were tabled for the Finance committee's consideration next week. They were a proposed $3000 for a Southwest community-based newspaper, $500 for John Quincy Adams Tower resource center, and $200 to the Southwest Center for the Performing Arts for its production of "Lenny".

Maine Indians claim land

BANGOR, Maine [AP] — A lawyer for two Indian tribes placed the value of Indian land claims in Maine at $25 billion yesterday and said he is still prepared to negotiate an out-of-court settlement, sources said.

Maine Atty. Gen. Joseph E. Brennan later told reporters that the state does not believe there is any merit to claims by the Passamaquoddy and Penobscot Indians to 12 million acres of land in Maine and that he would not negotiate those claims.

Thomas Tureen, representing the Indians, told U.S. District Court Judge Edward T. Gignoux, and other lawyers involved in the land dispute, that if there is an out-of-court settlement, the Indians "as a matter of grace would not seek to dispossess any landowner," according to sources who attended the closed meeting in Gignoux' chambers.

When the figure of billions of dollars was mentioned, sources said Gignoux asked, "is bias in bacon for billion?"

Tureen later told reporters that there are vast areas of land owned by the state and private corporations that the Indians might seek return of if an out-of-court settlement is discussed.

He said those areas have not been developed and are virtually in the same condition as when they were tribal lands in the 18th century.

Commuter voters show unconcern

By MARY BETH ALLEN
Collegian Staff

Sixty-two commuters, out of the 7,000 students eligible to vote, yesterday elected 13 new members to the Commuter Collective, the group's area government.

The collective represents off-campus students living in Amherst, Belchertown, Sunderland, North Amherst, South Deerfield, and various other communities.

Maurice L. Chabuz, a Commuter Collective co-spokesperson, said "Low voter turnout is just a reflection of 'why vote for anything?'" He said more people voted in last spring's election because student government elections were held at the same time.

Chabuz said the collective has a looser organization than the dormitory governments.

"We try to do away with a lot of the structures that inhibit involvement," said Chabuz. "As long as someone is a commuter, they can get involved in off-campus student projects."

"We get money allocated to us just like the other governments," continued Chabuz. "Some of the services we help sponsor are the Outreach bus service (to the nearby communities) and late night bus service."

Chabuz and Wendy Palmer, co-spokespersons, were elected to their offices last spring, and they will carry over their duties to semester.

Those on the ballot, elected yesterday, were Patricia Baker, Sandy Cunningham, Lap Fu Fung, Robert Gardner, Sam Hassan, Gail Jarvi, Jim Jordan, Stephen Tenhits Latter, and Alice Ng. Jordan was the high vote-getter, receiving 57 votes.

Four write-in candidates were elected: Larry Zellner, Mike Press, John Richmond and Joe Mahoney.

OHAG to finance various programs

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) approved six program budgets last night, totaling $2750, $915 over the Finance committee's proposed budget for the organizations.

Programs approved were Orchard Hill's Women Center, Academic Affairs, an art studio, a ceramics room, a dark room and the Sage, a student -run newspaper.

The Women's Center received $1200, a $400 increase from the Finance committee's proposal of $800. The center, which has not coordinators at present, is dedicated to funding films, courses and other educational events to "fight sexism."

Academic Affairs, a student-run office that sponsors CASIAC counseling, received $500, a $400 increase over the $100 which was proposed.

One Academic Affairs representative's sentiments were "What can we do with $100?"

Administrative sponsoring was suggested as a possible alternative for funding.

"Then they have their hands over our heads and we have our hands tied behind our backs," said a representative.

ORCHARD HILL

The Art Studio, which is to be set up in Field, was allotted $350. This figure is considerably lower than their original proposal of $1280.

Non-violent civil disobedience? Radioactive wastes? Energy alternatives?

The hazards, profits and politics behind the increasing use of nuclear energy in this country will be evaluated during a teach-in today sponsored by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG).

Discussing "Nuclear Power and the Citizen Movement," consumer-advocate Ralph Nader will highlight the day's events. His speech will begin at 3 p.m. in the Campus Center auditorium.

Other featured speakers will include:

— Sarah Nelson, of the National Organization for Women, on the Karen Silkwood case. (4:30 p.m. — C.C.A.)

— William Heronemus, UMass Prof. of Civil Engineering, on alternative energy. (7:30 p.m.-C.C.A.)

— Samuel Lovejoy, no-nuke activist, on updating of Seabrook and Montague citizen action. (8:30 p.m.-C.C.A.)

Several workshops are being conducted from 10 a.m.-3 p.m. in C.C. 162-177 on nuclear accidents, thermal pollution, fuel wastes, changing the utility rate structure to conserve energy, civil disobedience and much more.

A series of anti-nuke films will run from 10 a.m.-2:30 in C.C. 174-176.

Pros and cons of bottle bill debated

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

A representative of the metal division of Continental Can and the regional director of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) argued yesterday the pros and cons of the state's bottle bill referendum in a debate held in Cance Dorm lounge in Southwest.

Thomas V. Carley of Continental Can spoke in opposition, while John Souweine argued in favor of the bill. The debate was moderated by Richard Ulin of WFCR, the five-college radio station.

The bottle bill, if passed, would require that every beverage container sold or offered for sale in the Commonwealth have a refund value of at least five cents and would prohibit the sale of metal beverage cans with flip tops. This does not apply to containers for dairy products or natural fruit beverages or containers that are biodegradable. If enacted, the law would start Feb. 1977.

Souweine denied statements made on anti-bottle bill advertisements, that the bill would cost the individual tax payer $100 and distort the market in which soda or beer is sold.

According to Souweine the bill modelled after Oregon and Vermont bills, although adding five cents to cover the cost of the bottle, would be the least expensive way to buy beverages.

"We've seen it work in Oregon and Vermont. The roadside litter was reduced significantly by volume as bottles and cans form 50 to 75 per cent of that litter. People in Massachusetts have been trying to rid the state of this litter for years," he said.

Carley argued that the issue isn't about reducing litter.

"When you look at the bottle bill as opposed to other alternatives, the benefits are minimal. Secondly, what should survive on the retail shelves should be decided by the billions of consumers every day," he said.

Litter is "a bend down and pick it up problem" and should be counted by item, not by volume, he said.

Souweine emphasized that the bill's main opposition comes from out-of-state corporations who have spent a million dollars to convince you against everything I say, and buying full-page ads in newspapers."

"What they don't spend their money on telling you is about a report from the First National Bank of Boston that states the bottle bill will create jobs," he said.

The state, Souweine said, pays $5 million annually to pick up litter, and the citizens of Massachusetts have to live with and look at this litter.

Carley responded to the $5 million charge, saying that he did not think that figure was right, and in Oregon there was an increase in the cost of picking up litter.

"Great claims, he said, have been made in the reduction of solid waste. If you eliminate every beverage package, you've only

Teach-in audience learns

Nuclear industry hurting

By LISA MELILLI
And ANN MARIE REIS
Collegian Staff

The nuclear power industry is on the verge of collapse, according to Diana P. Sidebottom of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution (NECNP).

"All that's needed is a nudge to push the entire industry over the edge," Sidebottan told an audience of 100 last night during the opening session of a two-day nuclear power teach-in sponsored by MassPIRG.

Ten years ago, according to Daniel Ford, director of the Union of Concerned Scientists who also spoke last night, the National Energy Commission anticipated at least 1,000 nuclear power plants to be constructed throughout the country by the year 2000.

At the present date, there are 60 operating nuclear plants in the country and 60 plants under construction. Two years ago the construction of 14 plants was cancelled and 70 were postponed, said Ford.

The teach-in organized by Diane Woolf of MassPIRG, is aimed at educating students and faculty on the nuclear power issue. Ford gave an overview of the nuclear power situation; Sidebottom gave a report on citizen involvement in nukes, ways of response to the nuclear issue and New England activities; Guy Chichester of the national environment organization, Clamshell Alliance, presented a view of Seabrook, New Hampshire citizens' own battle over a nuclear plant established in their town.

Sidebottom emphasized the importance of community involvement in halting nuclear power plant construction.

In his presentation, Ford pointed to the disarming elements in nuclear power plants. First, Ford pointed to economics.

According to Ford, presently $1.6 billion is the average cost incurred in building a nuclear power plant "and this will increase seven-fold in the next 10 years."

Secondly, Ford talked on the politics of nuclear powew plants. Ford said that the Atomic Energy Commission which set up commercial use of atomic energy, acted both as public examiner and public relations agency.

"The commission was responsible for testing out the theory of nuclear commercial energy and in selling it nationally," said Ford.

Ford said that in 1964 the Atomic Energy Commission investigated four nuclear power plants located 30 miles from large metropolitan areas, and withheld public access to the report until 1973 when the public information law required its release.

According to Ford, the study showed the situation was not as optimistic as the commission had hoped. The commission found that if the plant functioned properly, knowledge was not available as to what should be done with waste. If the plant worked properly, radioactive energy would seep into the air, the efforts of which would last for 700 years, he said.

Such is the case of radioactive energy found hovering over Pennsylvania, New Jersey and in some western states in the past week, Ford added.

Dealing with politics, Ford also pointed to the fact that 90 per cent of nuclear energy is owned by oil companies. These companies obviously exert a monopoly over creating energy.

Sharon Tracy of MassPIRG informed the Collegian last night that by 1984 all nuclear energy in the country will be used up. "The problem was solved by creating 'breeder reactors'' which doubles the amount of nuclear energy. Nuclear wastes are transformed into 'plutonium', a highly toxic substance which lasts for 250,000 years before breaking out, Tracy said.

McColgan challenges Conte

By PAUL BRADLEY
Collegian Staff

HOLYOKE — First District Democratic Congressional nominee Edward A. McColgan yesterday got his campaign underway with a debate challenge to incumbent Republican Silvio O. Conte.

At a press conference at the Holiday Inn, Edward A. O'Brien, who was defeated by McColgan by a scant 11 votes in the Sept. 14 primary, pledged his support to McColgan's campaign and promised to campaign for him. O'Brien, who was first declared the winner of the election by 52 votes, and then lost the recount, said "It is more important to elect a Democrat" than to take the recount to court.

McColgan revealed that he sent Conte a telegram Sunday challenging the incumbent to a series of four debates "in each of the four counties of the district under the auspices of the League of Women Voters or some other responsible public organization." McColgan expressed the hope that the debates could be televised, although he has made only one contact with a television station.

Conte has not yet responded to the telegram, he said. A Collegian attempt to reach Cong. Conte failed.

In the initial campaign salvos, McColgan challenged Conte "to do just as O'Brien and I did during the primary and make a full disclosure of all finances and stocks held. In this era of political mistrust, it is up to the incumbent to do this."

"Mr. Conte should follow the lead of his President, and have full disclosure," said McColgan. "If he has nothing to hide, it would seem that he would be open and honest."

Conte has already promised to do so.

In explaining the reasons for his debate challenge, McColgan said, "The only way for the voters to know the difference between the incumbent and myself is to go over the issues in an open forum and debate."

Speaking before a dozen reporters, McColgan said that O'Brien would be "representing me throughout the district and working to bring his people into the campaign."

Answering a query about his decision not to challenge the recount. O'Brien said, "We both campaigned to replace the Republican, and the only way to do that is to not go to court. My workers believed in the goal of replacing Silvio Conte. We will be joining forces wherever possible."

Both McColgan and O'Brien vigorously attacked Conte during the campaign, and McColgan promised that he would continue in the next month before the Nov. 2 election.

"The issue in this campaign is his record," he said. "There is a difference between what he says in Washington and what he says in Pittsfield. Conte has found it beneficial to waffle on the issues, because he is part of the Washington establishment, and it costs the people of this district."

McColgan said that he believed voters would hold Conte responsible for his ties to the Nixon and Ford administrations. "I think it will be an issue. He (Conte) has to bear the burden of that association," he added.

McColgan said that the recount and delay in the final outcome of the primary election "slowed endorsements and slowed contributions." He said he is visiting with the Democratic National Committee this week in an effort to raise more funds for his congressional effort.

Senate candidate Robertson a no-show

Michael Robertson, the Republican candidate for Edward M. Kennedy's U.S. Senate seat, missed a scheduled appearance in Northampton last night when his car broke down in Westfield.

Robertson disappointed a crowd of about 20 people who had gathered to hear him speak, including Walter B. Mitchell, a chemistry professor at UMass who is opposing John D. Olver of Amherst for the state senate.

Robertson contacted area coordinator Joel Dunn at about 7:30 p.m. and informed him that he would not be able to make his Northampton engagement. Dunn said that Robertson would make a campaign stop at UMass before the Nov. 2 election.

Landlord surprises Windjammer tenants

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

Apartment tenants at the Windjammer have been given a double setback by the new landlord.

Soon after foreclosure Friday, rents on the efficiency apartments at the Rt. 9 motel were increased and tenants were required to pay a new security deposit without the return of their former deposits. One month's rent was required.

According to Langdon Hadley, assistant vice-president at the Amherst Savings Bank, the motel mortgage foreclosed because of "non-payment of debt in excess of $400,000" by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Anderson, the former owners.

Tenants were told that they could work around the motel to make up for the new security deposits.

Dick Harty, to whom the motel is currently leased and to whom the bank intends to sell the motel, was unavailable for comment.

The rents will increase from $185 to $200 and from $160 to $175.

Tenants, many of them students at UMass, claim they were not notified of the change ahead of time.

"We never did get an official notice, we heard it on hearsay. Nobody ever came up and said 'your manager is gone and the bank is running it'," said Tom Poirier, an ex-resident at the Windjammer.

"Nobody got very much notice," said Nancy Brockway, a lawyer from the student-financed Legal Services office.

"As short a time as two weeks ago, tenants were putting down deposits with the Andersons. They were given no reason to suspect the Andersons' financial position was so shaky that a foreclosure and bankruptcy were around the corner. That kind of financial instability doesn't happen overnight," Brockway added.

Andrea Seelig, a grad student residing at the Windjammer attempted to form a tenants union, she said, but it fell apart.

"We're all grad students and we just don't have the time to do it," Seelig said.

"I still don't think it's too late to form a union. There are still issues that can be negotiated," said Brockway.

"I am going to be making a request on the Andersons through their attorney to return the security deposit on behalf of the tenants," said Brockway.

"It's probable the Andersons are going bankrupt, in which case I'll be asking the Bankruptcy court to have the security deposits turned over to tenants," she added.

"One thing that can be accomplished by a tenant's union, is an agreement can be made with landlords that security deposits be put in escrow accounts," Brockway said.

"Tenants on their own can contact legislators to press for better safeguards," Brockway said.

The Top of the Campus, Inc. (TOC) will have a full membership meeting today to conduct elections of its Board of Directors, at 3:30 p.m. in the Campus Center.

The 12-member TOC Board of Directors oversee the function of bars in the Campus Center, hold the liquor license for these bars, and are able to control the prices of alcohol.

According to Paul Hamel, the present treasurer and manager of the board, 27 candidates are running for board slots. Of this number, 14 are students, and Hamel says he believes the remainder to be faculty or staff of the University.

Faculty, students, staff, and alumnus of the University become members of TOC., Inc. when they purchase a TOC sticker for their identification cards. The sticker also allows the holder entrance into the Hatch, Blue Wall,and Top of the Campus bars.

Any member may run for candidacy to the board.

The Campus Center is not able to hold a liquor license, so the board serves as the license holder.

According to Sidney Myers, a University attorney and writer of the Campus Center constitution, the board serves as a "over the table" group which deals with the University.

Myers said the group could be disbanded by the UMass Board of Trustees at any time.

Officers of the board will also be elected at today's meeting.

The board will appoint the manager of the TOC, Inc., who is directly responsible for holding the liquor license granted by the Amherst Selectmen. In the past, the manager has been an employe of the Campus Center.

William F. Field, acting director of the Campus Center and Dean of Students, said the board is able to accept or disapprove price increase recommendations by the Saga Food Services, the body which buys all the liquor for the three bars, in addition to all the food sold there and in the Coffee Shop.

If money is needed in the Campus Center budget, Field said, and it cannot be obtained through a price increase of alcoholic beverages served, prices in some other unit within the Campus Center may increase, or the Campus Center fee paid by students each semester may be escalated.

"When it comes to the Campus Center fee being increased, or a consumer good costing more, the student would benefit if the price of the good was increased," Field said. He said more people than students buy consumer products from the Campus Center, but only students pay the Campus Center fee.

$300, and the Dark Room was allotted $200.

There was discussion on whether or not to eliminate the Sage, which was alloted $200, due to the fact that there is no editor and no newspaper at the present time.

OHAG officials say they hope to find some additional money from McIntyre House and the selling of some unused radio equipment.

In addition to money matters, OHAG President Debbie Love announced that a group of Black and white students might meet to discuss "cultural differences" that have been evident at previous OHAG meetings. O.C. Bobby Daniels, a representative from the chancollor's office, expressed interest in setting up this group.

Tashi String Band surprises crowd

By SAM JUDSON
Collegian Staff

Playing from a program slightly different from what the audience expected, the Tashi Quartet appeared last night in the Fine Arts Center concert hall.

The instrumentalists performed works from Claude Debussy, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, and Charles Wuorinen.

At the intermission, cellist Fred Sherry told the audience that the group arrived with the intention of playing a Debussy Rhapsody rather than a Debussy cello concerto as printed in the program, and a different Mozart Trio.

The performance opened with the Debussy Rhapsody with Richard Soltzman playing clarinet, and Peter Serkin at the piano. The piece was followed by a Mozart Trio K. 542, for piano, violin, and cello; not Trio K, 498, for piano, clarinet, and viola, as stated in the program.

For the Mozart piece, Ida Kavafian played violin.

Following intermission the quartet played a work composed specifically for the group by Wuorinen in 1975 called "Tashi".

Composed in three movements 35 minutes long, containing two interludes, the music is chaotic and requires the instrumentalists to reach high registered notes.

"The group is young, informal, lively, and plays mostly contemporary music," according to Leonard Taraspolski, of the UMass Music department.

Taraspolski also said that chamber music such as they play is most appropriate for a small room or hall.

"Chamber music is intimate and introverted," Taraspolski said. He also said that although the concert hall is large, and the atmosphere isn't quite right, the acoustics are good.

"Tashi," is Tibetan for good fortune. The group debuted in New York in 1973, and was at one time just a music-making foursome that met informally on a regular schedule.

Taraspolski said Serkin is the leader of the group. Serkin made his first public appearance at 12 at the Marlboro Music Festival of which his father Rudolf Serkin is now musical director.

Serkin has played piano for The Cleveland and Philadelphia orchestras, the Chicago, Toronto, Boston and San Francisco symphonies, and with several string quartets.

Thai clash

BANGKOK, Thailand [UPI] — Four persons were killed early yesterday as police and right-wing demonstrators traded gunfire with leftist students at a Bangkok university in the first outburst of violence over the return of ex-dictator Thanom Kittikachorn.

Police sources said a policeman and a woman were killed outside Thammast University in central Bangkok, and two male students were dead inside the compound. Another five policemen were wounded by the gunfire, police officers said.

Chinese blast hits here

[UPI] — A cloud of radioactive fallout from a Chinese nuclear blast nine days ago moved across the United States and heavy weekend rains showered small amounts on the Pacific Northwest and along the East Coast, federal and state officials reported yesterday. They said there was no risk "at the current levels" to public health or safety.

While the amounts were small, officials said it was the most radioactivity detected in the United States since the height of U.S. and Russian nuclear testing in the atmosphere in the 1950s and early 1960s.

Radioactivity was reported after heavy rain Saturday in the Pacific Northwest, and beginning Sunday in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and South Carolina.

"The levels of fallout that have occurred do not present any risk to public health and safety," the federal Energy, Research and Development Administration said in Washington.

The agency said that in areas where it rained heavily, radioactive fallout had been detected from coast to coast since a nuclear explosion in the atmosphere on Sept. 26 at the Lop Nor testing site in western China.

Health officials said there was "some potential concern" that milk from cows might have been contaminated by iodine 131, which is picked up by the thyroid gland.

Dr. James Liverman, assistant FRDA administrator for energy and safety, said the fallout is not dangerous "at the current levels at which it has been detected." He said contamination "should not be of a hazardous level" for persons who came in contact with rainfall, but the iodine, when it lands on grass and is eaten by cows, forms concentration in milk.

He said that in milk, the exposure to an infant would be about 3 milliroentgens or less. The level at which the government demands corrective action be taken is 5,000 milliroentgens.

"So we're well below 1 per cent of any dose level that would be of concern," he said.

"A cloud carrying radioactive fallout moved east across the Pacific and was detected in the Pacific Northwest on Saturday," ERDA said. "The radioactivity also was reported from monitoring stations in eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Long Island, N.Y., and South Carolina beginning early Sunday.

"At the levels recorded thus far, the fallout appears to be no more than one per cent of the level at which Environmental Protection Agency guidelines recommend that some precautionary actions be taken."

Margret Reilly, chief of nuclear surveillance for the Pennsylvania Bureau of Radiological Health, said fallout also was reported in Baltimore, Md.

"The fallout was similar to or a little bit higher than we found in the late 1950s and early '60s when the United States and Russia were doing atmospheric testing, but it won't be around as long as it was then," Miss Reilly said. "We've been through this before and we now know what to do about it. People are concerned because we're just not used to it any more."

Thomas Cashman, head of the bureau of radiation for the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation, said radioactivity had been detected after heavy rainfall in the New York City metropolitan area and on Long Island during the weekend. He said "the rainfall brought down radioactive water" from the cloud moving eastward across the country.

"Where there was no rainfall there were no significant increases and where there was rainfall there were very significant increases" in radioactivity, Cashman said.

New Hampshire nuke suspension lifted

Seabrook

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission yesterday lifted the suspension of the building permit for the Seabrook nuclear power plant.

The construction panel for the $2 billion plant was suspended last Thursday. Work at the site was to have halted Friday.

In an interview from Washington, a spokesman for the commission said new oral arguments on the suspension issue would be held Oct. 26, either in Washington or New Hampshire.

The spokesman said one reason for lifting of the suspension was that a new analysis of the environmental impact of radioactive waste disposal would soon be available. He said the analysis may have a bearing on the Seabrook plant.

The building permit was suspended by the Atomic Safety and Licensing Appeals Board while new consideration was given to methods of disposing radioactive wastes produced during the generation of electricity by nuclear fission.

The appeals board said Seabrook should be included in a federal Appeals Court order halting issuance of new building permits while the waste disposal problem was investigated. The Seabrook permit was issued two weeks before the court decision.

Officials at the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire said they were pleased by the NRC decision to allow new arguments on the waste controversy.

Don Lundholm, spokesman for the utility, said the NRC decision added weight to the company claim that the "project is right."

William C. Tallman, president of the company, on Monday complained that the original decision to halt construction was unfair and said concern about atomic waste disposal was a "non-problem."

He also said the federal construction delay would have pushed the cost of the $2 billion plant even higher. Tallman said building costs would rise $10 million a month during the delay.

Earlier, the New England Council for Economic Development said it would organize a public campaign to try to get the construction license restored for a nuclear power plant in Seabrook.

Council officials said at a news conference they would ask citizens to send telegrams backing the plant to New England members of Congress.

The aim of the campaign would be to produce a vote in the NRC itself to restore the license, council officials said.

John F.X. Davoren, former Massachusetts state secretary and now a spokesman for the Massachusetts Building Construction Trades Council, said of last week's decision to suspend the license: "Someone won a victory but it wasn't the people of New England."

Davoren, who is also an executive of the Americans for Energy Independence organization, noted that some might believe the campaign represented only the interests of business.

"Our vested interest is in the millions of people in New England who are going to be affected by this order unless it is overturned."

Ed King, president of the council and former executive director of the Massachusetts Port Authority, cited as a precedent for the campaign an earlier successful effort by the council and others this year to keep a curfew on night flights from being imposed at Logan International Airport in Boston.

Energy leader follows in Kissinger's steps

NEW YORK [LNS] — Dr. Robert C. Seamans, Jr. is not the nation's Secretary of State. He's the top administrator of the Energy Research and Development Administration (ERDA). But if one were to look at his recent itinerary, it would be difficult to tell him apart from the globe-trotting Henry Kissinger.

According to ERDA travel data, obtained by Critical Mass in a Freedom of Information request, Seamans traveled nearly 120,000 miles in a twelve-month period ending June, 1976. Over sixty per cent of the trips, the documents note, involved meetings with some of the most influential and powerful banking, petroleum, and pro-nuclear interests. In contrast, only three per cent of Seamans' visits were with environmental groups or members of the public, and none of his travels brought him to forums that represented groups opposed to atomic energy.

ERDA and Seamans play a critical role on both public and private planning and support of all the nation's energy resources.

As a result, ERDA's tilt toward private industry and pro-nuclear companies and away from public interest and environmental groups is a cause for growing concern in Congress and among citizen action organizations.

Last June, conflicts of interest within ERDA and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission came to light when Common Cause released the results of an investigation.

Its report noted that "six of the nine Executive level positions surveyed in ERDA, including that of Administrator (Republican appointee, Robert C. Seamans) are filled by individuals previously employed by commercial firms who are today ERDA's contractors."

Seamans himself spent five years at the Radio Corporation of America. While at Radio Corporation, Seamans took over the management of the firm's Airborne Systems Laboratory and later was promoted to chief engineer of the company's missile electronics and controls division. Seamans also served as director of the Lord Corporation and Air Products and Chemicals, Inc.

"Having analyzed the previous private sector employment backgrounds of top personnel in ERDA and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission," the Common Cause report concluded that "the potential for serious conflicts of interest exists in both agencies."

Vietnam in U.N. urged

BOSTON [UPI] — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., yesterday said it would be "unwise" for the United States to block the admission of Vietnam to the United Nations.

At the same time Kennedy is opposed to the admission of North Korea to the world body because that nation has not shown evidence it is willing to live in peace with its neighbors.

Keeping Vietnam out of the U.N. would cut off information about U.S. servicemen still missing in Southeast Asia, Kennedy told reporters after addressing an organization of Canadian and U.S. school officials.

"I would not veto their presence in the U.N. but I would think it should be supported," said Kennedy.

Workers kill to cut down on work

COLUMBIA, Tenn. [UPI] — Dogs and cats at the Maury County dog pound were sometimes shot to death on Fridays so workers would not have to clean up after the animals on weekends, a city employee said yesterday.

"I saw one dog they shot in the heart," said city dog catcher Darnise Ralph. "The dog kept walking around crying, and I saw them shoot him in the eye and they shot somewhere else and finally the fourth shot killed the dog.

"They would usually kill on Fridays so they wouldn't have to clean over the weekends or kill on Tuesdays and Wednesdays because it seemed like a good time to kill."

Rabies officer Richard Osborne said he was directed by Steve Sutherland, environmentalist with the county health department, to shoot the animals after the pound ran out of Suscotrin, a drug which humane association officials claim slowly suffocated the dogs and cats.

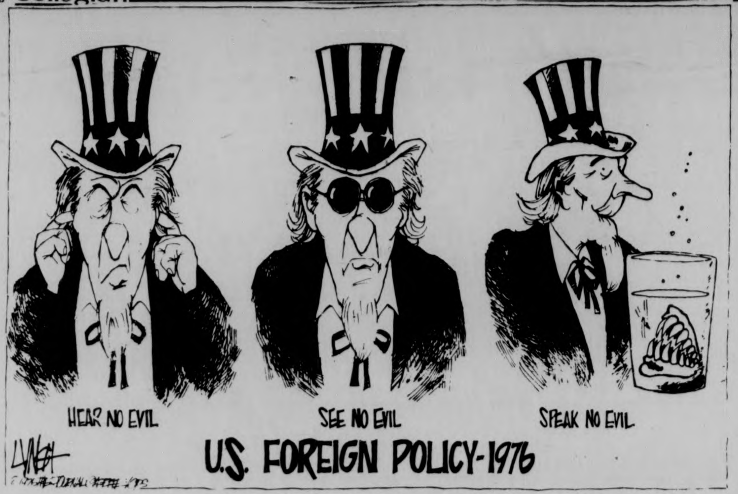
"You can tell them you don't want to, but they tell you that you got to get rid of the dogs," said Osborne.

Sutherland said Suscotrin was the cheapest method available for putting animals to death. He said animals were shot as a last resort when a drug order was late.

"I would hate for anybody to blow this up out of proportion," he said. "I don't want the progress we've made to be destroyed.

"Possibly, it wasn't the proper process, but these dogs would have been put to sleep regardless," he said. "It just happened two or three times, and it's not routine."

Miss Ralph said as many as 50 dogs were shot to death in a small pen while cats and kittens were released and shot while they tried to scamper away.



Ford to portray 'leadership'

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President hopes to project himself as a leader during the second debate with Jimmy Carter by citing his two-year record in making foreign and military policy, administration sources said yesterday.

He is being advised to stay as general as possible, the sources said, in order to keep the nationwide television audience from being confused by a long and involved discussion of such intricate issues as the SALT arms limitation talks.

But if Jimmy Carter gets into technical specifics, the President can overwhelm him with a great knowledge, since he is briefed each day on intelligence matters involving military and foreign policy, said his advisers.

UPI discussed Ford's debate strategy with some of his key aides, who declined to be quoted by name.

They said Ford's preparation included use of large loose-leaf books filled with possible questions and answers, provided by the Pentagon, State Department and other agencies, along with a rundown of Carter's stated opinions on foreign policy and defense.

"This is our debate," said one aide. "This stuff is what presidents do, and he's being advised by the people who are actually doing it. Carter is getting advice from people who haven't been in government since they gave us the Vietnam War."

All the advisers said Ford would stress that the United States is at peace, with few possibilities of a crisis that might involve U.S. troops in the immediate future.

He also is expected to dwell on the need for a strong military force, and the importance of a system of alliances to reinforce that strength.

Carter's views most mentioned by Ford's strategists are that the Pentagon could reduce its budget between $5 billion and $7 billion by cutting waste; that the United States has neglected its alliances and has not done enough to slow the arms race, and that Secretary of State Henry Kissinger has conducted "Lone Ranger" diplomacy.

"He's got to keep to the center," one aide said of Carter, "and there he's on our terms. Take the B1. If he goes hard right and says the Russians are coming, then we show how we need a new bomber and that makes Carter fuzzy on the issues.

"If he says don't build it, then we can ask what kind of signal that sends to our allies. What's more, he'll offend a lot of labor support and lose California."

Carter to become aggressive

[UPI] — Jimmy Carter probably will seek to make Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and the morality of U.S. foreign policy the main issues, and take a more aggressive approach, in his second debate with President Ford.

Even after Kissinger's recent efforts to bring peace to southern Africa, the Democratic Presidential nominee continued his campaign — long criticism of the man he has referred to as "the Lone Ranger."

"There's no doubt in anyone's mind that Kissinger, not Ford, is the one who speaks for our country," Carter told a group of Lithuanian-Americans in Pittsburgh Sunday.

In a logical extension of the moralism that characterizes his approach to politics. Carter chargest that U.S. foreign policy is based on Kissinger's concept of balance of power, whereas the nation should declare unequivocal support for human rights throughout the world.

"The American people feel that under Kissinger, Ford and Nixon our nation has abandoned its moral commitments in foreign affairs," Carter told the Lithuanian-Americans. "We've ignored the rights of human beings to be free."

Carter has been tuning up for tonight's confrontation in meetings with his top foreign policy adviser, Columbia Prof. Zbigniew Brzezinski.

Brzezinski helped shape Carter's position that U.S. foreign policy must center on relationships with traditional allies such as Britain, Canada and Japan — not on detente with Russia and China.

Carter and his aides have given few clues as to his strategy for this debate. But he appears certain to continue hitting hard at waste in the military establishment and what he considers administration foot-dragging on arms limitation.

In preparation for the military phase of the debate, he conferred for several hours during the weekend with former Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger, whom Ford fired in part for his determined espousal of a stronger defense in the face of Kissinger's stressing detente.

In a speech to the representatives ot Jewish organizations in Boston Sept. 30, Carter offered a synopsis of what could be the general thrust of his attack tonight.

"Our foreign policy the last few years has been amoral in nature. There has been no constancy about it. There has been no commitment. There has been no constant search to correct the deprivation of human rights.

"There has been no adherence to the moral character of our nation itself or of our people. There has been no openness because it was a lot better to be concealed, and the American people have had no voice in the evolution or consummation of foreign policy decisions."

Debate
Ford vs. Carter

For a second time President Ford and presidential hopeful Jimmy Carter will debate on national TV. The debate which is being held in San Francisco, will begin at 9:30 p.m. EDT. This time the candidates will be discussing US foreign policy.

BOSTON (AP) — Rosalynn Carter tells a group of elderly citizens yesterday her husband will work for better health care and public transportation programs for older persons if elected president.

"We know your problems first hand. Everything goes up but your income," the wife of Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter told a group of about 150 gathered outside the Washington Heights apartments in Boston's Brighton section.

Arrest causes snag for Saxe's defense

[Compiled from Wires] — The judge in the Susan Saxe bank robbery-murder trial denied a defense motion to suppress evidence concerning Ms. Saxe's arrest in Philadelphia in March 1975.

Defense attorney Nancy A. Gertner had sought to have the evidence, which is expected to show that Ms. Saxe used false identification when arrested on a downtown Philadelphia street by police, dismissed on the grounds that it is irrelevant and highly prejudicial.

"It is simply and plainly irrelevant, and, in addition, highly prejudicial," Ms. Gertner told Suffolk Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin.

Prosecutor John T. Gaffney argued that the evidence was relevant because the Philadelphia policeman who arrested her was doing so based on existing warrants from the 1970 robbery of the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co. in which Boston patrolman Walter A. Schroeder was killed.

Ms. Gertner has argued that "It is entirely plausible" that her arrest was in connection with charges against her stemming from a Philadelphia bank robbery.

The Philadelphia policeman who ended her 4½ years on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List testified that she gave her name as Valerie when arrested.

Joseph O. Reid said he stopped Ms. Saxe and her friend Byrna Aronson on a downtown street on March 27, 1975, after being shown a photograph of Ms. Saxe during his station's roll call just two hours earlier.

Reid said Ms. Aronson kept asking questions about why the two women were being detained.

"I told her I thought her friend might be wanted in connection with a bank robbery, and I mentioned the name Saxby," he said. "That is when she (Ms. Saxe) turned to the right and made a try at the doory handle in the rear of the police cruiser."

Under cross examination Reid testified that Ms. Saxe was not armed and offered no resistance when asked to get into the cruiser.

Ms. Saxe, who prefers that designation as does Ms. Aronson, is an Albany, N.Y., native charged with the 1970 robbery of the State Street Bank, during which Boston Patrolman Walter Schroeder was shot to death.

She is charged with murder under the state's felony murder law, which says that anyone associated with a serious crime can be held responsible for any death arising out of that crime.

William "Lefty" Gilday is already serving a life sentence for the Schroeder slaying.

Reid's testimony followed the trial judge's denial of a defense motion to suppress evidence in connection with Ms. Saxe Philadelphia arrest.

Defense attorney Nancy Gertner called such evidence "plainly irrelevant" and "highly prejudicial." Prosecutor John Gaffney said the evidence, including false identification papers was "clearly relevant" and "shows consciousness of guilt at the time of her arrest."

DiGrazia replaced

BOSTON [AP] — Joseph M. Jordan, a behind-the-scenes man serving the Boston police department for 30 years, will be the city's new police commissioner, the mayor announced yesterday.

Superintendent-in-Chief Jordan, 52, will replace Robert J. diGrazia, the flamboyant and outspoken police commissioner who announced his resignation Monday.

Jordan is the first police commissioner in the city's history promoted to that post from the ranks.

DiGrazia, a controversial figure caught in the middle of Boston's busing turmoil, plans to leave Nov. 15 for a higher paying post in Montgomery County, Md., a wealthy suburban community.

Mayor Kevin H. White told reporters yesterday morning that Jordan will fill the high post at least until May 1.

Strike possible

WORCESTER, [UPI] — A walkout is being threatened by residents and interns at Worcester City Hospital because of a dispute with city fathers about whether they are students or full-fledged employees.

The Worcester City Hospital Physicians House Staff Association, which seeks to be recognized as a union, planned to present a list of health care grievances to the city council last night.

A spokesman for the 150 member union said yesterday the city claims the union consists of students, and therefore, is not entitled to collective bargaining.

The list of grievances involves 40 alleged incidents of health care deficiencies at the hospital in the past nine months.

Up drinking age

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Senate has officially requested its Ways and Means Committee to release a bill increasing the drinking age from 18 to 19.

The bill was approved by the House last spring and has been bottled up in Senate Ways and Means ever since.

Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, expressed his opposition to the measure at a hearing he held on the issue recently.

Bus hijacked — murderer sought

GORE, Okla. [UPI] A convicted murderer who hijacked a Continental Trailways bus threatened to kill everyone aboard unless a young woman accompanied him as a hostage, the driver told police yesterday.

The passenger, Lisa Agee, 20, of Pine Bluff, Ark., was forced off the bus at gun point, but later escaped unharmed.

Police identified the armed hijacker as J.W. Hunnicutt, 42, of Muskogee, who was convicted last June of second-degree murder but escaped a few days later from the Muskogee County Jail.

Hunnicutt was still free and believed hiding in the heavily forested section of eastern Oklahoma. Police said he was considered dangerous.

The bus had left Little Rock, Ark., late Monday for Tulsa, Okla. As the bus crossed the state line about midnight, Hunnicutt pulled a .38-caliber revolver and instructed driver Eddie McLaughlin to drive off I-40 into a thicket near Gore.

"He said, 'Well, I warned you. I will kill you and everybody in here if you don't do what I tell you to do'," McLaughlin said.

"And I said, 'Do you want our money? Is that what you want?' And he said, 'No, I don't want your money. I want to take a passenger off the bus.'

McCarthy off Rhode Island voting list

PROVIDENCE, [UPI] — Independent presidential candidate Eugene F. McCarthy will not be on Rhode Island's Nov. 2 election ballot, Secretary of State Robert F. Burns said yesterday.

Burns' office said backers of the former Minnesota senator failed to file enough qualified voter signatures on nomination papers.

McCarthy scored an initial victory in U.S. District Court last month that struck down an early deadline for filing nomination papers for independent presidential candidates.

Maurice Hendel, legal counsel to the secretary of state, said there were only 971 valid signatures statewide and 24 from Bristol County. State law requires a minimum of 1,000 statewide and at least 25 from each county.

"I was very surprised because we turned in a good many more signatures than we needed," said McCarthy state coordinator Susan Carl of East Greenwich.

Bombing orders attacked in Mayaguez incident

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A Congressional report said yesterday President Ford did not need to bomb Cambodia or send Marines to rescue the crew of the Mayaguez in 1975 because the Cambodians had already decided to free the hostages.

White House spokesmen rejected those conclusions but declined to speculate whether there were any political motivation in releasing the report on the eve of Ford's foreign policy debate with Jimmy Carter.

The assessment the Mayaguez incident came in a 162-page study prepared by the General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, for the House International Relations Committee.

The document said Ford's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, had urged that the report be classified secret, and that administration officials protested it was as unwarranted second-guessing.

Forty-one U.S. servicemen were killed, presumed dead or listed as missing as a result of the military rescue operation launched by Ford in May, 1975, to rescue the crew of the container ship Mayaguez, which had been captured by Cambodian navy forces.

The effort included the sinking of Cambodian gunboats by U.S. warplanes, bombing of the Cambodian mainland and a climax assault by Marines on Koh Tang Island where the captives were held.

"In retrospect, the final Marine assault and the bombing of the Cambodian mainland did not influence the Cambodian decision to release the crew," the report said.

College Life

Stop the presses—what about ethics?

[CPS] – It never stops.

Take a conservative town, a nearby college, an ironclad student government, an administration that scares the pants off the school newspaper, and a campus prostitution ring. What've you got? One more student scapegoat waiting to be skewered for hanging on to his principles.

Ned Tolbert could tell you all about it.

Tolbert is currently facing charges that could lead to his expulsion from the University of the Pacific, a small school in Stockton, California.

What could he have done to raise such a ruckus at this expensive private school?

Well, last spring, a couple weeks after he became editor of the Pacifican, Tolbert decided to run a story that uncovered a campus prostitution ring, allegedly operated by several women who needed money to pledge sororities. The reporter, who refused to take a byline, claimed two confirmed sources would verify the accusations. The ex-editor, faculty advisor and editorial board of the Pacifican all agreed that the story should be printed. And so Ned Tolbert did run the damning article and the natives tried to chase him out of town.

He was immediately fired by the Student Senate and notified by the administration that his status at the school was suddenly uncertain. The Senate then appointed an interim editorial board and unwittingly chose the writer of the explosive story as editor. That person soon resigned.

Tolbert cried censorship. "An upper administrator told me that the story shouldn't have been printed, even if it was 100 per cent true," Tolbert explained. "He said that our newspaper doesn't run those kind of articles." Another student maintained that the substance of the story was never denied by the administration. "No one's really looked into it. They have no reason to because it would just damage the school's image."

But not everyone takes the same view of Ned's plight. Rhonda Brown, President of Pacific's Associated Students, said that Tolbert would have been fired anyway, mainly because he wouldn't comply with budget regulations. "The story changed maybe one vote," she recalled.

Another source close to the controversy said that while there were budget troubles, it was more a combination of factors that did Ned in. "Ned was badly misguided by the outgoing editor, he was on the way out anyway," revealed the source.

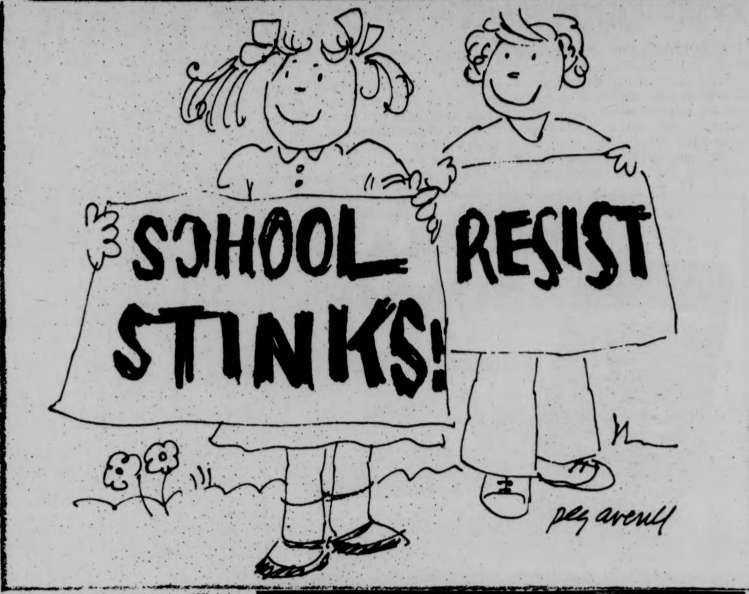
Tolbert acknowledges other tensions, but stands firm in his belief that the prostitution story was the catalyst for his firing. "It was politically expedient for Rhonda Brown to give other reasons for the firing. It's pretty ridiculous, but everyone seems to know what really happened," he commented.

Tolbert stresses, however, that his dismissal from the Pacifican is not the important issue. "There's more at stake here than throwing an editor off a campus, there's the whole First Amendment to think about."

Because of the strong-arm tactics by the school officials, Tolbert fears that the Pacifican will be reduced to a mere social calendar, devoid of any substantive material. "Jeez, they've got a rock group on the front page this week."

In a few weeks, Tolbert will stand before Pacific's Joint University Judiciary Committee to face charges ranging from "irresponsible use of the student newspaper" to "acting contrary to the best interest of the school." Vowing legal action against the University if he is expelled, Tolbert feels that the administrators "might want to let the case drift by the wayside."

Even if he's left off the hook, Ned Tolbert won't forget his crazy bout with small minds and petty politics. But then again, he also knows that these kind of shenanigans never stop.



Co-ed living

High academics... ...and hard liquor

[CPS] – Does co-ed dorm living mess up your head? Yes, no and sort of, according to two Stanford University psychiatrists who reported their findings in Human Behavior magazine.

The pair quizzed 900 freshmen students at a large public school in a small town where most students live in university housing. They found that overall, co-ed dorms are more pleasant, relaxed, friendly, enjoyable and that the atmosphere promotes greater personal growth than single sex living arrangements.

They discovered men who opt for co-ed living have higher academic and career goals, who like to drink beer and who think of themselves as easy going and "on top of the world."

Women in co-ed housing, however, were found to be quite different than their female classmates stuck in women-only dorms. Women who lived under the same roof as men had higher academic aspirations, took part in more social and cultural activities and engaged in more of what the psychiatrists call "impulsive-deviant behavior," which means they occasionally break school rules and drink hard liquor.

These women also had a better self image than other university first year women, they described themselves as "easygoing," they were less likely to view themselves as cautious and they placed more emphasis on friendship, independence and variety in new activities. They also placed less emphasis on traditional heterosexual dating.

One year later the biggest change for students living in co-ed dorms was a drop in career goals. Fewer students still wanted to get that doctorate degree that had seemed so important several months earlier and they looked with more disfavor on demanding careers than did other students who didn't live in co-ed housing.

The two psychiatrists also report that students from co-ed dorms made more trips to the student health center, indicating higher levels of stress in co-ed living. For the women however, it might not have been all that stressful; 21 per cent of them said they were visiting the health center for birth control information.

Registration open for women's workshops

Registrations are still being accepted for about a dozen Project Self fall workshops for women.

There is a small fee for the workshops and financial aid is available for women in need. The workshops are open to all community women, and will meet on the UMass campus. Child care arrangements can be made. To register, or for more information, call Everywoman's Center at 545-0812. Workshops which still have openings include:

—SINGLE MOTHERS WORKSHOP which will meet on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon for eight weeks starting Oct. 16. This workshop is designed for single mothers of all ages and situations — never married, separated, divorced, widowed. The goal will be to enhance single mothers' daily lives through information sharing and "trouble-shooting" within a relaxed and supportive atmosphere. Child care will be arranged among participants.

—CREATIVE DIVORCE ADJUSTMENT will serve as a combination information-sharing and support group for women contemplating or experiencing separation and divorce. Issues will include the legal aspects of divorce, aloneness, single parenting, sexuality, work and finances. This workshop will meet on Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m. for eight weeks starting on Oct. 14.

—WEIGHT CONTROL WORKSHOP will focus on different approaches to weight control, and the roles that anger, passivity and assertiveness have played in our success and failures to control our weight. It will meet for eight weeks on Tuesdays 5 to 7 p.m. starting Tuesday.

—PERSONAL GROWTH GROUPS are designed to help women look at their lives with fresh vision and insight, and to plan to make whatever changes they feel are needed. Some of the issues to be dealt with are: identity, sexuality, sex-role conditioning, dependency, anger and assertiveness. There will be two sections of Personal Growth Groups offered. On Wednesdays from 9 a.m. to noon, there will be a Personal Growth Group open to any woman, and on Fridays 9 a.m. to noon there will be a section for women 40 and over.

Other workshops which still have openings:

—HOMESTEAD SEWING — the art of remaking old or used clothing as well as creating new clothing inexpensively and simply. Meets on Mondays 7 to 9 p.m. starting Monday.

—LEARNING TO DRAW WOMEN — to extend our ability to see and improve technical skills and coordination; no experience necessary. Meets on Wednesdays 7 to 9:30 p.m. starting today.

—WOMEN IN LITERATURE — workshop based on books, poems, short stories by and about women; a chance to develop close reading skills and to make the connections between literature and one's own life. Meets on Mondays 5 to 7 p.m. starting Monday.

—WOODBLOCK PRINTING — workshop in the techniques of cutting woodblocks and making prints, which is an ideal art mode for women who feel "I can't draw", and rewarding as well for those who can. Meets on Thursdays 7 to 9 p.m. starting Oct. 14.

Debate: The vote dilemma

By CHARLES BAGLI
and ELLIOT KASS

Tonight, Round Two of the Great Debates will take place. No, it's not Ali coming out of retirement for another championship. It's the Carter-Ford face off, coming two weeks after Round One. I guess they needed a lot of rest.

I know a lot of people watched Round One. There with crowds munching peanuts and apple pie around the TV in Grayson and a mob scene in the Campus Center.

It's funny, they've been spending as much money and time trying to get us interested in voting as they are on getting us to vote for one or another of the candidates. Something like 50 per cent of the registered voters aren't going to vote. I think the politicians were hoping the "delegates" would generate some interest in the elections.

The way the problem (no one voting) has been explained in the media is that there's just an apathetic and cynical electorate out there. And if we don't vote then we deserve the shaft, after all, we've been offered "the choice."

It's very important to the rulers of this country that the people come out to the polls. At a time when more and more people are fed up with the ways things are going: rising unemployment, inflation, cities falling apart while the government spends billions on defense, corruption and scandal — they put forward the elections as the way to make change and rally people around their political rule.

There's only one problem. People aren't buying it. There is little interest in the elections not because people "don't care". People watched the debate because they do care about the way we have to live. And that maybe the debates would show that one of the candidates did represent a change away from the problems in our society.

Judging from the recreation to the last debate I think I can say as one History class did in voting for who won the debate: Carter won — 0; Ford won — 2; America lost — 45.

A quick look at our two big choices. Choice A, Gerald Ford. The political appointee of Nixon. He counts U.S. Steel Corp lobbyists among his "close, personal friends," and appointed Nelson Rockefeller, V.P. Certainly not common people, but rather a few of our favorite capitalists. Under the Ford Administration the American people have suffered record inflation and unemployment, drastic cutbacks in social services, aggression in Angola and all time highs in defense spending and arms building. He stakes his whole bid for our support on "economic recovery", a recovery which has seen thousands of students forced to leave school, to join millions of workers still out on the streets.

Choice B, Jimmy Carter isn't a man of the soil either. His family's peanut farm is estimated to be worth more than $5 million, and he himself is a near millionaire. In the meantime he pays his workers $2.30-hr. Is that what he means when he says he'll put America back to work?

A long time advocate of the Vietnam war, it was Jimmy Carter who, when Watergate broke, urged a national governors convention to vote support for Nixon. Carter's no stranger to the capitalist rulers either, years ago David Rockefeller, our friend at Chase Manhattan Bank, spotted him as a "rising figure" and recruited him to serve on the Rockefeller's private foreign policy commission.

Presidents come and go, but the problems: unemployment, war, racism, inequality, political corruption, remain with us. Ford and Carter serve the same masters, the rich bankers and corporation owners who really rule this country. And while they say our problems lie with this leader or that and the way to change things is to vote for the new face or the better platform — the real problem lies not with which of their "leaders" is in office, but with the capitalist system. And as long as we are saddled with a society where the wealthy few rake in the wealth that millions produce, we can expect more of the same — no matter who is President.

Politicians fight for $ interests, we must fight for our own. For many of us not voting means we're fed up with their sham — that we're looking for a way forward to really bring about some changes. Our interest lies in building up our own political movement — independent of the rich class. A movement that takes on their rotten system, fighting injustice and inequality, fighting for the things we need — a movement that grows in strength and understanding as it fights, so that as it forces concessions from them today, it can do away with them altogether tomorrow.

On Nov. 2 (election day) in about 30 major cities around the country, demonstrations will be held under the slogan "Politicians Fight For $ Interests — We Must Fight For Our Own" and demanding "Jobs, Not Hot Air". The demonstrations will help expose the elections as an attempt by our rulers to hide their rule, and suck up our anger in a way harmless to them. We will not accept the better of two evils or give them a chance to say they have a "mandate" from the people to bring down their attacks on us. These demonstrations will be a step in building the kind of movement that can indeed bring about change.

Tonight, when Round 2 is broadcast, we encourage people to gather in lounges to watch the debate and discuss with each other the kinds of questions we've spoken to here. The RSB will be in several dorms Wednesday night to participate in these discussions.

Charles Bagli and Elliot Kass, Members of the Revolutionary Student Brigade, are Collegian Commentators.

Debate: Rhetoric and strategy

By RANDY GINZIG

Round two of the Presidential debates is ready to begin tonight in San Francisco, with the two combatants ready to tackle the subjects of Foreign Policy and National Defense.

President Ford, winner of the first round on a decision by the judges panel of 100 million Americans, will stick to the same strategy he has been following throughout, while Jimmy Carter can be expected to change his battle tactics from a more laid back style to rope-a-dope techniques.

President Ford, who has been gaining steadily in the polls until the Earl Butz incident, will stick to his game plan of stressing his experience and knowledge in government. Ford considers Foreign Policy his strong point, and will miss no opportunity to point to U.S. diplomatic successes in Africa, as well as the two years of peace the nation's experienced under his leadership.

Ford will bring in statistics on disarmament that will show that while the U.S. is slowly disarming, it is not falling behind in military strength in proportion to other nations. He will stress the importance of military strength and will point out the need for, in the words of Robert Dole, "a wise, experienced, and tough President to reduce the temptation which any foreign power might have to test our will."

Also watch for Ford to smile once or twice.

For Jimmy Carter, this debate is a chance to turn around his faltering campaign. Although inexperienced in Foreign Affairs, a fact that Ford will undoubtably emphasize, Carter has an opportunity to scrutinize a U.S. foreign policy that has embarrassed many Americans and has caused distrust and hatred of Americans abroad.

In the last few days, Carter has returned to his original campaign strategy, whereby he blends pastoral and populist themes. Carter assumes that the American people have been hurt by recent behavior in Washington, and while disconnecting himself from these political elements, asserts his faith in the ability of America to survive and recover under the proper leadership.

Carter has been getting himself into trouble recently by trying to identify himself with past Democratic Presidents, such as Roosevelt, Truman, Kennedy, and Johnson. This tactic was in conflict with Carter's original anti-Washington reputation, and left his campaign without focus. Expect to see Carter answer some of the President's long statistical arguments with what an assistant termed "people-oriented" rebuttals.

In the last few weeks, President Ford has become increasingly less accessible as a candidate and more so as president, in an attempt to repeat the successful Nixon campaign tactics of 1972. Ford has been running what has been termed a "Rose Garden Campaign", producing bill-signing ceremonies, publicity shots from the Rose Garden, and news media-events, meant to underlie his occupancy of the White House.

Ford has been available for fewer and shorter press conferences, making it harder to pin him down and closely question him. This is perfectly fine with the Ford staff. Apparently, Ford's strategy contends that the more accessible he is, the more apt he is to blunder publicly. Carter's blunders, exemplified by the infamous Playboy interview, have been magnified because his campaign is being closely scrutinized by the press. Carter's aides are aware of this and will try to reverse the trend as Ford becomes more accessible. Tonight Ford becomes accessible.

Carter has also altered his strategy of refusing advice from experienced and established advisors. Carter on Sunday met for four hours with former Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger, just back from Asia. Schlesinger is extremely critical of Henry Kissinger's detente plan and this was certainly discussed, since Carter has shown dissatisfaction with Kissinger. Carter also met with Representatives Les Aspin of Wisconsin, former assistant Secretary of Defense under Kennedy and Johnson. Aspin is one of Congress' most knowledgable critics of the Pentagon and "wasteful" defense spending.

Carter will focus on the enormous cost and inefficiency of the Defense program. Carter has called for $5 to $7 billion cuts in the defense budget of $112 billion, and will state that by improving efficiency, the cuts can be made without adversely affecting U.S. military strength. Ford will accuse Carter of just that.

Carter believes that because the President lacks the ability to lead the Government, foreign policy has fallen exclusively into the hands of Kissinger, and the national defense program has become "a mish-mash of uncontrolled waste."

Carter has plenty of ammunition to fuel his attack with, and expect him to point to detente policies that have put the U.S. in a poor bargaining position. Carter can also point to Ford's support of the militaristic Chilean dictatorship, and the present Administration's refusal to recognize the Angolan Government, only because of Cuban influence there. Fear of Cuban expansion in Latin America is the prime reason behind U.S. support of the Chilean dictatorship.

No one can guarantee that all these subjects will be brought up, but Carter knows he has to go on the attack to regain the original momentum of his campaign. A Ford "victory" in this debate could be fatal to Carter's hopes. Ford can point to Carter's inexperience, but in that inexperience is the advantage of never having blundered. Round two of the Presidential Bouts should be much more exciting and interesting than the first, with much more on the line.

Know nuclear power

To the Editor:

In looking for potential energy sources for our future, the feasibility of nuclear power remains uncertain and in deep controversy. An awareness of the science, economics and politics of the issue is needed among all people if we hope for a resolution adquate to meet our values and needs.

On October 5th and 6th the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group will sponsor a Nuclear Power Teach-in at UMass. This teach-in is designed to provide the education and understanding we need to confront this issue in an intelligent and constructive manner. Nuclear power poses threats to the health and safety of all life on our planet. How? What are our alternatives? What can we do? These and other questions will be answered through a program of workshops, speakers and films.

This teach-in has been endorsed by the Hampshire County Alternative Energy Coalition. If you are interested in nuclear power and alternative energy sources action here in Hampshire County, further information can be obtained by contacting the A.E.C. Office at 256-8291, or by attending our meeting at the First Congregational Church in Amherst, Monday, Oct. 4th, at 7:30 p.m.

Hunting isn't murder

To the Editor:

In a recent rebuttal to my letter [Shoot a Hunter Today], Mr. Kopetz attempted to show through disordered logic that people who eat at McDonald's are no different than those who return to the woods annually to shoot at wildlife.

Whether raising and slaughtering animals for food is correct or not, it is a far cry from the premeditated murder of millions of animals in the name of recreational hunting. There are of course those who would justify it all simply because they eat what they kill, although sufficient food is available in any supermarket.

What really prompted me to write this letter was that Bruce Kopetz assumed that I was a carnivore. This is false. I do not eat animals.

With hoof in mouth

Hi y'all! My name is Elmer Cornturd and I hear America moanin' louder than a hound in heat. And you know who you're moanin' 'bout? The best dang good ole boy this side of Peoria, may God bless him! A man who warn't born with no silver spoon in his mouth, but instead a golden hayseed up his arse. You and I are talkin' 'bout, Tell - like - it - is, Earl Butz.

Now let me set you straight. I'm from Peoria, the heart of the Middle West, where we go to church every Sunday, mind our manners, and don't hardly covet our neighbor's wives. Now I may be prejudice in favor of Earl on account I'm a farmer but I'm gonna try and present an evenhanded case as I can. May the good Lord guide my unsteady pen!

The other day I was out in the barnyard listenin' to Billy Graham on the wireless when I hear that all bethlehem has broke loose in Washington. I'll be danged if good ole Earl ain't had a relapse of hoof in mouth! Supposedly he were asked by another good ole boy, Pat Boone, why the Republican party coun't attract more of the Black vote. Well Earl told him "Coloured people only want three things in life — a tight - - - -, loose shoes, and a warm place to shit." Well if anybody can turn a phrase it's eloquent Earl.

Now a clamor as thick and widespread as the great '37 dust storm has arisen. Earl's resigned under tremendous pressure on account o' what his detractors call tasteless and offensive remarks. Well, I'm still bullish on Earl Butz. Is it because I'm one of the many nation's farmers what are enjoyin' a record total income? Not likely. Even though I do.

First off, Earl don't just confine his remarks to any specific group. He's non-discriminatory in his discriminatory remarks! He insults and offends everyone with equal relish! He's struck a happy balance between insulting Catholics, Women, and Blacks. You don't believe me? Well as Jimmy Thurber used to say, you could look it up. I did.

'Member in '73 when meat prices rose ever so slightly? Well somebody got it into their head to start a meat boycott and Earl told it like it was, saying that "stupid women and crazed housewives" were behind it. Plain and simple talk. The words flow sweeter than honey and prettier than the nigh side of a peach.

Earl told like it was back in '74 when he gave it to Pope Paul for his views on birth control, sayin' "He no playa the game, he no maka the rules." Like I said everyone gets the occasional broadside so why all the bother? I'll be hanged if I know. He's all right though.

Now those who didn't want Earl kicked out for his verbal shennanigans wanted him booted 'cause since he took office food prices ha' rised 49 per cent. Be that as it may (to quote Jimmy Thurber) I'm managin' to get by so why all the bother? Who knows but some crazed fool will take Earl's place now? Like Jimmy used to say, better the devil you know than the devil you don't.

Nuts to Butz

Earl Butz resigned Monday morning, relieving the government of the United States of another of Richard Nixon's political holdovers. The controversial former Secretary of Agriculture, Butz had cut quite a swath through the American intellect — angering many, pleasing some, and with all, ingraining himself and his neanderthalithic policies within their minds.

His term had been rock-stumbly, like any political hack unsure of his abilities or responsibilities. He gained notoriety in 1972 when he negotiated a wheat deal with the Soviet Union that left the United States with the chaff, and a meteoric rise in bread prices. But through it all, Butz somehow perservered, continually extolling the virtues of the American farmer — and farmbelt — as "the lifeline of the country". The people ate it up, and so did Butz, time after time pushing for the policies that would benefit the farmers, rob the consumers, and strengthen the Republican Party's hold on the mid-West.

He was an anachronism in media politics, an indominantly bland man whose penchant for controversy came about simply by his inability to utter a coherent remark. He was forever being caught in his own words; saying one thing, meaning another, and yet never being quite sure of what he actually said.

Well, he put his foot in his mouth for the last time, and it happened a month ago while flying over the Midwest he loved so dearly. The ramifications finally caught up with him this past weekend, and it seemed — at the time — that Butz had made another beaut.

It seems that while in transit, 15,000 feet in the air, Butz confided to a friend sharing an adjoining seat, his philosophy as to just what black people wanted most in life. Raucous humor his trademark, Butz contended that "there are only three things the coloreds are interested in: a tight pussy, loose shoes, and a warm place to shit." It was, needless to say, just another one of Earl Butz's philosophies on life — only this time it was one too many.

The most incomprehensible thing about the whole sordid affair was the laxity in which President Ford acted. The President was almost assuredly informed of Butz's remarks, yet he hemmed and hawed, offered what he termed "a severe reprimand," yet never once publicly stated that Butz's governmental career should be terminated.

It is this type of gross negligence by Ford that makes the incident all the more alarming. Here we have a man whose racial remarks might well alienate a major voting bloc of the American public and the President ignores the crux of the issue, preferring party loyalty to doing what is not only right, but should be obligated: firing Butz!

Whatever Ford's reasons behind his decidedly slow handling of the affair, the inconsistency of leadership that seems to haunt Gerald Ford's Presidency once again reared its ugly head. It brought into public view the indecision of a man whose prime responsibility as President is to make decisions, but whose major act has been to avoid them.

Throughout the careers of both Butz and Ford, folly and indecision seem to be their most prevalent characteristics. It goes without saying that Earl Butz deserves the treatment he may receive at the hands of the press; but Ford warrants the most criticism for allowing Butz to continue through two years of his Presidency, and a milieu of Nixon appointees and favorites who still remain entrenched within Gerald Ford's government.

Custom made woman blues

"Good morning, class. Today we are going to eradicate those phallacious theories, supposed facts and general bullshit that have been passed down to us by the male media, socialization and education. Todays lesson is on the females sexuality.

"As most of you probably realize, we as women, have been forced to become what men have wanted us to be. Made to please but not to tease, it's the custom made woman blues. Our bitterness and confusion is understandable, as we search for new identities.

"By rejecting age-old customs and assumptions, we now have the opportunity to become happy, healthy human beings. How do I spell relief? F-E-M-I-N-I-S-M.

"But we must realize that women are different than men. Our sexuality is both less and more: less in that we have been taught to supress it and more in that the limits of our potential almost defy measurement.

"We have to realize how beautiful our natural bodies are, and what great pleasure givers they can be. When I say natural, I mean that you don't have to shave your armpits or legs because some commercial told you so, there's no need for feminine hygiene spray which is dangerous anyway, and your lips look much better without all that gooky stuff.

"I don't know why women should feel ashamed about their bodies. It is easy enough to blame modern commercialism. The sellers of bras and girdles, wigs, estrogen pills and feminine hygiene deodarants have much to gain from exploiting our bodies. Without our sales, they would go broke.

"If we can come to respect our bodies for what they are and not for what they aren't, as well as enjoy them, we will truly have 'come a long way, baby' out of the artificialities of our past and into a world that is more natural.

"Unfortunately, the religious myth of creation shapes our lives. It is still generally assumed that woman was made from man. We have been programmed to think our sexual organs are somehow inferior to men's. Yet the opposite is true.

"In 1958, embryologists established beyond any shadow of a doubt that all mammalian embryos are innately female. Female development is basic and autonomous; male development is a deviation triggered by hormones.

"In the beginning, we were all created female.

"It follows that, embryologically speaking, the penis is an exaggerated clitoris. Which came first? Science proves that women did, yet everything we learn says otherwise.

"Freud called the clitoris a stunted penis. But this couldn't be further from the truth. The fact is that a woman's clitoris is merely the tip of the iceberg, for there exists a highly complicated internal system of highly responsive sexual tissue. And this grows with age and sexual experience.

"So when they say, you're not getting older you're getting better, this is absolutely true!

"The male's sexual capacity peaks in the teens and diminishes thereafter. But in women, sexual experience increases her sexual capacity.

"This is all so contrary to what we have been taught about 'masculinity' and 'femininity' that it is hard to grasp. Nonetheless, the latest scientific evidence indicates that sexually, the male is but a pale imitation — of us!

"For your next assignment, I want you all to demand from your man, provided that your lover is a man, that he consider the information brought out in class today, and pay attention to your needs and wants. And then ask yourself, is he proud to be your lover?"

★ Bottle bill opponents meet face to face eliminated five per cent of solid waste." Carley said he was citing an Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) report.

Carley said if the bill is passed it will result in the loss of 82,000 jobs across the country.

"My company has people whose jobs depend on the Massachusetts market. I would accept the statement that more jobs might be there, but that is only due to the inefficiency of the system. No one has taken a study to see how many indirect jobs are lost when a direct job is lost. The bill will take away many jobs with a future," he said.

Carley warned the audience, "You are playing with the distribution of an item, when you alter it by law."

Souweine picked up on Carley's statement and claimed that litter in Oregon had decreased by 82 per cent in the first two years of their bottle bill.

Carley claimed the only impartial study done on litter in Oregon was made by Implied Decisions Co. of Cambridge, Mass. This study was done on 30 miles of road, one month before and one month after the bill's enactment. There was only a reduction of 10 per cent can litter and 66 per cent beverage litter, he said.

Speaking for his industry Carley said that 74 per cent of all packaged beer in Massachusetts comes in cans. He said the bottle bill will put an end to this. He also said that canned beer was cheaper than bottled.

"The people who sell beer and soft drinks are in a tough competitive market. If you say the major package will be a returnable bottle, people in the industry say the price will go up due to the added weight, added warehouse and the use of more energy," he said. Carley repeated this point several times during the debate.

"The people that throw away bottles are going to continue to throw them away what ever the law is. The litter problem can be solved by educating the people, but it won't happen overnight," Carley said.

Responding on a question from the audience on why the country originally went from returnable to non-returnable bottles, Souweine said the opposition claimed that consumers "demanded" the change from reusables to non-reusables.

"I think the real explanation is a little more enlightening. U.S. Steel took a major defect, the cost of cans, and turn it into a major asset in the name of conveniencee The plastic industry is now following this line," he said.

Carley, defending the industry said the most recyclable part of waste is metal.

Souweine summed up by saying that he wanted to bring to everyone's attention that, "sometimes you can tell how much your opponent wants to kill something by the money and the people they bring in with their $-million bankrole."

Carley closed by saying that the bottle bill is only the tip of the iceburg.

"I don't think this is the kind of action that you want the government, to take," he said.

The entire debate can be heard over WFCR radio next Thursday at 1 p.m. and 10:30 p.m.

understood Massachusetts law to only require mental health records receive strict security. She added, though, that she was still familiarizing herself with Massachusetts law because she has been working in the health services only since June.

Stark said records are not kept in any other buildings on campus.

The source said the records have been in Marshall Hall for at least two years and some have been stored there as recently as two weeks ago.

Many of the records are not stacked and simply piled on shelves, the floor and on top of furniture and equipment also stored in the attic. The attic is accessible by two doors and the source said that while the back door is always locked the front door is never locked.

The records include various test results piled on shelves, x-rays piled on the floor and on top of furniture and complete personal files in cardboard filing cabinets. Some filing drawers are not in cabinets and are lying open.

section two of Chapter 66A of the Mass. General Laws deals with fair information practices and states that individuals not employed by the agency holding records should not have access to "personal data" information, such as the information kept in patients' files.

Subsection (c) of the section states: "Every agency maintaining a personal data system shall: — (c) not allow any other agency or individual not employed by the holding agency to have access to personal data unless such access is authorized by statute or regulation, or is approved by the holding agency and by the data subject whose personal data is sought."

O'Connor said he's come across "a lot of things" in the investigation of the health services begun last week, and is "looking into anything that's a perceived problem by anybody."

beverage manager of the Campus Center, and manager of the Blue Wall and Hatch, said he would like to see a higher price on alcoholic beverages.

"The prices are structured to meet with students' spending abilities," Barbato said. He said, however, that Campus Center prices, in comparison to other student-frequented bars, are much lower.

"If the Campus Center makes money, it will stay above water, and it could only help the students," he said.

Barbato said according to last year's figures, the Campus Center sold about 150 kegs of beer a week and 1,100 bottles of vodka. Three types of draft beer, various mixed drinks, fruit juices and sodas are offered at the three campus bars.

Woman is town's population

BEURY, W. Va. [UPI] A column of smoke rising from a makeshift stove shows this one-time boom town is not quite a ghost town.

A woman with a red bandana around her head cooks and goes about the chores of "running a tourist home for animals — caring for stray dogs and cats."

She's Melciny Fields, 64, the only resident in the Fayette County hamlet, one of a baker's dozen of towns along the New River between Thurmond and Fayette Station. They have sing-song names like Rush Run, Fire Creek, Red Ash, Dimmock, Keeneys Creek, and they are uninhabited.

There are only three ways to get into the area in the rugged southern West Virginia mountains: by river, by train, or the way Mrs. Fields buys her groceries twice a month — hiking the railroad tracks to Thurmond, population 85.

"People don't stop by here," said Mrs. Fields. Anyway, she added, "I'm busy and don't have time to talk."

Mrs. Fields has set up house in the decaying Beury Company Store. There is no electricity. A stack of bricks is her stove.

There are accounts that Mrs. Fields was a maid for Col. Joseph Beury, founder of the town and stories told in Thurmond that she saved two of his children when his mansion burned.

But Mrs. Fields, who moved into Beury in the waning days of the coal boom, won't talk about the stories. Townspeople say she doesn't like to talk to strangers, and hides when she sees a visitor.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Faculty position interview tonight

Today and tomorrow the Bilingual Bicultural Education Search Committee will be interviewing Dr. Jose Luis Perez for a faculty position in the School of Education.

The University community is cordially invited to attend the open meetings, to be held tonight at 8:00 at a meeting of Ahora, Campus Center room 804, or at the Bilingual Collegiate Program, 5th floor Goodell Library if there is no Ahora meeting, and Thursday morning from 9:00-11:00 in room 128, School of Education.

$100 award for Latin achievement

The Department of Classics awards a prize of $100 each fall, in honor of the late Milton C. Davis, to the incoming freshman with the best record of achievement in Latin.

Applicants must be enrolled in a Latin course in the department and furnish documents showing their grades and achievements in Latin and related subjects, and their placement scores. They should also ask for a letter from their high school latin teacher(s), to be mailed to the department.

Applications are available from Prof. Robert Dyer (Herter 531) or the Classics Office (Herter 539). Deadline for applications is Oct. 22.

Milton C. Davis is also remembered by a room on the 13th floor of the library, which houses a collection of books of special use to Classics undergraduates.

For further information, contact Prof. Dyer at 5-0078-0512.

Recruiting team sponsors workshop

A career workshop and presentation will be given tomorrow at 3:30 p.m. in Mahar auditorium, to cover topics such as career selection, interviewing and resume writing.

A professional recruiting team from Proctor and Gamble will offer insights on how to prepare for and conduct oneself in an interview.

The team will discuss the relative advantages of choosing a large corporation, or a small one, how to handle an interview, and what kind of questions to expect.

Interviewing situations will be simulated with volunteers from the audience.

Donald Banks, of the UMass Placement Services, will lecture on how to write a professional resume.

Waste prevention measures discussed

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) will hold a meeting tonight in the CEQ office (319 Student Union) at 5:00 to discuss what can be done to cut down on waste (paper, water and energy) on campus. There will also be a meeting tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. in the CEQ office for anyone interested in organizing some smoking regulations for public areas.

CEQ is sponsoring a survey on the attitudes towards cigarette smoking by students on campus. They are also sponsoring a glass recycling project, for which barrels are being provided in dorms.

Anyone interested in the above projects or in anything else regarding this organization can stop by the office or call 545-0618.

Parent workshop held tonight

The second in a series of Parent Workshops, co-sponsored by the Infant-Toddler Playgroup and Health Education, will be held at 7:45 tonight in Room 17 at Skinner Hall.

The subject will be nutrition, and will be presented by Helene Yass, Community Health Educator.

Yass will cover maternal and infant nutrition, changes in eating habits and needs of the young child, nutrition and breastfeeding, vegetarian diets and also answer questions from those in the audience.

These workshops are open to all interested people, and are of particular interest to families with young children, expectant women, and people who work with young children.

The programs are conducted flexibly, with open questions and answers throughout the presentations, and audience dialogue and sharing encouraged.

Future workshops include topics such as contraception, motor development in the young child, discipline, first and emergency aid, and sexuality and the young child. Anyone with a question can contact Susan Mackey at 665-2885 or 545-2403.

Panel discussion on higher education

Public & Private Colleges in Massachusetts: Can Higher Education Save Itself?, a panel discussion, will be cablecast tonight at 8:00 on channel 8 in Amherst.

Panelists who will be discussing the present crisis in higher education are Samuel Bowles, UMass professor of economics, Prosser Gifford, Amherst College dean, Jeremiah Allen, UMass dean of Humanities, and Alvin Winder, UMass professor of nursing.

Viewers are invited to call in with comments and questions throughout the show. Anyone without cable television can come to the Town Room of the Amherst Town Hall to participate.

This is the third program in a series being presented by the Center for Community Access Television at Amherst, in conjunction with the Massachusetts Foundation for Humanities & Public Policy.

The Leica Seminar comes to NEW ENGLAND

We are proud to announce that TRIPOD CAMERA SHOP, INC., will be host to the highly acclaimed LEICA SEMINAR.

The seminar will be held at The Colonial Hilton Inn, in Northampton, Mass., junction Routes 91 and 5, Friday Evening, October 29, and Saturday, October 30, 1976.

In order to assure your place in this seminar, you must act now, and return your registration by October 20, 1976. We already have many advance reservations and enrollment is limited. We don't want any of you receiving this special invitation to miss attending because of a sell-out space.

The seminar will be conducted by Mr. Walter G. Heun, Leica Technical Director, whose expertise in all phases of 35mm photography and dynamic teaching at the Leica School in New York, marks him as one of the "leading authorities on photographic quality and technique with the 35mm camera".

If you want to know the what, where and why of 35mm, rangefinder cameras, reflex cameras, properties of different films, 35mm developing techniques, close-up photography, transparency projection, and of the fascinating world of photography, this is for you...

You need not be a Leica owner to attend.

new and concerned students into 'MUA, an assortment of interests, ideas and direction must be dealt with.

The news department is seeking to incorporate local, national, women's and Third World news in such a way as to serve the many needs of both students and the local community.

A WMUA news meeting will be held tonight at 8:00 in room 917 of the Campus Center for present newspeople and interested individuals.

Third World people and women are encouraged to attend.

Poetry reading by Shirley Kaufman

Shirley Kaufman will give a reading of her poetry tomorrow night at 8:00 in Campus Center room 804 at UMass.

This is a return visit for Kaufman to the area. In 1975, she was a Visiting Lecturer here, and since that time she has been living in Jerusalem. Kaufman has a Master's degree from the State University of California at San Francisco, where she won the Academy of American Poets prize for poetry. In 1969, her first book of poetry, The Floor Keeps Turning was chosen as the United States Award Winner of the International Poetry Forum.

Her poems have appeared in many magazines and journals, including The Atlantic Monthly, Harpers, The Nation, The American Poetry Review, The New Yorker, and Poetry, as well as in several anthologies.

Her reading is free and open to the public. It is being sponsored by the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, Women's Studies, and other UMass groups.

Documentary flick on Israel shown

"Promised Lands," a non-polemical, impressionistic documentary film on Israel, will be shown tonight at 8:00 in Thompson 104.

The movie was filmed in Israel in October and November, 1973, during the Yom Kippur War.

The film, sponsored by Hillel, is free and open to all.

Economic Journal needs articles

The Economic Journal for students is planning to print its first issue this month. Articles are being written on women in the economy, agriculture, bottles bill economics, stock market, political economy in the classroom. More articles are needed though, and work on the Consumer Guide. Graphics and layout work is also needed from interested students. A meeting is being held for October 7 (Thursday) at 4:00 in Room 100 Thompson Hall. All persons welcome.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, October 6 — Born today, you must be on guard always against a tendency to place the possession of money over the possession of peace of mind. You enjoy what money can buy -- but you will greatly disenjoy the discomfort luxury will bring you when you realize the extent to which others must suffer at times without life's necessities, much less its luxuries. A maker of budgets, you are also a breaker of the same. You try very hard to spend only what you can afford to spend, but you often fall victim to your own taste -- taste which, because it so often exceeds the amount your purse or wallet can afford, may in the long run prove to be the bane of your existence.

In spite of your being spoiled by material things, you are a person of deeply spiritual feelings, especially in your relationships with other people. Friendship means more to you than gains of any kind; you will go to great lengths to protect a friendship from the inroads of your own selfishness or another's hurt. You are destined to make many mistakes in your associations with those of whom you are especially fond -- but, fortunately, yours is a nature that creates in others a desire to forgive easily and to forget completely.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Thursday, October 7

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — This may well prove an upside-down day when it comes to your chances for real success. A failure now will serve you well later.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — There is real harmony abroad today; take care that you don't overlook an opportunity for special gain in the afternoon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Bear in mind that acquaintances are not the same as friends. You can ask much of the latter -- and not so much of the former.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — A good day for furthering a romance, if you are so inclined. Take into consideration the degree to which others are already involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Associates make the difference between success and failure today. Don't exaggerate your ills; you may encourage them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A self-reliant move on the part of a youngster may backfire early in the day. Make sure that the help you offer is of the right kind and degree.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Put new ideas regarding uncooperative co-workers into action this morning. Friends and family make intelligent observations; listen!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Numbers make it difficult for you to decide what action to take and where to take it. Invitations are plentiful -- and hard to turn down.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — The work you do today to discover what your next move should be will pay off early in the evening. Take care, however, not to panic in the afternoon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Communications must not be allowed to break down between you and a long-time friend. Make contact without further delay.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Social engagements may be on your mind this morning -- to such a degree that they cause you commit errors on the employment scene. Concentrate!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Domestic affairs should be quietly progressing toward a new and better phase. Take a youngster's experience into consideration.

New awareness

By KIT WALKER and ROB HENEREY

The Moon is finishing up in Pisces (the sign of compassion) thru 6:51 p.m., when she will enter Aries (sign of self-development). We're moving towards the Full Moon in Aries on Friday and, since Pisces is the last sign before it, we're still in a stage of preparation for a new awareness of our Self, as reflected in the mirror of relationship. The Sun is reflecting light on the Moon from the sign of Libra, which symbolizes balance in partnerships, so we have to mellow out our reflections as the Moon increases in light.

At 10:05 a.m. the Moon opposes Mercury (rationality) in Virgo (critical analysis), which may isolate us in criticism of another, or else help us remember that we've all got problems. When we're aware of our own problems, we can see those of others without being set off balance by them.

Between three and six this afternoon the Moon will form a difficult 135 degree angle to both Venus (harmony) in Scorpio and Saturn (discipline) in Leo. This will give us a preview of the coming Venus-Saturn square on Friday. This is a potentially selfish aspect and may put a damper on our passions and force us to a new sense of sharing our heart's love. Friday's square or 90 degree angle occurs in combination with the Aries Full Moon so it should bring about a change in our real relationships. The overall message seems to be that if we understand, forgive, and love ourselves with all our human faults, then we can do the same for another. But if we expect perfection from others, while unaware of how incapable we are of living up to our own ideal standards, we'll be locked in a prison of our own making.

A little later into the night, the Aries Moon will peak two waves: first, a parallel to Mercury (planet of communication) in analytical Virgo, at 8:02. Then at 8:15 she'll form a sextile (harmonious 60 degree angle) to Jupiter (planet of expansion). He's going retrograde or backwards in Gemini (communications). So, if we can get over our introversion, the evening could be excellent for enthusiastically thinking and talking, for making new mental and personal connections. By balancing our critical impulses with decency, we can avoid stepping on toes.

Dick Williams has returned to baseball once again. This time he has signed a contract to manage the Montreal Expos, who possessed the worst record in baseball this season. (UPI)

Williams to manage the Expos

MONTREAL [UPI] — The Montreal Expos, who ran up the worst record in Major League baseball this year, Tuesdav named whip-cracking disciplinarian Dick Williams as their new manager.

Williams, who once served with the Expos as a third base coach was fired as manager in midseason by the California Angels amid widespread player discontent over his strong ruling hand over the team. He replaces Charlie Fox, who took over from easy-going first-year manager Karl Kuehl when the Expos tried to boost their fortunes during the season.

It was the second major league managerial announcement of the day. Earlier, the St. Louis Cardinals fired Red Schoendienst.

Williams guided the A's to two successive world championships but decided to quit with a year remaining on his contract and signed with the New York Yankees. Charles Finley, however, took Williams to court and won a battle to prevent him from taking the Yankee job. It was only after the Yankees had fired Bill Virdon as manager that Finley agreed to free Williams from his contractual obligation. Williams then signed to manage the California Angels.

B's prepare for opener

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Bruins, in preparation for Thursday season opener with Minnesota, today assigned three players to their American Hockey League affiliate, the Rochester Americans.

Dispatched to Rochester were defensemen Al Sims and Doug Halward and right wing Earl Anderson.

Anderson, who missed all but five games last season with calcium deposits in the thigh, has been sent down "to get regular ice time and get himself into playing form," according to Bruins General Manager Harry Sinden.

amateur boat club organization was formed, the Castle Garden Amateur Boat Club Association. Gradually, other clubs and organizations were formed across the country and rowing grew to regatta proportions within the next 10 years.

In 1872, an organization was formed called the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen and their first regatta held on the Schuylkill River in Pennsylvania was open only to amateur oarsmen.

This formed a breach between amateurs and professionals and marked the beginning of professional sculling which remained a major American sport for the rest of the century.

Today, rowing clubs have become increasingly popular on college campuses, and crew rowing is a major varsity sport in many regions of the country. This year, the Summer Olympics hosted women's crew rowing for the first time in the history of the games.

Area women's crew teams focus on Regatta

HOLYOKE, Mass. — The Connecticut River will be the scene of the second National Invitational Women's Regatta to be held Saturday, October 9 at Brunelle's Marina in South Hadley, Massachusetts. The course will cover a two-mile stretch of river above the Holyoke Dam, with the finish line and launching area at Brunelle's.

More than 40 women's crew teams from colleges and secondary schools will race against each other. The race will be in heats rather than against the clock, and spectators will be able to view the race along the river bank, from Brunelle's Marina or from the Holyoke Canoe Club.

The first National Invitational Women's Regatta, held last year, won wide acceptance from coaches and crew members. Won by the women of Dartmouth College, participants included the women's crew teams from the University of Massachusetts, Middletown High School, Marist College, Smith College, Kent School, Williams College, Trinity College, Holy Cross, and Connecticut College.

Despite a constant downpour and the cancellations of all other major sports events in New England that day, the Regatta was held and the competing crews completed the race.

The Regatta, sponsored by the Greater Holyoke Chamber of Commerce and National Blank Book Company, was the brainchild of Dr. Robert O'Malley of Holyoke who presented it last year to the Chargers, the volunteer activist group within the Chamber that runs various sporting events.

"We are interested in developing our river front as a recreational area to be enjoyed by local families and visitors," said Chamber of Commerce President, Attorney C. Barry Waite. "We see it as a multipurpose area serving a variety of interests such as boating and other water sports. The rowing regatta is an excellent way to promote the area and bring attention to what Holyoke is doing to preserve and develop the environment."

National Blank Book Company offered their financial support as well as their staff, and Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley agreed to be the host college.

"The Connecticut River has a great deal of potential as a recreational area," said National Blank Book Company President Louis F. Oldershaw. "The annual rowing regatta is one more step in our efforts to bring recognition to that area. Our particular stretch of the river is ideally suited for rowing regattas because the river is narrow enough to afford a close view of the race."

Technical Director of the Regatta will again be Norman Graf, crew coach at Trinity College in Hartford, Connecticut, who served in the same capacity last year.

Mount Holyoke College, whose participation as host institution last year inspired the establishment of a crew team at the College, is again offering its facilities to the members of the participating crews. Mount Holyoke students will also assist Chamber of Commerce and National Blank Book personnel in working at the Regatta site on the day of the race.

Coordination, teamwork and extensive training combine to make crew a demanding sport for participants and an exciting and graceful event for spectators.

Rowing as a sport

Competitive rowing as we know it today probably began in England, early in the 18th Century, with the Thames River boatmen. In those days the Thames was a major artery for transporting people and goods. The competition between boatmen was fierce, and passersby in search of amusement often offered money to the winner of impromptu races.

One morning in August, 1716, an Irish actor by the name of Thomas Doggett, who had often been transported from place to place in the water taxis, posted a sign on one of the piles of London Bridge.

He proposed a race to celebrate the king's accession to the throne. The race was to be from London Bridge to Chelsea, and the prize an "Orange Colour Livery with a Badge representing Liberty," to be presented to the winner. The sign went on to say the race would be continued annually on August 1 forever.

That marked the beginning of organized rowing, and made Thomas Doggett the patron of the sport. There has been only one break in that traditional race, and even then it was merely an interruption. After the first year of World War I, the race was discontinued until 1920. In 1920, six races were rowed to make up for the six years lost from 1915.

Although there has never been a Thomas Doggett in American rowing history, the similarity of its start here is striking. New York Harbor, the Thames River of America, required boatmen to unload craft entering the harbor. Many devious methods were used by the boatmen to beat one another to the craft to be unloaded.

In 1811 a race was recorded that is considered by many to be the first in this country. The race was between a Long Island and New York crew, rowing four-oared barges. The course extended along the Hudson from Harsimus, New Jersey to the Battery Flagstaff. The winning boat, the Knickerbocker, was placed in Scudder's Museum, where it remained until destroyed by fire in 1865.

As the years went by, rowing races grew in popularity and became a popular spectator sport. In the summer of 1834, the first

Budweiser® presents "Beer Talk"

How much foam on a glass of beer?

1. Maybe you like your beer without a lot of foam.

2. So you pour it gently down the side of the glass.

3. Well, that's fine — that'll do it. But here's something to think about:

4. You just might be surprised at how much mellower and smoother the flavor becomes when you pour any beer smack down the middle.

5. And when it's Budweiser you're pouring . . . well!

6. If you think this looks good, just wait till you taste it!

Skiers club 'drives' on as largest RSO

For many people, the mention of winter provides for an instant frown in anticipation of the cold, brisk, and snowy afternoons. But for the skier, winter spells a time of action and relaxation — from the moment the initial snowflakes and breeze brush against one's face, to the final warming-up by the fireplace.

For the UMass skier, the opportunity to take advantage of forthcoming ski conditions is now in order as the UMass Ski club conducts its membership drive. Today and tomorrow will be the final days to sign up, with membership fees at $6.00 per year, sold on the Campus Center concourse.

The UMass Ski club is the largest RSO group on campus, with 643 members involved last year. Charlie Hodge, Advertising Manager of the club, said the organization hopes to draw at least that many members this year, and hopefully about 700.

"The purpose of the club is to try and make skiing available to all people on campus at the lowest costs possible, Hodge said.

The club sponsors Saturday trips in the spring to various areas in Vermont, and provides free transportation, discounts on lift tickets, and wine and cheese for the trip home.

The club also holds night trips in the spring to either Berkshire East or Mt. Tom, with costs ranging from only $2.00-$3.00.

Over intersession, the club sponsors week trips to Vermont and Mt. Sutton in Canada, and ventures further out to the west with three week trips — to Aspen, Vale, and Steamboat Springs.

Chiefs blank batters; win streak snapped

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It's difficult to win a baseball game when your team fails to score a run.

The UMass fall baseball team discovered yesterday that it was no exception to that time-honored rule, as it bowed to Springfield College, 6-0, thus ending the Minutemen's win streak at four.

Three Chief pitchers had a hand in the shutout. Starter Bob Cox hurled four innings of two-hit ball, Chuck Ross two frames of three-hit relief, and Mike Lorian pitched hitless ball in his two-inning stint.

Springfield scored what proved to be the winning run in the fifth, when catcher Tom Consol hit a home run over the left field fence off reliever Jerry Erb. Consol also knocked in the second Chief run in the next inning with a single.

After Springfield scored a single run in the eighth, the Chiefs put the icing on their cake in the last inning on an RBI single by third baseman Jay Jordan, a double by right fielder Tom Bowen, and center fielder Tony Lachowetz's single.

UMass' offense, meanwhile, could produce only three hits all afternoon. Shortstop Jim Cullen, second baseman Ed Skribiski, and designated hitter Dale Stone each hit singles.

The Minutemen's pitching was shared by started Chris Kirby, Erb, and Dave Twehill. Although Erb was the loser, he struck out eight batters in his four innings of work. Kirby pitched two scoreless innings while fanning one, but Tewhill was treated roughly in his three-inning stint as he gave up the final four Springfield runs.

The Chiefs 11-hit barrage was led by Consol's two hits and two RBI's, Lachowetz's run-scoring single and two walks, and Jordan's two singles.

UMass, whose record slipped to 4-2 with the setback, hosts American International College today at 3:00 at Lorden Field.

Celtics put Searcy on waivers

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. [AP] — The Boston Celtics placed three players on waivers Wednesday as the National Basketball Association champions closed training camp here with 15 players.

Waivers were asked on forward Ed Searcy and two guards, Lewis Linder and Jerry Fort. Fort, a third round pick from Nebraska, is still recovering from a broken leg, team officials said.

The Celtics open their eight game pre-season slate at Wichita, Kan. Wednesday night against the Kansas City Kings. The two teams meet again in Omaha, Neb. Thursday night.

Coach Tommy Heinsohn will take a 15-man squad on the exhibition series, including Norm Cook, a first-round draft choice from Kansas, and Louis McKinney, a forward from St. Louis University.

Paul Silas is the only player still missing from last year's championship team.

Lions name new coach

PONTIAC, Mich. [UPI] — William Clay Ford has made another surprise choice, Tommy Hudspeth, to coach his Detroit Lions.

Ford, who passed over better-known assistants in 1974 when he named Rick Forzano coach, ignored his staff members again Tuesday when he selected Hudspeth to guide the National Football League team for the duration of the season.

"Hudspeth has more head coaching experience than any other man on the staff," Ford said. "I wanted to keep the present staff of assistants intact. I felt to name one of them over the others was not as wise as to bring in Hudspeth."

Hudspeth, 45, has been coordinator of personnel and scouting since joining the Lions the season after Forzano, 47, was named to succeed the late Don McCafferty as coach of the Lions.

Women's tennis looks for season upper against B.C.

By PATTY AMERŌ
Collegian Staff

A rejuvenated UMass women's tennis team, coming off their first victory of the season, will be challenging Boston College this afternoon at 3:30 in Newton.

The netwomen, who easily beat Central Connecticut Friday by a score of 7-0, will be looking to up their record to a winning tally of 3-2.

The team's other victory was by a default by Tufts University of Medford.

Boston College beat UMass last year, 5-1.

"Hopefully, we'll reverse the score this time," said UMass Coach Ken Rubin.

Boston College currently has a losing record of 2-3, but Rubin said he isn't taking a UMass victory for granted.

"They'll be tough," he said, "but we're hoping we can beat them. We'll have to see what happens at the match."

Today's match will be five singles and two doubles contests.

Jennifer Ranz will remain the team's number one singles player. However, there have been changes in the other singles slots.

Dawn Minaai has moved from the fifth spot and is now the number two singles player. Consequently, Carolyn Mooney, Kathy Sullivan and Martha Awiscus have all dropped one notch, respectively filling the numbers three, four and five singles positions.

Once again, Rubin expressed his confidence that the three, four and five singles players will win.

Assuming this, Rubin said, "If we can [illegible] either the first or second singles [illegible] we'll take the match, since we will have fo[illegible] wins out of a possible seven."

There has been a change in the doubles positions, too. The number one team of Captain Nancy O'Neil and Karen Holt will remain the same, but Leslie Howell and Jeanette Flynn will fill the number two slot this time.

"Doubles are coming around," Rubin said. "Strategy is very important in doubles, and it takes awhile to perfect this. I've been working with the girls on their strategy, and it's starting to run smoothly."

Despite the fact that this is only Holt's second match after recovering from a foot injury, and that it's the first semester O'Neil has played doubles, Rubin said he feels they play excellently together and are definitely "a winning pair."

The doubles teams got off to a slow start, having recorded their first two wins of the season last week, out of the seven matches they've played so far.

Rubin said he wants to take at least one of the doubles matches today, to insure a victory in case neither the number one nor two singles players win.

Cards boss receives his pink slip

ST. LOUIS [UPI] — Red Schoendienst, winner of two national league pennants and one world's championship in 12 years as manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, was fired Tuesday, two days after the team posted its second-worst record in 52 years.

Schoendienst, whose squad finished with a record of 72-90 and finished fifth in the National League East, called the firing a surprise and said he was sorry he would not be back to see his young team play up to its potential.

Club president August A. Busch Jr. proclaimed his regard for Schoendienst as a friend and a baseball man but said a consensus of team officials concluded a change had to be made.

"There are times, regardless of one's capabilities, when a different perspective is in order," Busch's statement said. "Red Schoendienst's distinguished career, both as a player and a manager, are in the record books for all to see."

Schoendienst said he intends to remain in baseball and hopes to be a major league manager again next season. He said he would begin contacting other clubs for a job next year and named Pittsburgh and the Chicago White Sox as two possible prospective employers.

Booters bandied by Harvard, 4-2; sub-varsity, 4-0

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE — The UMass soccer team's record dropped to 1-4, as Harvard defeated the booters, 4-2 yesterday.

The Crimson scored twice in each half, while the Minutemen added single goals in the first and second halves of the game, which was played on a cool, overcast Cambridge afternoon.

Harvard controlled the play early in the game and took a quick lead when Dave Eaton came in all alone on UMass goalie Mark Hanks and fired a shot past the Minutemen co-captain at the 5:00 mark. Lee Nelson assisted on the play.

Hanks came up with a big save on Nelson, who broke in and fired a shot. Raffi Donoyan had a good scoring opportunity for UMass, but Harvard's defense stopped him.

Harvard came close to getting another goal when Nelson, who appeared to be way offside, took a pass and walked right in on Hanks, but fortunately for UMass, his shot hit the post and Lyman Bullard's rebound shot was smothered by Hanks.

UMass pulled even with 21:00 gone in the half when Tony Biladeau took a pass from Bob McChesney and shot the ball past Harvard goalie Fred Herold.

But Harvard took the lead with three minutes and 50 seconds left in the first half on a goal of Dave Acorn. Dave Eaton assisted.

Acorn increased Harvard's lead to 3-1, with a goal at the 9:45 mark of the second half. Matt Bowyer got the assist.

UMass began to control the play as it applied pressure on the Harvard goalie. Mark Abbott had a good chance to score a goal, but Herold made the save.

The Minutemen received a break when a hand ball was called on Chris Saunders at the 24:45 mark. Bob McChesney took the shot and rifled the ball into the upper right hand corner of the net to cut Harvard's lead to 3-2.

But Harvard had an opportunity to take a penalty shot when one of its players was tripped in front of the net and Eric Zager shot the ball into the left hand corner at the 33:00 mark.

Harvard almost scored again but Hanks came out and made a sparkling save, jumping high in the air to stop the ball with his outstretched arms.

"We moved the ball better, but we still need more depth at halfback," said UMass coach Russ Kidd after the game.

BOOTER BANTER: The UMass junior varsity also took it on the chin, losing to Harvard's sub varsity, 4-0 yesterday. The JV's record is now even at 1-1...Fullback Ed Niemiec says his ankle feels better and he may be back in action by next week. "Eddie's such an intimidator out there," Kidd said...The booters are back in action Saturday when they host Boston University.

Hockey loses despite surge

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The field hockey team couldn't quite come through on its last-minute surge, and lost to Mt. Holyoke 3-2 yesterday in South Hadley.

According to Coach Judith Davidson, UMass played well both offensively and defensively. "We really did play well," says Davidson. "We looked like a whole different team than the one that played last Friday. We were passing well, cutting well, and the passing between forwards was excellent. Ginger Bulman was outstanding. She was on the ball every minute, she was very aggressive — she never gave up," explained Davidson.

At the end of the first half, UMass led, 1-0. Left inner, Cindy Hartstone shot the point which not only raised the score, but hopes as well. "I really thought we had it at this point," says Davidson.

Only a few minutes into the second half of the game changed all that. In a Mt. Holyoke shot-on-goal, UMass sweeper Gayle Hutchinson blocked with her hand, which called for a penalty stroke. Holyoke's Sue Echterling put the shot in, upping the score to 1-1.

Holyoke scored twice more in a short period of time, both good clean shots, one from the edge of the circle. The other goal was on a breakaway in which the UMass sweeper missed her tackle, the goalie came out, and Holyoke scored once more.

With twelve minutes to go, the UMass team "caught on fire," and according to Coach Davidson, "the team played like I'd never seen them play before."

At the start of its "passion play", UMass scored on a crosspass from right wing Julie McHugh. Left wing Chrid Larkin completed the play with a clean shot that Coach Davidson labels "picture book".

"If I knew what caused the team to play they did at the end, we'd play like that all the time," commented Davidson. "The part about it is, that we can play that well."

Senior Karen Zimmerman had a good night at center halfback. As a defensewoman, she stopped the ball and distributed the play from the pack to more strategic areas. Lynsie Wickman also deserves mention as a sticker who "couldn't miss."

Freshwoman Jody Wickman made a nice defensive play in the first half of the game as she helped the goalie and took the ball out of goal.

The JVs defeated Mt. Holyoke 2-0, as the varsity suffered its heartbreak. Fran Connaccioli shot both points for the team, and right wing Pat DeCaire contributed an outstanding performance.

The Varsity will be back in action Saturday, at home against Cortland State. The 2:30 match-up should be a toughie, as Cortland was a top seed in last year's EAIAW tourney.

STICKERS SHOTS — Co-captain Judy Kennedy is still out of the action due to a back injury ... the women's season is only one third over, with three of the toughest games yet to come — Northeastern, Bridgewater, and Southern Connecticut ... Their record? 4-2-1.

Smith downs spikers in a marathon match

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team lost its second match of the season last night as it lost to a strong Smith College team in three rather long sets; 15-11, 11-15, and 12-15.

"We looked fairly decent in the first set, as we were attacking well on offense and playing very strong defense," said coach Diane Thompson following last night's tilt in Northampton.

Then, in the second set, the Minutewomen ran into some trouble as the Smith women came on strong.

"Our attack simply fell apart in that second set," Thompson said. "We simply did not receive the serves very well, and when you are unable to cleanly handle the serve, it greatly hinders our offensive attack."

There was a point in the second set in which the spikers had a chance to wrap the match up early, and walk away with a win. However, UMass was unable to cash in on the opportunity.

"We were trailing Smith 13-11 when they were apprehended for serving out of rotation. It was at that point that we had a chance to win it when we got the serve.

However, we were unable to capitalize on the situation. It was a key turning point in the game for us," a dejected Thompson said.

The spikers misfortunes carried into the third and deciding set, as the Minutewomen just were still unable to cleanly receive the serves from Smith.

Fatigue had to be a big factor for both teams in the third set, as the match took three hours to play, rather unusual in collegiate volleyball.

"Overall I have to say that I was really disappointed with our serve reception," Thompson said. "On a brighter note, I thought Joan Wotkowicz served exceptionally well for us, while Heidi Dickson was very effective as our spiker. Defensively, I thought Diane Bunker Hanula stood out," she continued.

In junior varsity action last night, the UMass jv's rallied after losing the first set, 11-15, and came back to defeat the Smith College jv's in the second and third sets, 16-14 and 15-13.

"I thought our junior varisty looked much better than in their previous outing," Thompson added. "Everyone on our team who went down to Smith played last night. I think the matches were good experience for all," she said.

The spikers next action will be on Oct. 9 when they host UConn and Springfield.

Grogan key to Pats revival

It's amazing how the New England sports scene has completely reversed itself from a year ago. At this time last year, the Boston Red Sox — remember them — had just clinched a divisional title and were preparing for their playoff encounter with the world champion Oakland A's.

No matter where you went — from Boston to the Berkshires or from Rhode Island to Maine — the Red Sox were the biggest topic of conversation.

At this time last year, the New England Patriots were up to their old antics of giving away football games through a comedy of errors. Nobody really gave a hoot about the Pats.

That was October 1975. Now it's October 1976 and we have witnesses a complete reversal. The Red Sox are long gone, but the Patriots, using a David and Goliath routine, have become the prominent topic of scuttlebut on television, in barrooms or on the street corners.

Why has there been such a resurgence of success for the Patriots?

First of all, the Patriots have been very lucky in that they have remained relatively healthy through the first four games of the season. Unlike the past, the Pats have not been hit early with the injury hex.

Also the Patriots have received a rather pleasant surprise from the play of the offensive and defensive lines. In particular, the offensive line has opened gaping holes for the running backs, not a trait of previous Patriot teams.

Then, and probably most important of all, there is the new facet to the offense that sophomore quarterback Steve Grogan has introduced — the running quarterback. Being the most ignored bit of strategy in pro football, the running quarterback has done wonders for the Patriots overall attack.

When dropping back into the pocket, the defensive line and linebackers are neutralized temporarily because they aren't sure if Grogan will pass the ball or run with it. Grogan is a young and healthy quarterback, and he is running, running and running.

What Grogan has done most for the Pats is to compliment his passing game with his running game. His bootlegs and scrambles have opened up the opposing defenses, making his passing game that much more effective.

This is all well and good because it is still early in the season. Grogan has been able to shake off the bumps and bruises he receives when he is nailed by a head-hunting linebacker. But how long will Grogan be able to take the punishment he receives everytime he runs with the ball?

At last week's UMass football luncheon, UMass football coach Dick MacPherson said that he didn't thing Grogan could last the entire year if he continues to run with the ball as often as he does.

You have to admit that MacPherson has a good point there. If Grogan continues to run the ball as often as he does, one of these times he is going to get nailed by a 275 pound tackle, and he may have trouble getting up. For the Patriots and his sake, let's hope that never happens.

Nevertheless, there are still 10 games left for the Pats this season, and if Grogan wants to make it through the season, he may have to cut down the number of times he runs with the ball in one game. After all, there is just so much bodily punishment his body can take.

You have to commend Grogan for the job he has done so far this season, and although he may not get the Patriots into a Super Bowl, you have to admire his courage as he runs downfield with the football and is about to be met head-on by a crushing defensive tackle, or a head-hunting linebacker.

Speakers denounce racism

By BRYANT M. JORDAN
Collegian Staff

Attica Brother Big Black, a participant and leader of the September, 1971 rebellion at the Attica N.Y. State prison, and Dr. John Bracey, a UMass professor, spoke on the meaning of the Attica Rebellion and its relationship to the Brown-Gethers case, last night at Mahar auditorium.

Robert Earl Brown and Creaman Gethers are two black men who were arrested, tried, and convicted for the 1974 armed robbery of a Hadley McDonald's. At the time, both were students at UMass.

All the facts submitted by the defense should have proven, conclusively, the innocence of Brown and Gethers and their convictions were the results of racism on the part of the judicial system and jury, said Bracey.

Citing a "national conservatism", spawned by society's inability to get the people to believe in its systems and institutions, as being the cause of increasing arrests of college students and "random shootings of blacks", Dr. Bracy said such actions was the result of society's fear of college students and young Blacks as a possible source of rebellion.

Where crime is concerned, society is more interested in retribution than rehabilitation, said Bracey.

With the memories of the demonstrations of the 1960's and early seventies still clearly fresh in the minds of those who run the system, and the discontent of people today in that very system, fearing "a creeping and ever growing crises" the society reacts to preserve itself by locking up many more people, said Dr. Bracey.

Attica Brother Big Black emphasized the need for unity among the people, both inside the prisons and on the streets.

"We all have the same problems," he said. "Attica is everything Attica is everywhere." Stating that any domain is an institution, be it educational or penal, the only difference is in the degree of security.

He assailed society's framing of Brown and Gethers as having the same motivation as the desperate crushing of the Attica Rebellion.

While in Attica it was a group of prisoners who had banded together and created their own working system which enabled them to deal with the society as one strong force, Brown and Gethers were black students, a part of the "possible source of rebellion" on the outside, said Big Black.

"If we don't unite, the rich and super-rich are going to stand up there and laugh at us, seeing we don't have our stuff together," he said.

Big Black remarked that he was surprized that he was even at UMass to speak since he knows, first hand, now bad the judicial system can get.

During his talk, Dr. Bracey suggested the forming of a permanent defense fund for the purpose of aiding individuals who become, like Brown and Gethers, victims of the system.

Furthermore, Dr. Bracey suggested, people should register to vote for the purpose of getting on the juries which have the power to convict the Browns and Gethers.

Nader calls for nuke stoppage

By LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Ralph Nader, consumer advocate, yesterday called for the dismantling of all existing nuclear power plants in the country before an audience of approximately 900 persons in the Campus Center Auditorium. There are 60 such plants in the country, concentrated mostly in the New England area.

"It's time to stop nuclear energy," Nader said, pointing to "capital investment that doesn't want to say they lost" as the thrust behind nuclear energy as a consumer product.

Nader pointed to "government career bureacracy and corporate sharecroppers trying to get money from the consumer after depleting their own funds" as forces still trying to keep alive nuclear energy as a consumer product in the country.

Nader, speaking at an anti-nuclear teach-in here sponsored by the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), asserted that the world nuclear power leader is still the United States, and "only the United States can raise questions and do something to stop nuclear energy power plants in the world.

"Here we have democracy, and here we can question and challenge the issues, whereas most countries cannot," Nader said.

Founder of "Nader's Raiders," the 42-year-old advocate of consumer affairs wrote the best seller, "Unsafe at Any Speed" in 1965 which led to a U.S. Congressional 1966 stringent Auto Safety Act. In 1969, Nader founded the Center for the Study of Response Law and soon after founded MassPIRG. Nader is a 1955 graduate of Princeton University and a 1958 graduate of Harvard Law School.

Nader said local action is the main force halting nuclear energy plant development. He noted that Congress is noticing such action. He addressed University President Robert C. Wood and the Board of Trustees to continue support of the Amherst chapter of MassPIRG.

Nader said the federal government has been "grossly negligent" in failing to warn the American public of the approach of radioactivity from a Chinese nuclear test.

"Even when the federal agencies did admit the presence of the Chinese fallout, they told American people, that it presented no danger," Nader continued.

"The government just wants to reassure the people so they just float some statement," Nader said.

"This is a man-made product," said Nader. "Are Americans actually ready to believe that this system, like any man-made machine, can perform with complete accuracy? Why even General Electric cannot even make a reliable toaster."

Nader said plutonium, a highly toxic and flamable chemical produced in nuclear energy plants which can lead to cancer, is one reason to halt the plants. Plutonium is a chemical from uranium wastes with a life span of 250,000 years. He said nuclear power plants cannot even account for plutonium "in tons."

Senate approves avoiding repetition of RSO groups

By KAREN PARMENTER
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night voted to allow the Governmental Affairs Committee to avoid creating more than one Recognized Student Organization (RSO) with similar purposes.

Karl Allen, chairperson of the committee, said he "would like to channel the energies" of those who wish to form a group, "into an RSO already existing."

Allen said there were a number of RSO groups which, having disbanded and left their debts to be picked up by the senate, would reappear under a new name. The new group, which had the same goal as the previous group, would then ask for RSO status and funding, said Allen. He noted that in this way the newly-formed group would not assume the debts of the defunct group.

Several Senators expressed concern that a group might be refused RSO status if its purpose were similar to an already established group, even though this was not explicitly stated in the motion.

Stuart J. Belkin asked who would decide which groups were similar. Another Senator noted two or more groups might have the same purpose, but different methods of achieving it.

Allen told the group that if anyone objected to the Committee's decision, the case could be appealed.

"If it's impossible for them to do that," Allen said, "they should come and get a policy exemption".

Senator Adam Auster objected to the proposal, saying, "The current RSO policy is too restrictive. On any kind of revision we shouldn't include this kind of provision."

Senator Allen Gruber proposed an amendment to the motion, to "bring related groups together and to investigate the possibility of a merger."

Gruber said, "you're working with a bureaucracy and an attempt should be made to streamline it. I do not believe a blanket denial should be given, nor a blanket acceptance," he said.

After further discussion, both the amendment and motion were approved.

An attempt was made to revive discussion on the motion by SGA co-President Paul M. Cronin. Cronin presented a second amendment which stated, "the right to an RSO group shall not be denied on the grounds that a similar group already exists."

A hand-vote was quickly taken in favor of debating reconsideration. Allen then asked for a roll call vote on the same question, which resulted in a vote of 27 in favor of reconsideration, 9 opposed.

Further discussion was halted when a motion was made to table the matter in order to bring up the next motion.

The Senate also agreed to set the Student Activities Tax Fund at last year's level of $157.

Cronin said the proposal was being made now since "the new system requires that all fees must be in by Monday. The Board will approve all fees in December," he added, "This is the first step to a multi-year fee schedule."

TOC holds elections

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Top of the Campus, Inc. (TOC) held its annual Meeting of the Membership yesterday in the Campus Center to elect members, officers, and a board manager for its board of directors.

There were 27 candidates running for 12 open board positions. Of the 27 candidates, 14 were students. The general members also proposed five write-in candidates.

Elected to the Board of Directors were Charlotte Allen, Karl Ellen, Brian Delima, John Foley, Lily Hu, Thomas J. Kerrins, Jay Milander, Kevin Muldoon, Charles J. Pellett, Jerry Rogers, Jane E. Steinberg, and Priscilla West.

Officers of the Board of Directors are elected from the 12-member Board. All were accepted by acclamation.

Foley and Steinberg were elected co-presidents and elected as co-vice-presidents were Jay Milander and Kevin Muldoon. Thomas J. Kerrins was chosen treasurer and Lily Hu was chosen secretary.

Elected as Board Manager was Bernard F. Wilkes Jr. Wilkes is the manager of the Campus Center. The TOC by-laws require that the board manager be a Campus Center employee in a managerial position.

"The Board of Directors acts in an advisory capacity to the Campus Center Administration," said Foley.

"We hold the liquor license for the establishments on campus and we approve the prices of alcohol," said Foley.

"The Board plans to encourage and increase the availability and sales of non-alcoholic beverages at these establishments," said Steinberg.

"The Board also plans to support, in any way possible, Room to Move's Alcohol Prevention Program and alcohol education programs on campus," said Steinberg.

The Board also plans to look into the cost of TOC stickers, presently 50 cents, said Kerrins.

"The Board aims to charge the actual price of the sticker, not a price to make a profit," Kerrins said.

Flu shots to begin at end of October

By ROB GALVIN
Collegian Staff

The first round of flu vaccinations at UMass will be given Oct. 25 in the Student Union Ballroom from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The only people eligible for the shots, however, will be those over 65 years and those between 18 and 65 who have the following high-risk health problems: asthma, chronic bronchitis, heart of kidney diseases, or diabetes.

Those over 65 and others with these health problems should get in touch with the University Health Center (UHC) during the week of Oct. 25 for a free appointment and to sign consent forms.

The shots to be given on that date will be "bivalent," which means that they will guard not only against the swine flu but the A-Victorian flu as well.

A-Victorian, which was the flu strain that struck the Northeast last year, is a form of the common flu.

The second round of vaccinations will be given in mid-November. These will be "monovalent", and cover only the A-Victorian virus.

The seriousness of the swine flu has been dramatized by the press, according to Barbara Estabrook, health educator at the UHC. In fact, the virus may not be coming at all, although it is still not to be taken lightly, said Estabrook.

There have been no reported incidents of the flu since the first outbreak in January at Ford Dix, New Jersey, said Estabrook.

She added that there is controversy between experts whether or not this means to expect the virus this winter.

Estabrook said that swine flu is no more serious than the normal form of influenza; in fact, it may be less severe. She said the A-Victorian flu would cause more trouble.

In addition there is a controversy in the medical community over the vaccine itself and the severity of its possible serious side-effects, said Estabrook. While there have been none in tests so far, there are those who feel that it has not been adequately tested over a sufficient period.

As of now, the state is planning to immunize only people over the age of 25, unless they have the aforementioned health problems, said Estabrook.

There are no plans to vaccinate younger people without those problems, both because of the controversies, and the fact that the virus may not be that severe, according to Estabrook.

Stockbridge Senate votes to draft letter in support of PIRG

By MICHAEL SLAVIN
Collegian Staff

The Stockbridge Student Senate last night voted to draft a letter to the UMass Board of Trustees supporting the use of the negative check off on UMass' semester bills as a means of funding the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG).

The practice has recently come under the scrutiny of the trustees after questions were raised by opponents of the bottle bill over the legality of the MassPIRG's method of raising money.

The drafting of the letter followed an appeal from senate president Brian Kelly that the senate take stands on current agricultural issues. He hoped the senate would become "more issues and less businesss."

The consensus of the Senate was that MassPIRG spoke for the students and that it was in the interest of the students to have it around.

Also mentioned was that the check-off was voluntary and that MassPIRG could not survive without the check off.

President Kelly said he felt that the senate could," really change Stockbridge," through support of the senate's Educational Quality committee, which he says is understaffed this year.

One area for change he mentioned was the Stockbridge placement system.

Kelly said he felt there is unfairness in the program where students are required to work in the summer in order to graduate.

He felt in the troubled economy, some students could not find jobs and should have an option available to them.

Another Senate priority set last night was for Vice President David White to seek out non senators to work on senate committees.

Also discusses at the meeting was Kelly's hopes for greater Stockbridge representation on the Undergraduate Student Senate. Kelly said he was promised Stockbridge would be given three seats instead of one. Glen Munroe, the present representative said he was told this was impossible.

The senate approved $25 for senate office decorations.

The Stockbridge Student Senate meets every other Wednesday. Anyone interested in attending should check the Campus Center directory on the day of the meeting.

N.W. road proposal lacks input charges UMass prof.

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

An opponent to the University-proposed Northwest Road said last night that he was afraid that "Whitmore's trying to stuff something down our throats." A University official said "it's nothing like that."

UMass history professor Richard H. Minear said before a meeting of the Undergraduate Student Senate that the University proposal asking the town of Amherst to endorse its road construction plans "in your name and mine" has had little University input.

"There has been no student input in the planning of this road. There has been no faculty input in the planning of this road," he said.

He said although the Faculty Senate had endorsed the same sections of the Northeast Bypass, it has not done so since the town of Amherst rejected the Bypass at the May town meeting.

Gerald J. Grady, UMass coordinator for Community Relations responded to Minear's accusation that the administration is trying to pass something by the University community saying, "Believe you me on this, it's nothing like that."

He said they are working on the mandate of the Faculty Senate referring to its approval of former Bypass plans.

"Now should we go back to the Faculty Senate and say, 'are you sure you want this?' " he asked.

He said he has been in constant contact with the co-presidents of the Student Government Association, Paul M. Cronin and Jay A. Martus, regarding the Northwest Road although he admitted student governing bodies were not called together by the Administration in the summer when decisions were being made.

"In hindsight, I wish we had," he said.

Minear reminded students that the issue of 140 Marks Meadow School children who would have to cross the intersection of the proposed Northwest Road and North Pleasant Street on their way to school has still not been resolved.

The safety of these elementary school students was a major issue in the defeat of the Northeast Bypass last spring.

"This bypass would call for a major new intersection even if it wasn't extended," he said.

The Amherst Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors is asking the town to continue the University's Rte. 116 — North Pleasant Street proposed road passed the Sylvan dormitory area and up to East Pleasant Street.

Minear said the Cahmber of Commerce proposal would involve a "major highway 44 feet wide" running behind the Sylvan living area.

Minear also emphasized that University plans to alleviate traffic from North Pleasant Street, in addition to the construction of Northwest Road, include rerouting buses off that street, making them "less convenient."

Grady agreed that some bus stops would be relocated but noted the new route is "going to help those going to the infirmary."

Earlier in the evening both Minear and Grady spoke before a regular meeting of the Amherst Planning Board.

Grady said that the results of a University-conducted "turning study" carried out over the last ten days show that estimates of southbound traffic that would take the proposed Northwest Road instead of North Pleasant Street were even "much higher than we anticipated."

Earlier studies conducted by the university predicted that 1140 campus registered cars would be diverted by the Northwest Road off North Pleasant Street twice a day.

However, material handed out by Minear at the meetings stated: "Section A (the Northwest Road) would not divert a single commuter car from the campus portion of North Pleasant Street."

"Traffic from the north headed

Increase in budget request

By MATT LYON
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees approved a $16 million increase in their budget request for the 1978 fiscal year, at their meeting on the UMass-Worcester campus yesterday.

In other action, the trustees decided to charge an "appropriate committee of the board", with responsibility to "review" the method by which the Massachusetts Public Interest Group (MassPIRG) obtains funds from University students.

The board also adopted a "tentative" amendment to its by-laws stipulating conditions under which they may close their doors to the public and enter into executive session.

The trustees will send to the Massachusetts State Legislature a $124 million budget request for fiscal year 1978, following yesterday's nearly unanimous approval of the measure.

State Secretary of Educational Affairs and UMass Trustee Paul Parks raised ardent but lone opposition to the proposed figure.

"The governor (Michael S. Dukakis) asked me to tell you," he said, "the fiscal condition of the Commonwealth is in a tough position."

"It is necessary for us to continue to consider ourselves in a condition of austerity," said Parks.

The "upswing" in the economy, that was expected, has not occurred, Parks said, pointing to the increasing budget demands from collective-bargaining measures, Medic Aid and Medicare increases, pension increases for state employes and rising hospital costs, as causes for the state's continued financial plight.

"I feel very strongly," he said, "there should be some reconsideration by the members of the board."

He appealed to the trustees to place their request "in the context of the fiscal condition of the Commonwealth."

"To assume the increase will be approved" by the legislature, is to consent to "an increase in taxes," Parks said.

"We are all citizens of the Commonwealth... consider the budget as a trustee-citizen... see the need to pare this budget further."

Parks said he realized the requested figure represents an "honest effort" based on the assessed needs of the University, but he asserted he has "no choice" but to "hold the line" on any further budget increases.

"We should be able to compromise on a figure less than the one requested," Parks said.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery noted that for a period of several years, when the University suffered budget cuts it had nevertheless "maintained its enrollment figures."

"We can only do this for so long... without decreasing the quality of education being offered," Bromery said.

Chairman of the Board Joseph Healy said it is the trustees' "obligation to determine our needs, in order to maintain the job we've been [illegible]

Co-President of the Undergraduate Student Senate Jay A. Martus asked to be recognized, and when given the floor he stated "this budget is inadequate... all areas of our programs are restricted."

"In the interest of maintaining my position for the government of the Commonwealth," Parks said, "I introduce a motion that $108,075,125 be the limit of the budget request by this board."

The figure represents the University's total operating budget approved for the current fiscal year, a point which Parks noted.. "This will maintain the limit of last year."

The motion was seconded, but Parks registered a lone "aye" in favor when the vote was called.

The issue was laid to rest when the vote was taken on the original proposal of a $124 million request and it passed.

Holding off discussion of the controversial MassPIRG funding issue, the board unanimously sent the "whole matter" to an as yet undetermined committee for "review."

Student researchers for MassPIRG have charged that the board is under pressure from anti-bottle bill forces, to review the mechanism by which the public research group receives funds from University students, in an attempt to shut-off the source of the Nader-like group's finance.

As part of its consumer-oriented work, MassPIRG has been waging an intensive campaign to pass a referendum on the November ballot that would require a five-cent deposit on all cans and bottles sold in Massachusetts.

Most of the consumer advocate group's present funding comes from University students who are able to designate to MassPIRG a two-dollar optional charge appearing on the semester fee bill.

The mechanism, known as "negative check-off," allows for the charge to be rendered unless the student marks the appropriate space on the semester bill indicating a desire not to donate the two-dollars.

It is the same procedure now used to sell health insurance to students, by a private insurance company contracted to the University.

The issue was raised before the board in late August when UMass President Robert C. Wood issued a three-page memo to members of the trustee Executive Committee, stating that he had received "inquiries" questioning the University's participation in collecting the MassPIRG fee.

UMass Trustee Robert J. Spiller, president of the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank, initiated action before the board to "review" the MassPIRG funding procedure.

Spiller asserts that his interest in the funding procedure is as a trustee with regard to the legality of a private "registered lobby group" being funded with the sanction of a public institution.

"I strongly resent allegations that I am speaking for the bottle manufacturers on this issue," said Spiller. "I don't even know the bottle people."

Judge clears two students in Hadley robbery caper

By KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

Three UMass students were cleared of larceny charges yesterday when a verdict of "no probable cause" was handed down in a hearing by Judge Luke Ryan in Northampton District Court.

Leon J. Thomas, Mark B. Wimbish and Keith B. Dixson were charged with assault and battery, and the robbery of over $500 from a Rte. 9 Cumberland Farms store in Hadley on Sept. 11.

"Legally, they can still indict, but I don't think they will," said Arthur E. Serota, attorney for Wimbish and Dixson.

"Probable cause" was found against Thomas for possessing martial arts nun-chucks, legally classified as a dangerous weapon.

His case will be brought before the grand jury.

The nun-chucks were found in the trunk of Thomas' car during a search conducted by State Police in connection with the robbery.

William Brown, Thomas' lawyer, said Thomas as a "95 per cent chance of winning the case."

"I'm going to see that it's malprocessed. He had a legitimate reason for having it in his car. He took it from a younger child so the child couldn't use them and hurt someone," said Brown.

District Court Prosecutor Robert Doyle presented Patrick Cooley, the manager of the Cumberland Farms, and State Trooper Norman Andrew as witnesses to determine probable cause for the Commonwealth.

In a statement given on the day of the robbery, Cooley did not not describe clothing, height of facial features of the robbers and told a state trooper, "I wasn't sure I could identify them," said Cooley in his testimony yesterday.

Andrews told Cooley that the three were already arrested and Cooley was to come to UMass, said Cooley.

"I was going there to identify the three fellas who were in the store," Cooley told the courtroom.

Cooley said he was brought to a room at UMass with a window and told to look through.

"There were three Black males in the room. No one else," Cooley said.

When asked if he thought that the persons arrested were the ones in the store, Cooley said, "I assumed that."

"In the store, one of them had a red shirt," Cooley said under cross-examination by Attorney Serota.

"I saw a red shirt in the room and that triggered a reaction. No other clothing triggered a reaction," said Cooley.

According to his own testimony, the robbers entered, and while he was watching, took over $500 dollars from the back room of the store without once threatening Cooley, holding him or showing a weapon.

Andrew was also present at the identification at UMass.

CIA 'necessary' claims former director

William E. Colby, former head of the CIA, speaks to an audience in Springfield, last night. (Staff photo by Chris Bourne)

By RICK GUREGHIAN
Collegian Staff

William E. Colby, former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), told a crowd of about 500 last night "the American people must be educated to perceive U.S. Intelligence as a vital and necessary part of a functioning government."

Colby, the opening speaker of the Springfield Public Forum's Bicentennial Series at Kiley Junior High School, emphasized the need for a strong, but "law-abiding" intelligence agency, adding that "secrecy, adventure, and ruthlessness were a logical kind of image" exhibited by the CIA.

The former agency director, who is touring the country on a lecture tour format, said that there are "still spies, still hostile countries, still secret laboratories, still secret politburo's, and that the only way we'll learn the secrets they're trying to protect is through a strong intelligence force."

Colby reflected on the recent uproar caused by revelations concerning CIA covert activities that ran the breadth of believability.

The former director, who had appeared before both Senate and House Select Committee's investigating the agency in the past, said "We keep insisting that intelligence operate under the law here in the U.S. For many years, people thought that intelligence was beyond this — no more. The problem is that we had Senators who didn't want to know what was going on, who preferred to close their eyes to the covert activities. Now we have oversight Committees, a small number of Senators and Representatives who have a direct say in the operation and direction of the Agency."

Colby added, "Their perusal of the Agency, along with the revelations that have surfaced in the newspapers concerning attempts at assassinations and the like, have opened up the cloak that once covered the CIA."

But the former director was even more succinct as to what the American public would tolerate in the future. Said Colby, "Two events changed the conception of what the American people would accept about intelligence: Vietnam and Watergate! Prior to that, we had a Congress that didn't want to know what the chilling facts might be about intelligence, and a populace that didn't care. Now, you can't keep a secret about the Agency!!"

During the question and answer period following the speech, Colby, under questioning from a rather irate adult, admitted there were problems within the intelligence branch of the government, but added, "We do need some secrets, but we also need a better public understanding in intelligence in our country, of which we do not have today."

The former director also made a distinction between Communist nations and right-wing military dictatorships, both of which have felt the wrath of the Agency's disruptive arm. He added, "The C.I.A. has usually helped countries whose policies were acceptable and compatible with those of the United States."

But, under questioning by a young man who asked him to cite the difference between Communist nations and right-wing military dictatorships of South Korea and Iran, Colby agreed their was really not much difference, although "right-wing dictatorships have been strategically more important to the welfare of the U.S. foreign policy."

At the Nuke Teach-In...

While radioactive fallout was raining down on the east coast this weekend, speakers for the 17 workshops at the Nuclear Teach-In, held in the Campus Center yesterday and Tuesday, were putting the finishing touches on their presentations.

And although they were unaware of the fallout caused by a Chinese nuclear blast nine days ago, the speakers and the workshops they were to hold, would concentrate on educating and promoting citizen awareness of nuclear power.

Diane Woolf, co-ordinator of the sponsoring organization, the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group said, "I'm satisifed with the results because it exposed the issue to the area, and helped people to learn about citizen action."

An estimated 400 to 500 people attended the 17 workshops, whose topics ranged from "Accident Hazards of Nuclear Power Plants" to "Energy Alternatives in the Home."

In one workshop, entitled "Capital Intensive Nuclear Power vs. Labor Intensive Alternatives," Richard Grossman of the Environmentalists for Full Employment, said he blamed the capitalistic system for promoting nuclear power.

Grossman said nuclear power plant waste, in the form of plutonium, a toxic substance, remains radioactive for 24,000 years.

Richard Webb, author of the "Accidents of Nuclear Power," at the "Accident Hazards of Nuclear Power Plants" workshop, said, "The industry and federal government do not analyze for the worst type of accidents. There are theoretical and experimental deficiencies."

"We do not want to live in just the fear of the unknown," he said.

If a plant exploded, it would cover an area the size of Ohio and Indiana with radioactive material, causing a 100 per chance of lung cancer for those living in the area, according to Webb.

A UMass student, Michael Parenti, who held the workshop, "Why Nuclear Power, Politics, and Profits?", said "Nuclear Power is the rational outcome of an irrational system." The large energy corporations "maximize profit," he said.

One person who has chosen the "rational" approach is UMass Prof. Klaus Kroner. At a seminar today, entitled "Energy Alternatives in the Home," he explained how his home is provided with energy.

Kroner has built both a solar energy converter and a windmill, and has reduced his heating and electricity bill by 25 per cent, he said.

"You don't have to change your lifestyle, it just takes a little forethought," he said.

Wally Nelson of the Clamshell Alliance, a national environmental organization, discussed the necessity of non-violent civil disobedience if citizens seek to prevent further construction of nuclear power plants.

Nelson used the August occupation of the nuclear power plant now under construction at Seabrook, N.H. as an example.

"What else can we do? Breaking the law for conscience sake because we feel duty bound to say 'this is wrong.' This must be stopped," he said.

Anna Mayo of the Village Voice said, "There was irresponsible, desperate press coverage of the nuclear power issue." She also used the example of the Seabrook occupation, which got "little if any" coverage in the major papers, she said.

She gave, as the major reasons for this, the fact that reporters and editors get their news from government regulatory agencies. Mayo presented her statements at a workshop entitled "Nuclear Industry and the Media."

Michael Barnes, staff director of Western Massachusetts Fair Share, discussed the advantages of the uniform electric rates (question 7 on the November ballot).

"The present utility rate structure encourages consumption," he said, "and if doesn't pay for individuals to conserve."

"The use of flat rate electricity would promote energy conservation," he said, "and eliminate the necessity to build nuclear power plants."

The Massachusetts Power Authority (question 4) on the November ballot was discussed by William Obear of the Greenfield Alternative Energy Coalition.

"Public power would give the voter better control over the utilities because elected representatives would be directly responsible to the public," said Obear.

"Municipals would be more interested in conserving energy and less interested in profit-making," he said.

Nuke fight needs more 'organizing'

By PAT BEINAR
Collegian Staff

Only by organizing, educating others, and saying "no way" to the Public Service Company of New Hampshire will the state's citizens stop the building of the nuclear power plant in their town of Seabrook, said Sam Lovejoy, a local anti-nuclear power spokesperson.

He stressed to a UMass audience last night that citizens will only be heard if they all join in the fight together. On the local, as well as the national level, the anti-nuclear movement sits in the middle of other movements, said Lovejoy.

"All the environmental movements must go hand in hand," Lovejoy said. "The anti-nuke movement must communicate with all other environmental movements if they are to win the nuclear battle."

"Students, mainly in New England, are getting together and communicating with outsiders on this issue now more than ever. Now that technology is running rampant in society, citizens must work to humanize, decentralize, and put a stop to it before it destroys the environment," he said.

Lovejoy began his speech by tracing the history of the nuclear bomb from the military as a "peaceful bomb" to the use of nuclear power today by major power plants in production. He blames the present state of foreign relations on our use of other country's uranium for our own nuclear use.

"When I look at America, I see a fat, 1000-pound man going to Africa, South America and Third World countries saying, "I'd like to form an energy contract with you," Lovejoy continued.

"But then I see the fearful countries responding, "I won't trust you if you, don't go on a diet."

"In other words, America is a giant energy consumer with a giant energy diet, and no country will respect us without a crash diet. If we don't change, we'll never get along with any countries, he said.

"To move toward a more humane democracy, we must decentralize our power," said Lovejoy.

"Environmental organizations will be heard if they insist on collective bargaining rights as unions did in the past to obtain the rights the environment deserves," he said.

In front of the podium with the sign which read, "Come to Seabrook, the site where we are stopping the nuke," Lovejoy added a final, "We will stop the nuke."

"And you can only estimate that it lands in the air — for 250,000 years, Nader added.

Nader also brought up the economics, where costs for building nuclear power plants have risen from $300 million in 1974 to $1.6 billion today. Nader reported that the price of uranium has risen from $8 a pound in 1973 to $40 per pound today.

"And officials estimate the cost will rise to $100 a pound within the next year." he said.

Nader commented on accidents in recent years occurring at nuclear power plants, including one where a fire resulted in three deaths, a 16 month shutdown, and total loss $200 million winning the prize for the most costly fire even in the country.

Nader gave qualified support to Jimmy Carter's stand on nuclear power. He said the Democratic predential candidate has said he would make nuclear power his lowest priority in energy development.

Nader said the Ford-Rockefeller Bill to "evaluate" and subsidise the development of breeder reactors (used to create plutonium) in nuclear power plants shows corporate reliance in federal funding.

"Corporations simply have used up their funds in developing nuclear power plants, have run to the consumer and soaked them up through taxes," said Nader. Now, instead of realizing they have no product, no customer, and drop the whole idea, they run to the federal government for money."

Speaker lectures on solar energy

By JUNE GREIG
Collegian Staff

"We must make major investments in solar energy systems and stop talking about research and development," Prof. William Heronemous, of the UMass civil engineering department, said last night.

In his speech on "Alternative Energy," Heronemous told approximately 375 persons in the Campus Center auditorium that "solar energy is an astronomical source of energy which must be used now."

"The reason we're interested in solar energy," he said, "is because we're looking around the U.S. and the world and finding major faults with present power systems."

"The basic energy problem is that we're trying to increase exponential growth from finite resources," said the professor.

Heronemous cited M. King Hubbard, a geologist, who said 30 years ago there was not enough natural gas and fuel and the resources would come to an end. He warned against becoming dependent on finite sources of energy.

"People peddling petroleum knew it would come to an end and bought coal and uranium mines as alternate sources," he said.

"I insist in another 10 to 15 years, solar energy will be far less expensive than any coal, petroleum, nuclear, or fission sources," he said.

Heronemous said current energy policies create environmental problems by releasing "a cascade of stresses to the earth's surface which it cannot tolerate". We can't keep releasing heat and driving up the temperature of the earth's surface without causing serious problems," he said.

Eventually the earth's temperature would melt polar ice, said Heronemous, and over one-third of our food-producing land would become ocean.

There are a number of solar energy processes and in its diversity lies its strength, he said.

Heronemous discussed several methods of solar energy including photosynthesis, hydro electricity, flat plate collectors, photovoltaic process or the "photo cell", low and high temperature photo thermal processes, wind power and ocean thermal differences.

"Solar energy is a diffuse resource because it shuts on and off and needs storage during the night," said Heronemous.

"Solar energy will add expense but we must face up to that," he said. "People are going to realize that the expense is worth it".

Heronemous said wind energy has been very important to civilizations in the past and he is confident that something will be done with it.

"We may have a new tourist attraction of windmills growing vegetables in Arizona," he said.

Much of our agriculture has moved to places where there is little rain and natural gas is needed to pump water for irrigation. This source will be gone in 15 years, he said, and the government is considering the use of windmills to pump the water, he concluded.

FBI involvement alleged

By CASSIE ECKHOF

Sarah Nelson, a spokesperson for the National Organization of Women (NOW) yesterday said that many investigators blame the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) for the death of Karen Silkwood.

Silkwood was an employee of the Kerr-McGee Corporation and was, at the time of her death, delivering confidential documents to a New York Times correspondent charging Kerr-McGee with improprieties.

Silkwood tested plutonium fuel rods for Kerr-McGee in Crescent, Oklahoma and became aware of the high plutonium contamination levels among the workers, said Nelson.

Sarah Nelson (Staff photo by Kris Furrer)

Plutonium is one of the most deadly substances known and an explosion would necessitate the evacuation of an area as large as Pennsylvania for hundreds of years, said Nelson.

Silkwood became aghast at Kerr-McGee's lack of concern for the contamination and became an activist in the Oil Company and Atomic Workers Union, (OCAW), said Nelson.

She had documented some hazards the workers were being exposed to and saw that Kerr-McGee was making no attempt to keep plutonium contamination levels as low as possible, said Nelson.

In October, 1974, Silkwood discovered that she too was contaminated. High levels of plutonium were found in bologna and cheese in her refrigerator. NOW suspects that this was planted by Kerr-McGee, said Nelson.

Kerr-McGee claims that Silkwood contaminated herself to become a martyr to the OCAW, according to Nelson.

Silkwood's car went off the road on November 3, 1974, while en route to a meeting with the New York Times correspondent.

Witnesses at the scene reported paper scattered near the accident scene, but none of the paper was recovered, said Nelson.

The Oklahoma Highway Patrol reported that Silkwood fell asleep at the wheel, NOW has refused to accept this theory, said Nelson.

A.O. Pipkin, an investigator hired by OCAW, concluded that she had been driven off the road by another car, said Nelson.

NOW organized a campaign to launch an investigation into Silkwood's death and asked the U.S. Department of Justice for help. The Justice Department denied NOW's request but subsequently investigations were launched by a national news network and the U.S. Senate.

The OCAW, NOW, Supporters of the Silkwood Coalition and Carl Morgan, the father of health physics, all testified that they blame collusion for Silkwood's death, said Nelson.

Kerr-McGee had all this time been trying to crush the OCAW within its company. Pinkerton guards, notorious for working against unions, were hired to break up the union, said Nelson.

It has been two years since Karen Silkwood's death and her parents are charging Kerr-McGee and the FBI with the responsibility for her death, said Nelson.

They are also charging that she was denied her First Amendment rights by not being allowed to deliver the documents to the correspondent, said Nelson.

Seabrook suspension challenged

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Lawyers for the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution said yesterday they will ask the U.S. Court of Appeals to overturn a decision allowing construction to continue on the controversial Seabrook nuclear power station.

Attorney Anthony Roisman said the motion against the Nuclear Regulatory Commission would be filed with the federal court of appeals in Boston. The coalition already has a petition pending in the appeals court to halt construction of the $2 billion oceanside plant.

On Tuesday, the NRC overruled its own appeals board which had ordered a temporary halt in construction of the plant, pending the outcome of a national environmental study on the impact of radioactive waste disposal from nuclear plants.

The Seabrook plant is being built by a consortium of electric companies headed by the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire.

The NRC is conducting the study under orders from a federal court. However, the commission decided on its own to stop issuing nuclear construction permits until the waste issue was resolved.

The appeals board decided to include Seabrook in the ban because Public Service received its building permit only two weeks before the court order.

Frank Ingram, an NRC spokesman, said the commission decided to let construction at Seabrook continue because a session has been scheduled later this month to review the nuclear waste issue.

Roisman said he considered the NRC decision "the most outrageous thing the commission has done in the years I've been dealing with it."

He said the NRC was going against its own decision to temporarily halt construction it can to protect applicants. It is a very disgraceful opinion."

A lawyer for the Seacoast Anti-Pollution League, which has joined in the petition to block the Seabrook station, said he considered the NRC decision "absolutely illogical."

"I just don't understand how the commission with only two working days... can somehow undo a policy which they themselves established on Aug. 13," said attorney Robert Backus.

He said his group has not received either the initial appeals board order halting construction or the stay issued Tuesday by the NRC.

"As a mere party to the proceedings. I don't seem to have one. Although I believe the company has one, and Gov. Meldrim Thomson has one."

Ford demands report on Chinese nuke blast

[UPI] — President Ford has instructed the National Security Council to prepare a report on radioactive fallout across the United States from a Chinese nuclear blast 10 days ago, the White House announced yesterday.

The report was to be forwarded to the President in San Francisco, site of last night's debate with Democratic presidential nominee Jimmy Carter on national defense and foreign policy issues.

The White House announcement followed a statement by the State Department which said it would re-emphasize to China strong U.S. opposition to atmospheric nuclear testing because of heavier than normal radioactive fallout from the Sept. 26 blast.

Federal and state health officials from the Pacific Northwest to the East Coast monitored radiation levels from pasture and cropland because of the fallout, which was washed out of the atmosphere last weekend by heavy rains.

Although higher than normal radiation levels were detected on crops and grass, there was no warning issued because fallout amounts were within safety limits.

The Federal Energy, Research and Development Administration said the fallout presents no risk to public health but the levels are the highest since the height of nuclear weapons testing by the United States and Russia in the 1950s and early 1960s.

The major contamination last weekend was in eastern Pennsylvania and parts of New Jersey.

Thomas Gerusky, director of the Pennsylvania Bureau of Radiological Health, said initial tests on milk from two dairies in that state showed evidence of radiation contamination. The cows which produced the milk ate grass contaminated with radioactive Iodine-131.

Gerusky said radiation levels from the milk were within safety standards, but warned, "We still have more tests to run and the contamination could well pass the 'action levels' we have set."

Health officials are concerned primarily about contaminated milk and the effect it could have on infants and unborn children.

Cows that eat contaminated grass concentrate the radioactive iodine in their milk. Iodine is attracted to human thyroids and in concentrations much higher than have been reported from the Chinese test can lead to tumors, officials said.

Frederick Z. Brown, a U.S. State Department spokesman, said the United States will restate to China its opposition to testing nuclear weapons in the atmosphere.

"The United States has long opposed the atmospheric testing of nuclear devices and our position on this is well known to all governments," he said. "I understand we are making our position clear again to the Peoples Republic of China."

OR October 20

8:00-10:30 p.m. in the following rooms: Herter 227 — last names from A thru L; Herter 231 — last names from M thru Z.

ORAL TEST

October 21

All students should report at 7:00 p.m., Bartlett 301.

A student may take either the written test or the oral test for a three credit exemption. A student may take both tests for a six credit exemption. Only in a few exceptional cases will a student be awarded a six credit exemption based on written test scores.

The WRITTEN test consists of two parts (both of which are to be taken on the same night). The first part of the test is a multiple-choice test of rhetorical skills. The second part is an essay. Students will be given three topics, asked to choose one and write a 500 word essay on the topic.

The ORAL test consists of two parts (both of which are to be taken on the same night). The first part of the test is a short-answer test which asks speakers to reveal the rhetorical decisions made in preparing their speeches. The second part is a persuasive speech. The speech is to be PREPARED IN ADVANCE. A copy of the assignment may be obtained in the Rhetoric Office (308C Bartlett).

Bring a student ID and two Number 2 pencils along with 25 cents to help defray the costs of supplies and printing.

"WHY WOULD A NEW YORK STUDIO ENGINEER LIKE ME RECOMMEND SEIDEN SOUND?"

The reason is simple. I want you to get everything out of a recording that I put in.

What do I put in? Hours and hours of work, first of all. Getting just the right sound from every musician—before I even start rolling tape.

And by the time I'm finished recording the music, it'll have passed through over $500,000 worth of highly sophisticated microphones, consoles, equalizers, limiters, multi-track recorders, monitors, lathes, and more.

To get all that out, you need someone who knows as much about playback as I know about recording. That's Seiden Sound.

They've got the experience to customize a system to the characteristics of your room, and the qualities of the music you like. And they do it within the limits of the budget you set!

I recommend them because they're the best. The leading upstate sound dealer, with more brands, convenience, experience and expertise. Seiden Sound does everything better, right down to warranties and payment plans.

Seiden Sound. What I produce, they know how to reproduce.

Ford — Carter disagree totally

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — President Ford claimed he has led America to new peaks of power in a peaceful world and Jimmy Carter accused Ford of secrecy, weakness and failure of leadership yesterday in a campaign debate laced with sarcasm and apparent rancor on both sides.

Disagreeing right down the line, the two candidates reviewed all the major foreign and defense issues confronting America in a 90-minute, second presidential campaign debate that turned finally into an acrimonious argument over moral superiority.

Ford at one point claimed the Soviet Union does not dominate Eastern Europe. Carter laughed at that response. The President glared at him, jaw tensed, as he made his rebuttals on various points.

Carter, seeming much more poised than in the first debate, constantly baited Ford by name, and, hitting the morality issue, said America must "revert back to the stature and respect we've had in the world under previous administrations.

"I don't know when this will come, but I can tell you it won't come if Gerald Ford is elected president!"

Ford, looking grim and never cracking a smile throughout a debate in which he accused Carter of flirting with European Communist forces, seemed ready for the moral argument and pounced on it late in the debate.

His voice booming, seeming irritated with what he called Carter's "bragging" about current unemployment positions, he said: "Gov. Carter talks about morality in foreign policy. The foreign policy of the United States meets the highest standards of morality:

"The United States is at peace. What's more moral than peace?"

Poking the air for emphasis with his left hand, he ticked off a series of moral accomplishments and concluded: "What is more moral than for the Ford administration to take the lead for peace in southern Africa and in the Middle East?"

In other exchanges, the President also said the United States is now "at the peak of its power" in the Middle East while the Soviets are waning, claimed he would keep military defenses strong while Carter would deal from a "position of weakness" and said the Soviets now seem interested in compromising differences over strategic arms limitation.

Carter ridiculed Ford's record as a negotiator with the Russians, pledged he would keep defenses strong while ending the secret conduct of foreign policy, said Secretary of State Henry Kissinger is "the president of this country" for foreign policy conduct and accused Ford of lacking vision and leadership.

When Ford returned to his private residence after the debate, he said he "felt better than the last time."

At stake were the uncommitted votes in the audience expected to range upward to 100 million persons. The first poll immediately after the debate — conducted by the Roper organization on about 300 people — showed 40 per cent thinking Carter won to 30 per cent for Ford and 30 per cent undecided.

In one exchange that seemed to stun both Ford's questioner and Carter, the President alleged that the Soviets do not dominate Eastern Europe and never will so long as he is president.

"I don't believe ... that the Yugoslavians consider themselves dominated by the Soviet Union," he said in response to a question on Soviet compliance with Helsinki accords on human rights.

"I don't believe that the Romanians consider themselves dominated by the Soviet Union. I don't believe that the Poles consider themselves dominated by the Soviet Union.

"Each of those countries is independent or autonomous."

Asked by his questioner whether he really meant to say the Soviets were not dominant in that area, Ford replied: "The United States does not concede those countries are dominated by the Soviet Union."

Carter began his reply with a laugh and shot back: "I would like to see Mr. Ford convince the Polish Americans and the Czech Americans and the Hungarian Americans in this country that those countries don't lieve under the domination and the supervision of the Soviet Union behind the Iron Curtain."

If elected Carter may start denim tux craze

ATLANTA [UPI] — Blue denim tuxedos may become the new fashion in men's formal wear if Jimmy Carter is elected president, according to the head of a clothing firm.

Benjamin J. Gingiss, head of what he says is the world's largest company specializing in formal wear, designed the new line of denim evening wear with the Georgia Democrat in mind.

"We haven't had anybody in the White House with flair in clothing since the Kennedy's, and if Gov. Carter is elected, I think the denim tuxedo I designed will be just the thing he wants. I think he'll love it, even if he isn't elected," said Gingiss, who has sold formal wear to Carter in the past.

Although Gingiss originally planned to give Carter the tuxedo, the candidate has a strict policy about not accepting gifts.

"Of course, I'll sell it to him for about $150," Gingiss said.

He says if he designed a tuxedo for President Ford it would be the traditional version, possibly with a cutaway jacket.

The formal wear manufacturer began his company in 1936 when he borrowed $500 and now he boasts over 130 stores across the country.

"You see, Gov. Carter has done a lot of business with our Atlanta stores and we already had his size 39-40 regular when we conceived the idea of a denim tux," Gingiss said.

The Atlanta stores sold formal wear to Carter and his family for his two sons' weddings and business between Gingiss and the Plains peanut farmer has continued to be brisk, he said.

The denim design doesn't look like a pair of bibbed overalls — it's a three-piece outfit with a vest and navy satin trim on the slacks, buttons and around the collar. The fabric can be worn yearround, Gingiss said.

"National leaders have a profound influence on the way people live, act and dress. President Kennedy showed this with his clothing, even creating a new knot in ties. His hairstyle even caught on," he said.

Calm nerves considered in decorating

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Interior decorators did their best to make President Ford and Jimmy Carter feel relaxed in hastily furnished dressing rooms for their televised debate at the Palace of Fine Arts.

Each of the quarters had an easy chair and ottoman. The rooms were shaped differently but had low-keyed neutral colors and furniture to soothe the nerves.

The decorating job was done almost overnight by a home furnishings center called The Icehouse, with 10 firms lending material for the project presided over by designer Dawn McKenna.

A splash of color was added by Oriental rugs and flower pots.

Before the transformation, the rooms needed painting, were bathed in dreary fluorescent light and had carpets of faded cinnamon.

Both rooms had mirrors along the side, the kind actors and chorus girls use to size themselves up before going on stage. Ford's room was to the left of the stage in back, Carter's to the right.

Ford links Carter — Butz

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — President Ford criticized Jimmy Carter hours before their second campaign debate yesterday, likening Carter's remarks on "ethnic purity" to former Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz' racial slur against blacks.

Ford also told reporters he could not help but feel that the issuance Tuesday of a congressional investigative report critizing his handling of the 1975 Mayaguez incident "is another example of partisan politics."

At the same time, the White House announced that Charles Miller, captain of the Mayaguez, had telephoned Ford to express his "displeasure and disagreement" with the report, which said the President used unnecessary force and wasted lives in sending Marines to rescue the Mayaguez crew.

The President spoke with reporters on the sidewalk outside the Palace of Fine Arts theater after he had inspected the set for his second televised debate with Carter.

An hour earlier, visiting the theater himself, Carter had said he felt Butz' resignation and the off-color racial joke that caused it were "legitimate" topics for the debate because, he alleged, they reflect the character of a ranking administration official.

Reddening slightly, Ford said, "It seems to me that Gov. Carter ought to think back on his comment on ethnic purity. "I don't think his remark was pure itself."

Oath stand standing up

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The metal scaffolding is already up for the inaugural stand where the next president of the United States — either Gerald Ford or Jimmy Carter — will be sworn in at noon, Thursday, Jan. 20.

A month before the election, the stark scaffolding at the foot of the Capitol steps is the first visible sign of preparations underway for the inaugural.

The inauguration of presidents and vice presidents is governed for the most part by tradition. But this year there will be some changes dictated by economics.

William Cochrane, executive director the Joint Congressional Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies, said the cost will be cut sharply.

The 1972 swearing-in of Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew for a second term cost $575,000. But the bid from Skinker and Garrett Inc. of Baltimore for staging next January's event is $325,000.

Cochrane said most of the savings will come from eliminating viewer stands in the parking plaza and over steps leading to the House and Senate wings of the Capitol.

The stands in the plaza, facing the inaugural stand the East Front of the Capitol, will be replaced with 17,500 folding chairs that can be set up quickly. That means "during the Bicentennial year more of the plaza will still be accessible to the public" prior to the inauguration, Cochrane said.

He said stands on the Senate and House steps provide poor vantage points.

Cuban jet crashes killing seventy-three

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados [UPI] — A mysterious explosion shortly after takeoff yesterday sent a Cuban Airlines DC8 jetliner crashing into the Caribbean Sea about three miles off Barbados, killing all 73 persons aboard.

Island residents in small craft and small boats from the luxury cruise ship Cunard Countess raced to the crash scene, but found nothing but dead bodies, pieces of wreckage and luggage bobbing on the water.

The Federal Aviation Administration in Washington said initial reports showed "an inflight explosion" shook the plane shortly before it nosedived into the Caribbean about 1:35 p.m. EDT.

Although there have been two previous explosions in Barbados connected with Cuban Airlines during the last three months, there was no immediate evidence that a bomb had been planted on board. Divers were sent down to investigage the wreckage.

Shortly after the crash, a marine operator told the U.S. Coast Guard that would-be rescuers found 35 bodies in the water, but "there were no survivors."

The Cunard Countess, the British line's newest luxury liner, on a visit to Bridgetown, sent boats to aid in the search, but crew members said hours later they found nothing but pieces of airplane and luggage.

Bodies floated up from the wreckage for more than two hours.

The explosion, aboard Cuban Airlines flight 455 from Barbados to Kingston, Jamaica, and Havana, Cuba, came less than three months after an early morning bomb blast ripped apart the Barbados offices of British West Indian Airways, Cuban Airlines' local agent.

On July 9, the night before the BWIA blast, a bomb exploded at Kingston's International Airport in luggage destined for a flight to Cuba.

News in Brief

Thailand government overtaken in coup

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Thailand's military leaders seized the government yesterday and declared martial law in a swift coup climaxing a day of bloody fighting between leftist students and right wingers that left hundreds of casualties.

Prime Minister Seni Pramoj was "invited" to the headquarters of the new military authorities in downtown Bangkok and placed under arrest—or as an official announcement said, given protection "for his security."

Black voters lose on election change

BOSTON (UPI) — A federal judge yesterday denied a petition by black voters seeking to change the way the Boston School Committee, which sets the city's educational policy, is elected.

U.S. District Court Judge Joseph Tauro rejected the contention the current "at-large" election method excludes blacks from the electoral process as far as the School Committee is concerned.

The black residents sought an injunction which would force the city to create an election system which would not dilute or minimize black participation in the school committee.

The all-white, five member panel controls 153 city schools which are undergoing a third year of a controversial desegregation order by federal Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. No blacks have been elected to the panel in recent years.

Dukakis stands behind handgun ban

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday he supports a proposal on the ballot in November banning private ownership of handguns in Massachusetts, but the state does not have the money to purchase guns from their owners.

"There is no use pretending that we can deal with violence in our society if we don't take tough steps to control the weapons of violence themselves," Dukakis said at a news conference.

The referendum provides for state purchase of privately owned handguns, and while Dukakis said the state cannot afford this, he said the matter of disposal would be "an open question" if the public approves the question.

Case continued for Mahoney murder

LOWELL (UPI) — Robert Wilson, 27, of Keene, N.H. entered pleas of not guilty to three murder charges in the slayings of Dr. Hugh Mahoney, his wife and son in their Tewksbury home last New Year's Eve.

Wilson, one of four persons suspected in the slayings, was committed to the Lawrence House of Correction without bond and his case continued until Oct. 14 in Lowell District.

Wilson failed to meet a rendition deadline Tuesday in New Hampshire where he was being held on another charge and was transported to Lowell yesterday morning.

Alcohol linked to unmasculine features

BOSTON (AP) — Medical researchers say they have found the first direct evidence in nonalcoholic males that drinking alcohol reduces the production of testosterone — the hormone that gives men masculine characteristics.

It was long been known that men may be relatively impotent after drinking, and alcoholics completely impotent — even after they stop drinking.

Testosterone governs such male sexual characteristics as sperm production and facial and body hair. Without it boys could not undergo puberty.

Researchers from several institutions in New York City conducted tests on 11 males volunteers. Each volunteer was given a little more than an ounce of alcohol every three hours around the clock — not enough to make them drunk. All were given enough to eat.

Testosterone in the blood was measured in four of the men 24 days after the start of the drinking. In three, the concentration had fallen by 29 to 55 per cent.

Saxe defense rests its case keeping their fingers crossed

BOSTON [UPI] Closing arguments began yesterday in the Susan Saxe armed robbery-felony murder trial after the prosecution and defense rested their cases, the defense gambling that any witnesses it might call could do Ms. Saxe more harm than good.

"I have advised that the defendant rests," Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin announced to the nine-man, six-woman jury. "I expect to be able to give you this case for deliberation by tomorrow, Thursday morning."

The decision by the defense to rest its case on the testimony of only one witness — a Philadelphia lawyer called last week — and the belief it can discredit the testimony of two admitted accomplices in the 170 robbery of the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co. surprised everyone.

"It's good," defense lawyer Nancy A. Gertner said afterwards. "The government saved stuff, for rebuttal to our witnesses, that won't come in — ever."

Ms. Gertner and her partner, Thomas Shapiro, had filed a witness list containing about 15 names. However, only one was called, Philadelphia lawyer Benjamin Lerner who was asked last week about any deals he might have negotiated to save his client, prosecution witness Michael Fleisher, from prosecution on the nine counts of accessory after the fact he faces.

Prosecutor John T. Gaffney, who called 24 witnesses in nine days and admitted 47 pieces of evidence, was to begin his closing arguments after a three hour luncheon recess.

Gaffney's case, that Ms. Saxe, a Brandeis University honors graduate, supplied at least one gun and helped plan and carry out the $26,585 robbery, rests mainly on the testimony of Robert J. Valeri and Fleisher.

Who's Schorr's leaker?

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ethics Committee reported yesterday that someone "on, or very close," to the staff of the defunct House intelligence committeed leaked a secret report to newsman Daniel Schorr.

The panel issued a final report on the leak of papers outlining covert CIA activities. It said the White House and government agencies apparently were not responsible for the leak.

The Ethics Committee, which voted earlier not to seek a contempt of Congress citation against Schorr for giving the report to the Village Voice newspaper for publication, said it considered Schorr's action "reprehensible."

"The committee.... concludes that the original leak was someone on or very close to the select committee on intelligence staff," said today's report.

The panel also said it was encouraged that news media revealed Schorr's role in turning over the report to the newspaper. But it said news reporters in general should conform more to their "canons and ethics."

The panel recommended that, to avoid such future leaks, "a small staff of professionals be recruited and trained as security officers" to handle all classified material coming before the House or its committees.

Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., a member of the committee, immediately criticized the panel's proposal for security officers and also for its "lecture to the press" in a statement released by his office.

Four other members of the committee — Chairman John Flynt, D-Ga.; Floyd Spence, R-S.C.; Olin Teague, D-Tex., and Edward Hutchinson, R-Mich. — said in separate views in the report that failure to act against Schorr made him a hero.

Porno and the First Amendment

By SPENCER VIBBERT

You could spend a month refuting the arguments Charlotte Allen advanced Monday night in her debate with Albert Sparks of Baroque Enterprises. Still there are other ways to spend one's time and it probably wouldn't be worth it anyway. If she made one quintissentially ill-conceived remark it was the one she came up with after the show, duly reported in Tuesday's Collegian. Asked about the free speech argument, vis-a-vis pornography, she said, with characteristic self-confidence, "It's the typical wishy-washy position."

If Ms. Allen means us to believe that free speech arguments are inherently "wishy-washy" she will have to show us how it is that the Bill of Rights and Constitution itself are "wishy-washy" documents. Moreover she will have to demonstrate how it is that life-long crusaders in the free speech movement, (say, Lenny Bruce and Justice William O. Douglas) were, and continue to be, (heaven help us) "wishy-washy" human beings.

When our fore-fathers framed the Bill of Rights they said freedom of speech, and by implication all mediums of communication shall not be abridged, and they meant it. Not by Congress, presidents, courts, committees, censors, McCarthyites, or feminists. It does no good to say that only certain kinds of speech shall be abridged, or certain kinds of pornography, or certain kinds of anything.

Back in the fifties the self-appointed morals experts used to say that pornography was "subversive". Now they say it is "sexist". They used to say pornography was bad because it taught bad morals. Now they say it teaches bad sex. I imagine that in the year of 1984 (when totalitarianism is finally upon us) pornography will be bad because it promotes tooth-decay. God only knows what will have happened to "wishy-washy" free speech arguments by then.

It is pathetic in the extreme that at this late date people such as Ms. Allen still try to say there is a relationship between pornography and rape; even while there isn't one scintilla of evidence to prove such an assertion and quite a bit to contradict it. Bringing rape into the picture is good old-fashioned scare tactics (similar in substance to the argument that certain screen-writers in the fifties couldn't write movies because they were bringing awful Communism upon us).

If there are feminists among us who dislike attitudes portrayed in contemporary pornagraphic cinema they should A) leave the theatre, and-or B) rail on in the press to their hearts content. Not close down the theatre. Better yet I propose they conduct a nationwide search for what is in their judgement, the most non-repressive, egalitarian, socially responsible sex ever put on the screen, and show it.

To the gays I say more gay sex on the screen. To the lesbians I propose more lesbian cinema. There will always be an audience, that much we know. It is entirely possible that the more sophisticated and varied pornography gets the more interesting it will become. We have come a long way from the days of 16 millimeter mail-order pornies, but, I am sure, many will agree, there is serious room for improvement.

In closing I suggest that politicians, both on the campus and national levels, stay out of porno halls if it bothers them so much. The truth is that pornography is taken far too seriously. It is hardly the dangerous sexual device it is credited as being. Mostly the porno theatre is a home-away-from home for sad old men in frayed raincoats. Exercising their first-amendment rights. Bothering no one.

A tool for expression

To the Editor:

What many may initially have thought was to be a printed oasis for secluded "intellectual" thinking, is becoming a tool for expression and extension of basic economic ideas, guides, critiques by students. The thrust of the new Economic Journal for students will be to reach out to as many students as possible with useful concepts, issues, alternatives with which to reinterpret and redefine the world.

Students are consumers, workers, taxpayers, progressive thinkers and want to know how the economic system works and what the options are. In a meeting on September 27 we decided that the Journal should contain a number of diverse articles that are relatively short, highly useful, and easily understood.

The Journal is planning to be printed soon this month. We still need more articles and are discussing our ideas at a meeting this afternoon, 4:00 in Room 100 Thompson. We'd like to hear yours. People into art and layout are encouraged to stop by.

Drop the game

To the Editor:

The first half of Charlotte Allen's column in Wednesday's Collegian struck me as being right on target. At the point where Charlotte discusses how women have been made to feel inferior genitally to men and that the opposite is the real truth, [tautology needed] I as a male began to get upset. Personally I've never felt superior to women and now the truth comes out that I should see myself as inferior?!! Yech! I began to worry.

Further, all men start as women. Moreover, men aren't as sexy as women. Finally, the clitoris isn't a stunted penis, " ... the penis is an exaggerated clitoris" and "sexually, the male is but a pale imitation --- of us."

Boy [girl] did I feel inferior --- and somewhat more humble, which is likely to be good for a lot of men. The experience of pain makes us human and sometimes less likely to cause pain in others indiscriminately. What I'm trying to say is that I can understand Charlotte's viewpoint and her need to make men see what it's like. I haven't felt her pain, but I've known suffering of various types.

My point is contained in the following analogy; one can compare a dog to a cat with the idea that the cat should match up to the dog and that it is inferior because it doesn't. One can make that cat feel like a piece of shit because it's not a dog. This is advantageous to the dog because the dog lives in a custom made competitive world too. Or, one can see the dog as actually an inferior cat, and all the cats will say, "Good!", because they too have the competitive mentality that says they can't feel good unless they're better than something else. The real alternative [opinion here] is to see the cat as a cat and a dog as a dog and dog them both for what they are --- as opposed to what they aren't. Scientific evidence has also made the point that one can't really distinguish a human fetus at an early point from other, non-human fetuses. So it could reasonably be said that men are really women and that women aren't really human if, and here's the point, one has a reason for choosing to see it that way. The truth, from Mars, is that men are women or women are men because breasts and genitals can't be seen from that far away.

The competitiveness has, on the surface, been a male characteristic. Beating men at our own game is probably as satisfying as hell, but the best point to Feminism that I can see is to drop the game entirely --- and maybe help me while you're at it.

More abortionist rhetoric

To the Editor:

Speaking of money and young college students, I would like to respond to David P. Lang's letter on October 4th.

David has no fear of ever finding himself alone in a hospital bed with a lifetime of responsibility in his arms. Most right to life people have never had an unwanted child and have never been an unwanted child, and seem to expound on this subject from the comfort of their middle class lounge chairs.

How can David ever understand the agony of the abortion question, as he will never feel the need for such a decision? It's so easy to sit at your typewriter and spout more typical abortionist rhetoric when you don't have a child behind you crying because "mommy doesn't love me", and wondering why she doesn't have time for me. I think that you will find that this situation usually finds itself among young women that just don't have the funds or education that David seems to have. Is he aware of the background of most criminals, drug abusers, and suicides? Since David is so much for unwanted children is he going to complain when his wages are taxed to support the mother and her children for the better part of their lives?

I would suggest that it is not the state that should make such decisions, nor is it David. It is women like me that don't have what you have David and are in danger of losing what few rights we do have.

Towards student unionization

By THOMAS MAJOR

"I've just been elected captain of the Titanic" — John O'Keefe, after being elected President of the Student Government Association, May, 1975

O'Keefe's comparision of the SGA to the Titanic is faulty; the Titanic could rightfully claim to be a magnificant, luxurious vessel, the peak of shipbuilding, right up until the moment it hit the iceberg. The SGA, on the other hand, is a leaky, plastic toy boat that has difficulty in crossing a bathtub without capsizing.

The Student Government Association has degenerated into an organization that does not represent the students, does not aggressively seek solutions to the problems of the students, and does not have control over the money it spends.

Perhaps the best way to look at the SGA is to start with a survey made in June of 1974 by Jim Delmonico and Jackie Cormier about student opinions of the SGA. The points the survey made are these:

1) 50 per cent of those polled didn't know how satisfied they were while 41 per cent said they were not strongly satisfied. Only 1.9 per cent of those polled said they were very satisfied.

2) 26 per cent believe that the SGA represents the common needs of the student body fairly well. 28 per cent bellieve that the SGA represents the students, but poorly. 18 per cents do not believe that the SGA represents the students at all.

3) 31 per cent of those polled were so dissatisfied with the SGA that they wanted to see a new form of government. 52 per cent, however, were not that dissatisfied.

4) Over half of those polled, 51 per cent, did not believe that they personally benefited from the Student Activities Tax.

5) 68 per cent would support a student government or union which was organized by "centers", such as an economic center, and which included all students as voting members. (The report, however, noted that the question was too vague to get a true response and that care should be taken in interpreting the results.)

The reason behind this apathy and negative feelings toward the SGA is this: the SGA has acquired a reputation, not entirely undeserved, of being an impotent organization.

How else are we to think of student governments when the Undergraduate Senate spends its time supporting Chilean political prisoners, banning union lettuce from dining commons, and passing lists of demands to the administration that have thundering language and neglible impact?

When the student governments do take action, the action is liable to be either ridiculous or cancelled by the administration. Because the administration can veto any action of the SGA at will, and can control the money the SGA spends, and defines the scope and depth of student input through the SGA, and SGA is not in the best of positions to be a crusader for students' rights.

While it is laudable that such student organizations as the Southwest Assembly have seen fit to protect the virgin impressionable minds of Southwest residents against the corrupting and destructive influences of Linda Lovelace, there are probably more pressing problems to be attacked than the sexual politics exhibited in movies shown on Southwest territory.

Do you know:

How did your senator vote in the last meeting?

How often does your senator attend meetings?

What actions has your senator proposed this year?

How does your senator feel about campus issues?

Chances are that for almost all of the student population the answers to all of these questions is no. The truth of the matter is that anybody can get elected to the Undergraduate Studen Senate (or Southwest Assembly or Orchard Hill Area Government or the others) without ever touching an issue. This system is an open invitation to irresponsible action and eventual sellout by the representative to the highest bidder.

This is definitely not the way to run a Student Government Association. Some basic, fundamental reforms come to mind:

1. Each student-elected representative must at regular intervals send to his constituents a newsletter stating what he has achieved in office and how he has voted while in office.

2. Whenever a student government votes, the vote of each individual representative should be recorded. Furthermore, attendance should be taken at each meeting.

3. The results of the attendance and the votes of the representatives should be made easily available to the constituents.

4. There is no reason why we should have co-presidents, co-senators, or co-assemblymen. Only one person should occupy each position in the student government.

5. The SGA should immediately take the Universtiy to court in order to get control of the Student Activities Tax Fund.

There is nothing particularly revoluntionary about these reforms; nothing that requires vast amounts of time and effort. They are basic requirements to be met if the SGA is to be saved from being a fifth wheel to the administration.

The greatest roadblock to these fundamental changes is the Student Government Association itself. The SGA has consistently been its own worst enemy, because its members have shown no inclination to try to make their jobs relevant to the University as a whole. An outside push is needed, some issue or event that will threaten the SGA members into making an effort to reform student government. The push for a student union might be a blessing in disguise for the SGA because it just might prove to be the push the SGA needs to get started in repairing the student governments on campus.

Image of your eye

"Good morning sir. What can Image Incorporated do for you today?"

"I have an appointment with the doctor concerning my image, naturally."

"And what seems to be the problem with it?"

"I don't know. It's kind of boring. It doesn't seem as exciting as some of the other images I see around."

"And you wish to change it?"

"Yea. No one likes a boring image."

"What kind of person would you like the doctor to be?"

"I, uh, haven't given it much thought."

"Try, sir. We're very concerned about images here."

"Well, aggressive, but not too forceful; very personable: uh, eager to please and, oh yes, appreciative of my seeking his help."

"All right. He'll be here in a few minutes. Would you mind taking a seat over there?"

"Certainly. Thank you."

"Hello there."

"Oh, hello. Are you here for an image change too?"

"In a way. I've been coming here for about a year now trying different images."

"How's it been going?"

"Not really too good."

"Which images are you on now?"

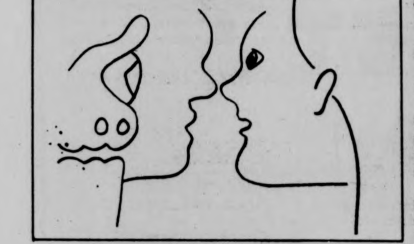
"Can you guess?"

"I'm just a beginner."

"Oh, well today I'm friendly and concerned but with underlying suspicions."

"How long have you been all that?"

"For about a month or so."



"How do you like it?"

"I hate it."

"Are you going to try something new?"

"I'm thinking of number twenty-eight."

"I'm not sure what that is."

"That's the basic strong and silent image."

"You'll probably like that one better."

"I doubt it. It's like being a walking time bomb. Everything builds up, besides, I like to talk too much."

"Then why even try it?"

"To see what kind of image it attracts."

"You mean person."

"Heavens no. I'm working with images, not people, images."

"Don't you think you're missing the point?"

"I think you are. You see, underneath it all, we're all basically the same. We have fears and doubts and a lot of other stuff."

"So?"

"So it's not the person who attracts, it's the image that's portrayed."

"Is that why you keep coming here?"

"Sure. Hey listen, I tried being a person but you know where that gets you."

"I do?"

"Sure, or you wouldn't be here. You're looking for a better image. You're not concerned about the person you are, you're concerned about how others see you."

"But that goes for you too."

"That's the trouble."

"What is?"

"I've spent so much time on my image, I forgot who I was underneath. Either that or I was never too sure in the first place."

"So now what do you do?"

"I keep trying images until I find one that fits. One that someone will be attracted to."

"You'd be happy with that?"

"Sure, until I feel safe enough. Then I'd reveal who I really was."

"What if the person really likes your image but doesn't like the person you really are."

"Then I keep the image up."

"For how long?"

"Until I want to change it, I guess."

"Sounds pretty strange to me."

"Say, why are you here?"

"I thought I needed a new image."

"I kind of like the image you have now, which one is it?"

"It's none of them. It's how I feel. I guess it's me."

"And you want to change that?"

"Not now I don't. It was very nice talking to you but I have to go. Uh, excuse me please."

"Yes sir."

"I've changed my mind, I don't want a new image after all."

"All right sir."

"Would you tell the doctor I'm sorry but I couldn't wait any longer for him."

"No need to sir, the man you've been talking to is the doctor. Goodday."

"Goodday...."

Operation salvation

By PAUL LOGUE, JR.

'OW! "What's the matter?"

"I stepped on something sharp, oh, that smarts."

"Is it bleeding?"

"Yea, shit, I may have to go back home and get this fixed up right."

"Damn it. Nice way to start off a day at the beach."

"I wish people would be more considerate about throwing their can tops around. Man, if this thing gets infected. I won't be able to go to work, no money, no fun limping around."

"Come on and let's get that foot taken care of." Oh no. What next. The car has a flat tire."

"You gotta be shitting me. Those are almost brand new tires."

"We ran over a bottle, man."

"This place is lousy with litter. How do they expect anyone to come here again. I know I won't."

"I'll change the tire while you thumb a ride to the hospital."

It is a real shame that people get sliced up by needless litter tossed about by a few uncaring folks. But it seems that even your best friends are guilty.

What can we do collectively to stop this nonsense and put a clamp on the problem of litter? Vote for the Bottle Bill on the Nov. 2, ballot.

But also, educate another about the importance of this piece of legislation. If people would try to persuade their parents about the importance of having returnable bottles, it might begin a whole educational process. If we, as University students, don't feel the weight of the responsibility on us, then do you think others will care?

We have to take the initiative to persuade our friends and family that the litter will keep increasing and the injuries along with it from broken glass and flip tops as long as the disposable container remains in our midst. Isn't it about time that we clean up our act? For the time being, start buying returnable items. When you use yourself as an example for others to see, it gives a whole lot more of an impact. Besides, getting a nickel back on a bottle is a damm good way of saving a few bucks a week. Remember when you were a kid and had no money? Well, I always cruised around the neighborhood and got me some pop bottles to return to the store. Your vote this November could mean some kid's salvation. Think about it.

VOTE YES ON 6

Gun control?

By KEN FONDA

In the November elections voters in Massachusetts will be given the opportunity to further restrict themselves and vote away one of our most precious Constitutional rights. The question I am talking about is the referendum, number five, on hand gun control. If this referendum is passed it would prohibit possession, ownership or sale of any weapon from which a shot or bullet may be discharged through a barrel of sixteen inches or less; in other words, a handgun.

This would not effect military personnel, law enforcement officers, federally licensed handgun manufacturers and wholesalers, common carriers in the course of ordinary transport, of historical societies or museums. The only people it does effect are law abiding citizens like you and me. The second amendment to the Constitution clearly gives citizens the right to keep and bear arms. This amendment does not stipulate any barrel length. Clearly this question is in violation of this Constitutional right.

What were the reasons behind this amendment? The whole amendment reads "a well regulated Militia, being necessary to security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed." The reason people should have this right is to protect themselves against the well regulated Militia, should a military takeover occur.

This question would force law abiding citizens to turn over their guns to law enforcement agencies within six months of the effective date of the act. If a person refused to turn over his weapon(s) within that time he would be a criminal under the new act. A bumper sticker I read once said "when guns are outlawed only outlaws will have guns." This is not completely true because police and other agencies not affected by this act would still have guns. However, the ordinary citizens would not have guns.

This act also provides for compensation for guns that are turned in. Where would this money come from? It would come from you, the taxpayer. Don't we have much more important things to use our tax money on?

Because of the previously stated facts I would not support this referendum. I urge you all to take a good look at the implications of the question before you decide to vote yes on number five.

Looking through windows

I was reading some of Kafka's short stories the other night when I came across one called "The Street Window". It's pretty short so I'll write it here for you and then tell you about what it reminded me of.

Whoever leads a solitary life and yet now and then wants to attach himself somewhere, whoever, according to changes in the time of day, the weather, the state of his business, and the like, suddenly wishes to see any arm at all to which he might cling — he will not be able to manage for long without a window looking onto the street. And if he is in the mood of not desiring anything and only goes to his window sill a tired man, with eyes turning from his public to heaven and back again, not wanting to look out and having thrown his head up a little, even then the horses below will draw him down to their train of wagons and tumult, and so at last into the human harmony.

I used to live in Boston in a pretty strange apartment that had two skylights and no windows; well there was a window but it was plugged up with an air conditioner that didn't work and I couldn't see out. Sometimes I'd look up out the skylights but all I could see was windows or sky, no people. Most of the winter the skylights were covered with snow or ice blocking out everything.

I used to have to call up the weather recording every day to find out what it was like outside. The apartment had many saving graces though; it was big and unusual and relatively inexpensive for Boston. Also, there was "the whistler".

Every night around midnight, someone used to walk down the little street next to my building and whistle classical music. He was very good. I guess he worked at one of the nearby restaurants or clubs. I imagined that he washed dishes or did something menial because he got out to the street at the same time every night.

I never saw him. Once I thought about writing a thank-you or something on the street with paint but I couldn't figure out what to say. I was a faithful audience until I moved.

I had to move because my roof leaked and the final straw was when people's sewage started flushing into my bathtub. So I got an apartment with big bay windows overlooking Commonwealth Ave.

I had always felt the pulsating energy living in the city, but now those windows drew me to it like a magnet. I was compelled to watch all those people and machines.

There's a scene in the movie "The Third Man" where Orson Wells is up on an enclosed ferris wheel sort of thing, looking down on lots of nameless, faceless people. He likens those people to ants to justify his murdering masses with a bogus vaccine for big money.

If you go to the top of the library you can get the same kind of perspective that Orson Wells had but, I'd rather look at all those "ants" as the actors in the great dance.

Here at UMass there is also a pulsating energy that pervades my solitude but it is a different kind than the city. Someone told me that because the Holyoke Mts. run east and west they have a metaphysical influence that is good for intellectual pursuits in this valley. I don't know about that but there is a harmony here that is not on Commonwealth Ave.

The crazy hustle bustle of Boston has been replaced by the masses of students on their errands of knowledge; but, this place doesn't evoke for me the pathos that Boston did.

Sometimes, usually on a melancholy midnight, I miss the whistler. I've got plenty of windows now but when I didn't, he sort of kept me in tune; if you know what I mean.

[ZNS] — A North Carolina gardening expert says that the best way to make some plants grow is to unleash your aggressions and simply threaten them, or even go so far as to beat the daylights out of them.

Fred Yoder, a plant and flower shop operator in the town of High Point, says that many plants and shrubs can and should be encouraged with sweet talk and gentle actions. But, he warns, it's altogether too true that "you can kill a plant with kindness."

Yoder says that some flowers respond only when threatened or attacked, and reports of one instance in which a North Carolina farmer became angry at an apple tree that failed him yearly by refusing to produce a single piece of fruit.

Yoder states that the farmer "got mad enough to take the blunt side of his ax and beat the mischief out of that tree," and sure enough, the following season the terrified tree produced a near record crop of apples.

Earth beings beware, of strange 'foreigners'

[ZNS] — A 33-year-old decorated Air Force sergeant, who claims to have been briefly taken aboard a U.F.O. last year, says he was told that the planet Earth is being studied by a federation of advanced races on other planets.

Sergeant Charles L. Moody claims these intelligent beings told him that they will make their presence known to the entire world within the next 24 months, and adds that this alleged interstellar contact will not "be a pleasant type of meeting."

Moody's strange story began on a clear August evening in 1975, when he says that he drove into the New Mexico desert to watch a predicted meteor shower.

The sergeant claims that a circular craft suddenly streaked from the sky, and that he was overpowered by small beings and taken aboard the flying saucer.

The Tucson-based Aerial Phenomena Research Organization, a leading U.F.O. investigation group, rates Sergeant Moody's credibility, despite this rather bizarre account as being extremely high.

Campus divides over porno ban

[CPS] — The banning of two popular X-rated films is causing the Boyce Campus of Allegheny County Community College in Pennsylvania to split into two camps. The dean of students has taken a rock-hard stand against the wishes of the student body who wish to view the films.

The films in question, Last Tango in Paris and Fritz the Cat, were released in 1972 with an X-rating. Many students and some faculty members feel that the dean is equating 'X' with hard-core pornography. The dean said of her decision. "In my judgement, the showing of X-rated movies on campus is not part of our function as an educational institution supported by tax dollars."

Petitions signed by more than 300 students disagree with that decision. The petition requests that the movies, picked by the student union board and paid for by student fees, be shown without any further interference by administrators.

Aries full moon reflects unity

By ROB HENEREY

By 12:55 tonight the Moon (the key to emotional flow) traveling through fiery Aries, will be exactly opposite the Sun, (the key to inner purpose) traveling through airy Libra. In other words, it'li be Full Moon, the time when our purpose is fulfilled in our feelings to whatever degree we've worked it out. This month the Full Moon will especially reflect our relationships. Aries is the sign of self-hood or identity, so the question that'll be answered is, how much do our own self-hoods merge to form a 'partnership-self', a re-born Self in balance with another. Or, how much does our self-centeredness limit our potential to relate?

The cosmic background for this Full Moon is well symbolized by next Sunday's Neptune (compassion) sextile to Pluto, (regeneration) suggesting that if we work on expressing our intuitive compassionate unity with others, dissolving our need to feel secure in our separateness, we can have that new and balanced commitment we're seeking. Once again, the love we take is equal to the love we make.

The chart for the Full Moon is complex, with two planetary and four lunar aspects becoming exact between now and tomorrow. Taking a look at them chronologically, here they are:

Peaking at 1:40 p.m., setting a major tone for the day, the Libra Sun is 60 degrees ahead of Saturn (discipline). With effort we can reach stable security through our relationships. With self-discipline we can put our relationships on a solid base of love and creativity.

Then, between 6:16 and 6:20 the Aries Moon will be exactly opposite Pluto-in-Libra and 120 degrees ahead of Neptune-in-Sagittarius, the sign of wisdom (keying off the Pluto-Neptune angle). This means that if we're expressing compassion, the Self we assert then will be an harmonious 'collective' rather than a strident individualism.

The next aspect will be a challenging 90 degree 'square' from Venus (the love planet), in Scorpio, to Saturn (the security planet), in Leo, becoming exact at 10:44 p.m. If our insecurity makes us put strict demands on our partners, this aspect will exact from us the tough realization that our only real security lies deep in our own hearts as Leo "rules" the heart. Relationships have to respect personal uniqueness rather than being based on fearful possessiveness.

Another lunar aspect, a 120 degree 'trine' to Saturn, exact at 12:05, will be part of the Full Moon pattern. This suggests that if we just show enthusiasm for our own responsibilities, and really act out of a firm base of self-discipline, our attitude will be appreciated by, or become an example for others.

After the exact 12:55 Full Moon, the Moon will be 45 degrees, or 'semi-square' behind Jupiter, the planet of expansion, in Gemini. Since Jupiter's still 'retrograde', or introverted, and since the Sun will also aspect it tomorrow, we may find ourselves saying, 'what's wrong with me? I seem to be too screwed-up to relate harmoniously...' If we are all tied up trying to make sense out of a tangle of possibilities, we can miss the chance to fulfill some particular partnership.

Foliage Festivities are planned for this weekend

The Friends of the Clark Memorial have declared Saturday, Sunday and Monday "Welcome to Winchendon Weekend."

The weekend is being sponsored by the organization in an attempt to raise funds for the Clark Memorial, a non-profit community center and athletic facility serving the Winchendon area.

Activities planned for the foliage peak weekend include a roller skating marathon for pledges, a CB jamboree, a coffee and apple cider sale, a flea market, a hole-in-one golf tournament, a display of local arts and crafts, short distance rides on the world's largest rocking horse, free tours of the churches in downtown Winchendon and special foliage maps designed for a leisure ride through the country roads of Winchendon and the Mt. Manadnock region.

Henry Doody, chairperson of the Friends of The Clark announced the weekend festivities were being held because "Winchendon is in the heart of the foliage area, and every year we have thousands of motorists travel through our town. This year we hope they stop and accept some warm Winchendon hospitality. We are offering the visitor a chance to tour our town, have some warm cider or coffee and some of the best apple and pumpkin pie in New England."

"We're putting out the welcome mat to the visitor," said Friends member Police Chief Sal Marinelli, "we've designed some maps for the motorist to take a nice slow drive and enjoy the many spectacular views in our area."

"The Friends of the Clark has set a goal to raise $40,000 to keep the Clark afloat. Since January, we have raised close to $20,000," said Josephene Martin. "With inflation taking its toll we have joined together to insure the reality that the youth of Winchendon have a place to call their own."

The Friends will be selling hot coffee, apple, pumpkin and home made pies. Most of the activities will take place on the Clark grounds, Main Street, Winchendon on Sunday, with Monday in reserve for an extreme rain date.

The roller skating marathon will feature former UMass student David Letters of Amherst, the American distance skating champion. Local business and individuals are pledging money per mile that Letters can skate in a five-hour period. His route will cover two separate three and four-mile areas of Winchendon.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Spring semester Internships meeting

The Office of Internships is presently holding its semi-annual informational meetings for spring semester internships. These meetings are the culmination of two weeks of recruitment and information spread, and are the beginning of the internship counseling and placement process. Those students who attend the initial meetings are given priority in placement over others who inquire at a later date.

All members of the University community are invited to attend tonight's meeting in Campus Center 101 at 8:00.

French programs to be aired on WMUA

'Tout en Francais' can be heard every Tuesday and Thursday at 6:30 p.m. on WFCR 88.5 FM.

In addition to the following features, five minutes of news taken directly off French short wave radio will be presented on each Tuesdays program.

Tonight — Soiree Franco-Americaine; interview with Professor Emeritus of Smith College, Marine Leland, by Richard Santerre of UMass.

Tuesday — Songs by Michel Sardou, presented by Francine Fatoux of Mt. Holyoke College.

Oct. 14 — Diderot's 'Entretien d'un Philosophe avec Mme. la Marechale de ...', with Nicole Ball, Teaching Assistant, and Professor Paul Mankin, UMass French Department.

Oct. 19 — Songs by Nana Mouskouri.

Oct. 21 — Soiree Franco-Americaine.

Oct. 26 — Songs and poetry about women, prepared by a group of Belgian women, presented by Elizabeth Leete.

Oct. 28 — Discussion of their year spent in France by Profs. Rose-Marie Carre and Christian Garaud of the UMass French Department, and Prof. Emile Langlois of Mt. Holyoke College.

Political Science dept. to host speaker

Ken Dolbeare, of the political science department, will speak on "The Great Refusal: Nonvoting and American Ideology" at this year's first evening program for majors in Social Thought and Political Economy (STPEC) and other interested persons. Dolbeare's recent article "Alternatives to the New Fascism", which appeared in the Spring 1976 edition of the Massachusetts Review is suggested as preparatory reading for the discussion.

The program begins at 8:00 tonight and will be held in Herter, rom 601. All STPEC majors are urged to attend.

Amherst Ensemble presents play

The Department of Music at Amherst College has invited the public to attend a performance of Roman de Fauvel, a medieval secular play, by the Ensemble early music.

The production will be presented at 8:15 p.m. on October 12 in the Buckely Recital Hall at the College. There will be no admission charge.

The performance is a 14th Century French Musical Drama in authentic theatrical form with mimes, puppets, processionals, players, and with the Ensemble singing and playing medieval instruments.

The Ensemble regularly presents early music through innovative programming.

Meeting of support group for gay men

Beginning Thursday afternoon, Oct. 14, a support group for gay men will hold regular meetings at Cottage B (behind Worcester Dining Commons).

The group will deal what it means to be a gay male with the intent to integrate this aspect of one's self into an overall perspective of personhood. It will be a place to explore issues and possibly discover solutions. And to learn that others have struggled and learned by those struggles. And it is a place to learn that others care.

The time will be 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Thursdays. For further information, call United Christian Foundation at 545-2661 or 545-2789.

The Leica Seminar comes to
NEW ENGLAND

We are proud to announce that TRIPOD CAMERA SHOP, INC., will be host to the highly acclaimed LEICA SEMINAR.

The seminar will be held at The Colonial Hilton Inn, in Northampton, Mass., junction Routes 91 and 5, Friday Evening, October 29, and Saturday, October 30, 1976.

In order to assure your place in this seminar, you must act now, and return your registration by October 20, 1976. We already have many advance reservations and enrollment is limited. We don't want any of you receiving this special invitation to miss attending because of a sell-out space.

The seminar will be conducted by Mr. Walter G. Heun, Leica Technical Director, whose expertise in all phases of 35mm photography and dynamic teaching at the Leica School in New York, marks him as one of the "leading authorities on photo graphic quality and technique with the 35mm camera".

If you want to know the what, where and why of 35mm, rangefinder cameras, reflex cameras, properties of different films, 35mm developing techniques, close-up photography, transparency projection, and of the fascinating world of photography, this is for you...

You need not be a Leica owner to attend.

for the Northwest corner of the campus would leave North Pleasant Street at Section A rather than Governors Drive; but none of these cars today travels south on North Pleasant Street," it continued.

University plans call for blocking off Governors Drive and North Stockbridge Rd. commuter traffic at North Pleasant Street to force commuters to use the Northwest Road.

Minear suggested the university "maximize the use of Rte. 116 and minimize the use of North Pleasant Street" by constructing a road from the northwest corner of campus to Rte. 116 directly that would not connect to North Pleasant Street.

"There were more than three in the room. There were approximately six," said Andrew.

When asked how many of the people in the room were Black, Andrew said, "There were three Black males in the room."

Andrew, the officer who found the nun-chuck in Thomas' car, said that they didn't find any money in the car even though they searched for it.

It was also brought out under cross examination that at the time of the arrest, Dixson gave Andrew a detailed description of the three students' afternoon, including a visit to Greenfield where Thomas bought a saxophone and had a dated receipt to prove it.

Andrew admitted that at the time he hadn't thought it important to check the time with the receipt.

Work study van drivers are needed for any or all of the following times: Monday and Friday 7:00 a.m. to 10 a.m.; Wednesday 10:00 a.m. to 12 noon. Drivers must have a valid Massachusetts drivers license and be able to drive a standard shift vehicle. For further information, contact Paul Appleby or Merle Ryan in the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs, 227 Whitmore Administration Building.

Med School speakers

The Pre-Medical Society will present a series of speakers, this semester as in the past, on a number of areas of medicine. In addition to the colloquium which it will be running on Tuesday nights, in GRC 206 from 7 to 9 p.m., it has a number of speakers on "Medical school admissions."

The admissions series includes the following:

—Today — UMass — Susan Gagliardi, Gary Schneider, CC917 at 7:15 p.m.

—Oct. 18 — Dartmouth — Frances Hall, CC168 at 7:15 p.m.

—Oct. 28 — Albany — Eugene Horn, CC165 at 7:15 p.m.

—Nov. 8 — Tufts — Leo Sullivan, CCTBA at 7:15 p.m.

—Dec. 1 — Harvard — Foster, CCTBA at 7:15 p.m.

Pre-Medical Society Planning Committee Chairperson Neil T. Katz feels it is to the student's advantage to attend each of these meetings, no matter when they are planning to apply for admission.

Each speaker is the head of their respective committee (or a member on it), and is qualified to answer any and all questions on individual schools, and the admissions process in general. It is also very important that the UMass pre-meds show each speaker the large amount of interest that they have in medical school.

Katz suggests that students should arrive early in order to get a seat.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Thursday, October 7 — Born today, you possess great strength of character and tremendous determination of mind and spirit. There is little that can turn you from your self- or otherwise-appointed rounds or goals, little that can keep you from attaining that which you set out to attain. You enjoy the challenge of the new and different, even when that challenge is increased many times over by the opposition of others — either friends or family members -- whose support you would very much like to have. Even when some venture does not offer much chance of success, you are willing to make the effort to wrest victory from predicted failure.

One who is not easily dismayed by life's misfortunes, you generally treat what others would term a catastrophe as if it were merely a temporary setback -- which, more often than not, is what most so-called catastrophes turn out to be. Highly self-confident, you approach whatever responsibilities and duties are yours with an air of willingness as well as a determination to succeed. There is little possibility for others to cause you to fail, for you seldom allow others to gain that big an insight into your methods of operation.

To others, you seem to exude self-reliance. You seldom ask others for help, though you are very quick to offer help when and if you see that it is needed. You realize that you are the exception rather than the rule where the ability to do things well and quickly -- though relatively inexperienced and untutored -- is concerned.

Friday, October 8

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take care that younger family members don't feel rejected. Lend an ear to words of wisdom from an unexpected source.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — A question of good health may arise early in the day. Physical upset brings you to depression's edge.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — A new understanding with an old friend leads you into the making of important decisions late in the day.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Dissatisfaction with progress on the employment scene may make it impossible for you to make an objective decision. Postpone making up your mind.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Favorable conditions send you on a journey toward a new goal. Make sure that you know your destination precisely; then don't look back.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make changes on the employment scene early in the day. Co-workers make it easy for you to gain by day's end. Share rewards of your labor.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Look into a new method of operation for an old project. Friends make it possible for you to begin anew during evening hours.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A challenging early morning experience not only enlivens the day, but adds teeth to your career. Keep alert to change in the afternoon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You would do well to plan far ahead. There's much to recharge your thinking if and when intuition grows dull.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Distance is important to the success of your undertaking today. Don't expect to make gains close to home. Challenges arise in the evening.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Strive for a less tedious method of accomplishing present goals. You may be going about things in the most difficult possible way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Unless you are happy to be a public figure, you would do well to keep present activities to yourself. Rest assured of victory.

From canoe to axe to fire—it'll be a good time

From strength to style, sawing to singing, competing to relaxing, etc., this weekends woodsperson's competition at Paul Smith's College....

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The list of events does not fit categories that most sports fans regard as your everyday, run-of-the-mill, sports competition. For this reason alone, this weekend's Fall Invitational Woodsperson's Competition at Paul Smith's College in New York should prove to be an interesting experience.

UMass will be adequately represented with two men's and one women's team competing in such events as canoe races, chainsawing, splitting for accuracy, pulp throwing for distance, fire building, log rolling, and more. There will be 19 events in all.

Teams from 11-12 Northeast and Canada schools will compete, with about 25 seven-person teams battling it out for sawing supremacy and the like. Trophies will be awarded for each individual event, with a team trophy for the overall winners.

UMass took part in the competition last year at New Hamphire, and came back with a trophy from one of the canoeing events. According to Chris Casey, president of the UMass club, his team "should do well in the chopping and maybe sawing."

For the women's team, the competition will be new, as its team has been together for a short time. For the women, it will bring the opportunity to compete with the men and other women's teams head-on. "They keep right up with the men," Casey said.

"It doesn't take much," said Maggie Vidrine of the women's team. "It's not as much strength as it is mainly technique. Once you get the style, just about anyone can do it."

For the women, it will be a weekend to gain valuable experience in preparation for the spring competition, while the veteran men's team will gear itself more to hopefully bringing a trophy back to UMass. "The spring is more important for us right now," Vidrine said. "We're gonna go all out for that one."

The club is currently working on RSO status, but for now the participants must use their own funds. For example, they hope to cut wood during the winter and sell it to help raise money.

It won't be all competition this weekend, however. Saturday night, a barn dance will feature "Pine Island", a popular Blue Grass band from Vermont.

"UMass will be taking a lot of good musicians, too," Casey said. "When we're not competing, we'll just be sittin' around ~~the~~ fire having a good time."

I'll sing to that.

..... should prove to be a good time for men, women, and children alike. (Staff photos by Rob Carlin)

AIC scores batmen; UMass bunts by, 7-6

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

Although it will go into the record books as a 7-6 UMass fall baseball win over American International College, it could have well been recorded as a 6-6 tie.

The Minutemen entered the top of the ninth inning leading the Yellow Jackets, 6-2, yesterday at Lorden Field. And it appeared that the score was going to stay that way, as the first two AIC batters went down. But then the trouble started.

AIC parlayed a walk, four straight singles, and an error by third baseman Art Weinslaw into four runs. Had Weinslaw not thrown Bruce Cluett out at second trying to stretch the one-base miscue into a two-base one, AIC would have had the winning run in scoring positions.

After the tying runs scored, UMass coach Dick Bergquist and AIC coach Richie Bedard debated the possibility of ending the contest in a 6-6 tie. After a brief discussion, they decided to play a half-more inning.

In that frame, first baseman Dale Stone reached on an infield hit. He was doubled to third by leftfielder George Kelley, and then right fielder Neil Lojek laid down a perfect suicide squeeze bunt to end the game.

UMass had led the entire game, thanks to a three-run third and two-run fourth. Extra-base hits did the damage in the first binge, as center fielder Bavel Cummings doubled and was tripled home by shortstop Jim Cullen. AIC pitcher Ken Bourque wildpitched Cullen home, and did the same for Stone, who also tripled later in the inning.

Cullen doubled home catcher Jim Benelli and designated hitter Bill Hendy to account for the Minutemen's two-run fourth. UMass also picked up another tally in the seventh on a Kelley RBI single.

AIC scored single runs in the second and sixth before its last-gasp rally.

UMass' 14-hit offense was led by Cullen, who went three-for-five with three RBI's, Kelley's four hits (including two doubles) and one RBI, and two hits apiece for Stone and Lojek. AIC was paced by third baseman Bill Cornetta's three straight singles and two hits by second baseman Gary Barcher.

The Minutemen's hurlers were Doug Welenc, Dave Stoller, and Jim Higgins. Welenc gave up just one run on a pop-fly single and struck out three in his four innings of work, while Stoller allowed one run and KO'd five, including the side in the eighth, in his four-inning stint. Higgins bore the brunt of the AIC's four-run rally.

The win gives UMass a fall record of 5-2. Its next action will be a doubleheader at Springfield College next Monday.

Divers open door to keys for UMass

The UMass Scuba Program is now accepting applicants for the intersession January term sport diving course to be offered at John Pennekamp Coral Reef State Park, Key Largo, Florida, January 3-10. All certified divers are welcome. The course is worth two UMass credits and leads to NAUI certification as a sport diver. Cost is $145 per diver and includes lodging, dives and instruction. The January term program is run by UMass Scuba Program co-ordinator Bob Sparks and assistant instructor Kathy Guild.

The Florida Keys are unquestionably one of the finest dive scenarios in the continental United States. The water is Caribbean blue and temperate. The visibility is usually 50-80 feet. John Pennekamp Coral Reef State Park, where the course is held, boasts 100 square miles of protected reef system that abounds in corals and beautiful tropical marine life. It is an exquisite place to dive and an ideal location for a sport diving course.

The sport curriculum includes course work in diver safety and rescue, underwater physiology, underwater navigation, dive planning and marine environment. But more importantly, it involves a lot of diving. We will make nine boat dives, including a deep dive and a night dive. The course is ideal for both the newly certified diver who wants experience and the old timer who wants to catch up on changes in the diving community. Sport courses are a lot of fun. This one promises to be a safe, but exciting experience. For further information contact Bob Sparks, Room 7 Curry Hicks, 545-0178 days.

Silas: More than worth it

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

The World Champion Boston Celtics are on the road for exhibition basketball games after a few weeks of the annual rigors of training camp. The pre-season schedule is a tuneup for the defense of their National Basketball Association title. One main reason the Celtics are defending their second NBA crown in three years is Paul Silas. The one important man missing from the Celtics now is Paul Silas.

Possibly the greatest rebounding forward of all time, Silas is currently holding out for more money. John Havlicek this week ended his holdout and signed a one-year contract. Silas and Havlicek are not exactly the two greediest athletes to ever stop out of a lockerroom. These two players have the greatest integrity on a team that is known for its strength of character.

This may be the last year of Havlicek's great career. He is a reasonable man, but Celtic President Red Auerbach is a tough negotiator. Years ago, Havlicek had the chance to make a real bundle by jumping to the now-defunct ABA, but he decided to stay loyal to Boston. He now has a contract that satisfies him. Perhaps a big reason he held out is because he hates training camp. Havlicek has admitted that, and it does little harm to him to forego it, especially since he is coming off a serious foot injury of last year's playoffs. At age 36, the extra time off does not hurt.

Silas is a different story. He is at the peak of his career and is invaluable to the Celtics. He was traded to Boston in 1972 and made a good team a great one, filling the one void on the squad — a defensive, power forward. It is because of Silas the Celtics have won two championships since then.

One reason Auerbach has not given Silas what he wants may be because he is represented by Attorney Larry Fleischer, who was responsible for former Celtic Don Chaney jumping to the ABA two years ago. Auerbach, a difficult gent to impress already, does not like to send Fleischer his prettiest Christmas card every year. It may be his dislike for this lawyer that Auerbach is taking it out on an undeserving Silas. That could really be it, for nobody has to tell Red Silas' value to the Celtics.

In Auerbach's defense, Silas is seeking a pact to make him the third-highest paid Celtic. While the Celts are not poor, they are in no position to spend money at will. This is the proverbial 'other side of the coin'. On one side is a 1976 Celtics championship banner (instead of an eagle), and on the other side is a picture of Silas (instead of George Washington). This coin is rolling on edge, rapidly approaching the corner of the negotiating table. When it gets there, it will probably roll off, and not fall flat just in time.

Up until recently, Silas was a vastly underrated player, partly because he does "the little things", and partly because he is not a good outside shooter. He continually gives his all, and has improved his shot to the point where it is no longer a surprise when he hits one. But, he is devastating under the boards, grabbing more than his share of missed shots. Silas stands near the hoop, consistently gets good position, and bruises about with anyone. He does the dirty work.

Silas' contract has actually run out, but this is his option year. We could assume that even if he signs with someone else, he would play for Boston this season. However, no piece of paper can make him play 'no matter what'. Whether he plays or nor, his thinking either way would be understandable.

Auerbach should give him what he deserves. The Celts just got by in three grueling playoff series last season, and can consider themselves lucky to have won everything. The league is stronger this year, and without Silas around, they would have no such luck in the near future.

Men's golf team ready for qualifying round today

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team journeyed to Ellington, Ct. yesterday, acquainted itself with the course, and thus are ready for today's E.C.A.C. qualifying round.

The tournament is a sectional event with squads from Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts competing. The top two teams, along with the top ten individual scorers will earn a berth in next weeks 36 hole final at Hidden Springs C.C., in Horsham Pa.

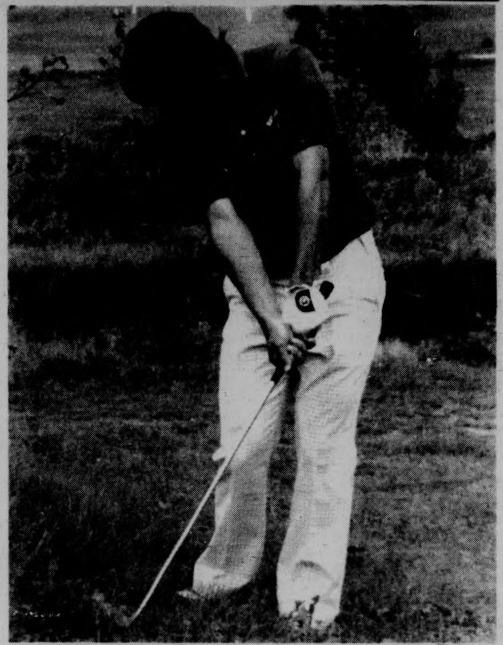
Last fall the Minutemen placed first at the sectional event, on its home course Hickory Ridge. However UMass went on to place a disappointing fourth in the finals a week later.

Flynt Lincoln, Bob Sanderson, Tim Diskin, Jim McDermott, and Bill Locke will represent UMass. Due to the merit system initiated by coach Fan Gaudette, Lincoln, a freshman will occupy the number one team position. The system is based upon the results from the team's last match, the Toski Invitational, where Lincoln fired a personal UMass low of 74.

Lack of depth has plagued the Minutemen this season, placing an undue amount of pressure on its top four players. "I'm still searching for a fifth man, I hope Bill Locke can come through for us today," explained Gaudette. Locke, a senior, has yet to compete in tournament play this fall. Gaudette had chosen to play underclassmen earlier this season, however, their play as erratic. Thus necessitating the move to instate the more experienced Locke into the fifth position.

"It's going to be a very tough match with schools like Yale, Providence, and U.R.I. participating," said Gaudette. "If we can shoot somewhere between 308, and 310 we should be able to qualify."

CHIP SHOTS: Last fall the Minutemen's four of five man first place total was 311, with John Lasek firing a one-over-par 73 to lead the club. Another sectional match was held in Portland, Maine Tuesday, with teams from northern N.E. competing.



UMass senior linkster Bill Locke, often overshadowed by his sister Ann Marie from the Mt. Holyoke squad, here displays his form for today's competition. (Staff photo by Stuart Eyman)

Harrierwomen face Williams

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The women's cross country team will face a major test this afternoon when it meets Williams College at 4:00 starting on the upper field at the North Physical Education Building.

The women have already run against Williams once this year, at the Lowell Invitational, defeating them easily. Coach Ken O'Brien thinks that Williams has been running stronger and will probably close up the score, but will still lose, due to UMass' depth.

"I hope it's not as close as last year's 27-28 meet, held at Williams," said o'Brien.

Williams has basically the same team they fielded last year, when it finished third in the New Englands. Michelle Cutsforth and Mary Hakala have alternated as the top harrier while they've been steadily backed up by Carol Capaldini. Williams was beaten a short time ago by Middlebury, one of the other top teams in New England, by a score of 22-32.

"Williams doesn't look as strong as they were at the New Englands last year, but they're still a tough team," said O'Brien. "I think we'll be stronger in the middle as usual."

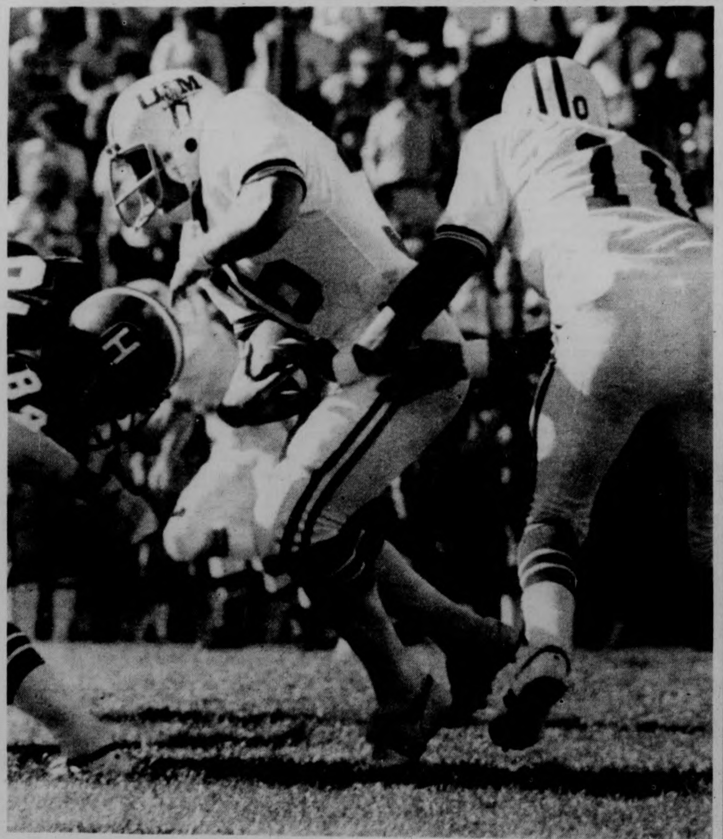
Out front for the Minutewomen will probably be Johara Chapman. She has been the most consistent runner so far this season, finishing first in all the team's meets so far. With Marina Buckley out of the way, Chapman may take her first overall victory of the year.

After Chapman, it will be a tossup as to who will finish next. A pack of runners have swapped positions, but have always been right up in the middle of the action. Julie Lafreniere, Jane Welzel, Sue Swartz, Maggie Crowley, Ann Bradshaw and Diane Perry have all finished high in previous meets, while Debbie Farmer and Barbara Callanan have both been close, and have broken into the top seven on occasion.

With three meets in the next season days, the women will have to avoid wearing themselves out in any one of them.

"I want to remind the women that we have a lot of races in a short period of time and not to try to get a 100 per cent performance out of each race," O'Brien said. "We'd like to approach each race with maybe 70, 75 or 80 per cent to make sure they run each one well, to win and also make sure we're on the progressive climb upward as the end of that seven day period comes, since we don't want to peak too soon."

"I think we all know where we stand as far as conditioning goes," O'Brien continued, "as far as competition goes it's time to work on a few things like a fast first mile or fast finish and hill running as well. Trying to polish these things will be our goal."



After a week off, the UMass football team should be physically and mentally rested for this Saturday's Yankee Conference battle with Boston University at Nickerson Field. What's happening on the sports front

A few comments on names in the sports scene while wondering what free agents the Red Sox are going to sign.

PHIL ESPOSITO — The likeable former Bruin center was in Springfield last week for a game between the Rangers and Washington Capitals. "You're going to see the Rangers up there very shortly," said the Ranger captain of his team. The Blueshirts may be, at that, as they have added a good goaltender in former WHA star Giles Gratton, a policeman in the form of Nick Fotiu, the ex-Whaler, who was once the golden gloves boxing champion of New York City and Ken Hodge, who will beef up the Rangers power play. When asked if he had anything to do with the Rangers getting Ken Hodge, Espo replied, "Yeah, I told them he was the biggest jerk in hockey." Then he got serious and said he told the Rangers that he thought if the team acquired the right wing, he would be beneficial to the club and to him. He doesn't think the Bruins will receive compensation for Orr and called the Black Hawk defensemen, "the best player in the game." On Dallas Smith, Esposito said, "if the Bruins don't want him, we'll take him."

DAVE SCHULTZ — Are the Broad Street Bullies attempting to change their image, seeing that they have traded their number one bad boy to Los Angeles? Don't bet on that, as the Flyers still have players like Bob Kelly, Moose Dupont and Bill Saleski.

"The Flyers were looking to the future when they traded Schultz," said Philadelphia scout Walt Atanas. "They didn't want to waste him on the bench, as they plan to move Rick McLeish to left wing and use Mel Bridgemen at center."

HAL MCRAE — Even though I'm rooting for his team to beat the Yankees, I'll be hoping that the Royals' DH goes 0 for the playoffs. Its a sad situation when racism has to be brought into something like the batting title. McRae has charged that Twins outfielder Steve Brye let George Brett's fly ball drop in front of him on purpose because he wanted a white guy to win the title. If any prejudice was involved on that play it might of been at McRae the person, not McRae the black athlete. Before the game, McRae told Rod Carew, who was in the running for the batting title that the Kansas City pitchers were going to pitch around him, so he shouldn't take batting practice. So maybe it was McRae's loud mouth that cost him the title.

KEN GRIFFEY — The Cincinnati Reds outfielder tried to pull what Alex Johnson did in 1970 and sit out the final game of the season to protect the lead he had for the batting title. The only thing Griffey and Sparky Anderson didn't figure was Bill Madlock going 4-4 on the final day to overtake the league leader. Johnson edged Carl Yastrzemski by percentage points six years ago, when he decided to rest on the final day of the season instead of trying to improve his average. What ever happened to players like Ted Williams, who in 1941 was told by his manager that he could sit out the last game to insure his .400 average. Williams said no and went on to have a big day, raising his average to .406.

CATFISH HUNTER — The key to the Yankees post season hopes, Hunter, who failed to win 20 games for the first time since 1970, will start the opener for the New York team. In the four American League championship series he has participated in, the former Oakland A has three, lost two with an earned run average of 2.81. In the three world series he has been in, he has won four games, lost none with an ERA of 2.19. No wonder Billy Martin is passing up Ed Figueroa, who had a better season than the "three million dollar man." Hunter's experience just might be enough to lead the Yankees to the championship they have been after for 12 years.

UDancers Defined

by Leila Bruno

Because the UMass University Dancers really deserve recognition by everyone here, I thought that if by some chance you didn't already know about them, it's time you did.

As a group they impressed me as being genuinely dedicated, as well as respectful of one another in relation to their art.

In an organization like the UDancers complete cooperation is essential for success, which is apparently one of the group's greatest assets.

The University Dancers, succinctly defined, are a company of approximately nineteen students from the five-college community (most of whom are dance majors) usually with extensive past training.

Directing the group is Miss Marilyn Patton, one of the founders of the UDancers and a faculty member (Department of Dance) at the North Women's Physical Education Building.

The dancers are selected by auditioning for the faculty and upon being chosen later perform in concerts and on tour, as well as working together on the technical areas of production with the faculty.

Although interested students at UMass have been randomly performing since 1966 the UDancers didn't officially commence until 1970.

At that time the first seven women to graduate as dance-concentration majors decided to perform at several surrounding high schools for the sheer enjoyment of dancing.

Since then (with the addition of men), they have grown considerably as celebrants of dance as an art-form.

The group is basically a self-supportive organization with no funding provided by the state although the residential colleges of Northeast and Southwest do accord some financial aid.

Along with two fo the faculty, the UDancers will tour during the month of January throughout the state.

Payment is then received from the various sponsors which is used to cover the costs of transportation, costumes, and set materials among other extraneous items.

Besides being expected to give a good performance the dancers are responsible for adjusting the sets upon which they present their program. (Which may include restructuring or setting down a floor, arranging seats, etc.

Among the other locales the group has toured are Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and all throughout Massachusetts.

In 1973 they even journeyed to Iran to perform in the Seventh International Congress on Girls' and Womens' Sports.

The selection of what pieces to be performed in concert are decided by having the students perform an excerpt for the faculty from their own choreography.

After the opportunity to perform has been granted the students then work to complete the number and begin rehearsing daily until opening night.

The languages of the different student works are frequently reflective of the styles taught by the faculty, but interpreted and innovated upon by the students.

Among the basic techniques used are modern, jazz, and ballet, along with the style and feeling of "dance to dance", as described by Miss Patton. That particular philosophy reminded me of what Martha Graham, who is the high priestess of modern recently said about dance being a "joyousness of technique — and appetite for life, a wonderful hunger for experience."

The UDancers present a total of thirty performances a year which makes them one of the most active companies in the country in comparison to most other college dance groups, working for nine months of the year with a break of only two weeks.

That's a large order considering that it's unpaid overtime for the faculty and only one credit a semester for the dancers!

Nevertheless the experience acquired by being a UDancer is invaluable to those who will seek a career in dance either teaching or performing professionally.

As Miss Patton explained to me the group was initiated primarily out of a "student need" towards a better feel of performing and working on productions.

Incidentally, next semester the UDancers will be presenting a program that is going to be entirely produced by the students, while this November they will perform in the "Lebow" concert to be held in the Fine Arts Center.

Those currently with the group all strive towards the artistic success of the UDancers, not themselves individually as "stars".

"There is no room for an egotistical person in the arts anymore," Miss Patton had commented dryly at our interview.

The level of rapport between everyone is unusually good with many past UDancers keeping in contact with each other.

"I find it thrilling to watch the kids grow and develop," declared Miss Patton and added "We become involved with each other."

Judging from observations made and comments directly from several of the dancers apparently this is true. Most of the time, although working together so closely and frequently can be a real strain.

The faculty members all agree that their main value here at UMass concerns what they can do for the students.

In fact, Patton herself believes that they literally dedicate their lives for the welfare of those who are serious about dance.

Miss Patton also declared that she would continue her many responsibilities with her classes and the UDancers "Until I drop!"

Along with faculty members Richard Jones, Andrea Watkins, and Daniel Peterson, Miss Patton believes that their value at UMass is solely for the students' benefit, and upon that unselfish theory they dedicate their lives.

Despite the long hours, hard work, and endurance involved, (not to mention sore muscles) the UDancers nevertheless keep devotedly at their art.

Perhaps the common bond of a love of dance keeps the group together in harmony as well as in motion.

Dancers²

by Joyce Goldberg

The foot-stomping tradition of square dancing has become more popular today than ever, especially in the eyes of the "Haymaker's" at UMass.

The art is truly enjoyed by many as enthusiastic, friendly, and cooperative — people kick up their heels in the Student Union Building every Tuesday evening from 8:00 to 10:00.

The "Haymaker's" dance for physical, social, and cultural reasons, evidenced in the glowing happy faces of the members.

Beginners who have attended two previous meetings are welcome to join the UMass Haymaker's Square Dance Club in the Commuter Lounge until Tuesday, October 5.

The caller and instructor, Ms. Susan Autio, presents the dances clearly and simply so all the participants can learn.

Her voice fits the rhythm of the music and her lively-spirited, well-timed calls lead the dancers while giving them time to react to the directions.

During the evening program the types of dances progress from the most basic and simple movements, (the swing, circle, and promenade) to more difficult steps. All sets on the floor are taught simultaneously by Ms. Autio whose voice can be heard saying "Okay gang, square your sets."

Shouts from relieved beginners of "I did it this time!" are not uncommon as "club-level" members assist beginners.

"Club-level" is attained by joining the club for one semester and attending a graduation and initiation ceremony.

At the ceremony a brown "Haymaker" badge is given to members identifying them as square dancers who have learned the fifty basic steps and calls.

This entitles the dancer to be accepted into any of the twenty-three clubs belonging to the Western Mass. "Square and Round Dance" Association.

The "Haymakers" is a forty member club with an executive board of five and to pay for the caller, members who have "club-level" degrees are charged $5.00 per semester. The rate for "beginners" lessons is slightly higher.

The "Haymaker's" is open to all Five-College area students, and on the first Saturday of every month "club-level" members meet for a dance usually at Farley Lodge.

Glomb described the group as "highly innovative," being the only college square dancing club in the Five-College area.

In Colonial times, square dancing was a social event occasionally performed after sheep-shearing, when families got together and drove for miles to be with friends to dance in grange halls, barns, and fire-houses.

As Vincent, club vice-president says, "It's a fun and relaxing way to leave academics behind for a while."

Whether they are young or old, raised in the city or rural areas, dressed in skirts or dungarees, they enjoy releasing pent-up energy.

When Sue Autio's voice becomes weary and her calls hoarse, she places the song "Sweet Gypsy Rose" on the turntable, the cue to start "the line dance."

Sue joins the end of the line, taking running steps to the side, to the front, and leaping in the air with clapping hands yelling "Ya hoo!"

The "line dance" was the finale to the Tuesday evening meeting, performed with the last spurt of energy by the Haymakers.

Petruchio 1- Kate 0

by Sam Judson

A show that was performed 1077 times on Broadway, Cole Porter's Kiss Me Kate will be staged by the UMass Music Theatre Guild in Bowker Auditorium of Stockbridge Hall on November 18.

A cast of some 26 students began rehearsing the musical comedy on September 18 under the direction of Jon Crane. Sam and Bella Spewacks' book involves a troupe of players who tour several cities of Italy enacting a musical version of Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew."

Life backstage centers around a flamboyant ex-married couple, Fred Graham, played by Steven Young; and Lilli Vanessi, played by Deborah Stimson. The two just happen to be starring in the "Shrew" and we see how the uneveness of their reunion off-stage parallels Shakespeare's comedy onstage.

Graham plays Petruchio, who has arrived in Padua to wed the dreaded virago, Katherina, played by Vanessi. While Petruchio tames Kate the curst, Graham attempts to replant the former flowers which once bloomed for him and Vanessi.

Another principal characters is Lois Lane, played by Suzanne McCarthy, whom Graham has removed from a run-down night club she performed in, to be in the show with him.

We soon discover that Bill Calhoun, played by Frank Aronson, an irresponsible but charming dancer who gambles a bit too much, is really meant for Miss Lane.

Porter's music and lyrics filled the house of Broadway's Century Theater on December 30, 1948 when Kiss Me Kate first opened.

Director Crane has decided to update the backstage setting from 1948 to 1976, employing simple, every-day costumes, and depicting a present day Theater group.

Crane is presently working towards his P.H.D. in the Communication Studies department at UMass. He is also teaching two Media courses here.

At the Dallas Theatre Center he directed "Everyman," "Who is Cassandra," and "She was only a Farmer's Daughter."

At the University of New Orleans he directed such shows as "The Cradle Song," "Little Mary Sunshine," and "The Fantastiks." Some of the shows that he directed in the Globe Players at U. of New Orleans include: "The Odd Couple," Shakespeare's "Measure for Measure," "The Subject was Roses," "Fiddler on the Roof," "The Glass Menagerie," and "Butterflies are Free."

Crane has a B.A. in Theatre at U. of New Orleans, and has done extensive studies in Shakespeare and Elizabethan dramatists at Tulane.

He has studied with members of the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Arts. He has also played leading roles in such shows as "The Tempest", and "Fiddler On the Roof."

He has directed three television programs for U. of New Orleans, including a documentary on Henry David Thoreau. At this time he is Theatrical advisor for the UMass Music Theatre Guild, assisting in ironing out production problems.

"Professionalism is not an Equity Card, it's an attitude." This statement best summarizes Crane's concept of the dramatic arts as formulated during his varied experience.

Globe Book Fair: Literati Burgeon

by Spencer Vibbert

The ninth annual Boston Globe Book Fair held at the Hynes Auditorium last weekend was, for the uninitiated, and interesting proposition. The 31,000 who visited the three-day event were free to wander through the exhibits, demonstrations, and speeches that went on late into the evening. In the process many backs were scratched. Publishers displayed their fall line-up, dealers hawked their overstock, Globe writers introduced authors, and authors introduced new works. It was a bright, well-organized affair eventful for college kids, old ladies with shopping bags, autograph hounds, simply curious book-lovers, and, of course, the well placed representatives of Boston's burgeoning literati.

There was Kurt Vonnegut, the counter-culture guru, speaking to a crowd of 5,000 in the Auditorium, Doris Kearns, teacher at Harvard, and author of a notoriously intimate biography of L.B.J., George V. Higgins, the Boston lawyer-crime writer and protege of virtually everybody, and Erma Bombeck, delight of women's pages across the country, author of a new humor book, ominously titled, The Grass is Always Greener Over the Septic Tank.

Besides these were horticulturists, calliographists, bicycle inventors, unabashed erotic poetesses, ex-priests turned mystery writers, speech writers, historians, faith-healers, and reformed junkies. It was, in short, a book-reader's supermarket; where one could stroll the aisles munching hot pretzels or slurping draught beer, fingering merchandise of all sorts and quality. It was something the Globe would do but not the Herald; (in fact the word was out there would be a similar jazz-festival at Thanksgiving). For three short days the Hynes became a bustling refuge of possibilities rather than an architectural mausoleum best suited to the memory of Tech Tournees and faded high-school glory.

George Vincent Higgins, 35, author of five novels and one non-fiction work, strolled into the auditorium Friday night impeccably dressed in a light blue three piece suit, ready to take on all comers, even though the dismal, rainy weather had kept many away. The author of The Friends of Eddie Coyle was no more pleasingly drunk than the woman who gave his introduction, Margeret Manning, book editor of the Globe, and wife of the Atlantic publisher Robert Manning. Higgins, former assistant to the Massachusetts Attorney General and former federal prosecutor now turned private attorney was, in fact, loaded for bear. After a few choice words for a singularly obtuse critic who assaulted him, Higgins took the stage, lacing into a few of the gentleman's colleagues.

Later he would confide to an interviewer that when he wrote it was in 14 hr. a day stretches, that he had written the first draft of a Washington novel, A City on a Hill in 10 such days, and that the problem with the book, which he regretted, was its not containing enough simple exposition for the average reader. Besides bringing out a new novel, The Judgement of Deke Hunter (about a state cop and Massachusetts Criminal Justice among other things) he was engaged as attorney for G. Gordon Liddy. When asked why, he nearly shouted, "20 years! 20 years they gave the guy!" (the maximum sentence given a Watergate conspirator). His remarks regarding his disengagement from former Black Panther Eldrige Cleaver's defense were off the record. He had just come back from Washington. His clients always called him on Sundays. He had gone through numerous typewriters writing novels. He impressed the interviewer as a man who rarely slept.

George V . Higgins

The most gracious remarks afforded Higgins the whole weekend were those of a contemporary, Robert Parker, a fast-rising writer of detective stories based in Boston, and, in his spare time, a professor of English at Northeastern. "George is one of the most misunderstood writers I know... he is really writing experimental fiction, he is actually going in the direction Henry James often wrote of."

Parker, himself no slouch, spoke Saturday afternoon to a crowd of detective-story aficianados who obviously enjoyed his jovial, kidding manner. A pudgy Irishman in his middle thirties, Parker writes novels about a hero named Spenser, a guy who takes pains to tell people he spells his name "just like the English poet." Spenser is an up-dated Phillip Marlowe; his territory is Boston rather than Los Angeles but his manner is similar: the hard-bitten dick with scruples.

"Every writer wants to populate an imaginary world with a kind of concrete specificity," Parker told his audience. The legitimate concerns of the writer are "in the words of Faulkner: the old verities and truths of the art. "One might write about this Indian," he said holding up a drawing, "but that would be the occasion, not the subject. The subject is life itself."

Parker said the obvious influences on his writing were Chandler and Hammett; the not so obvious ones, Hemingway and Faulkner. He said writers like Chandler, due to a recent biography, were finally being recognized as the artists they were; though even he still smarted from the image of being "merely" a detective story writer. "Daddy, when are you going to do a real novel," Parker's son asked him one day. "Shut up" Parker reasoned with him.

Parker's best known works are God Bless the Child and The Goduwulf Manuscript both starring Spenser, the detective who doubles as a gourmet cook. The latter book makes thinly veiled references to what any Bostonian would know is Northeastern University. His new work "The Promised Land" has just been brought out by Houghton Mifflin. Parker would "adore" seeing his books made into movies.

Ms. Manning underwhelmed the audience with her introduction. "George thinks he's the greatest writer who ever lived. I think he's pretty good. Ladies and gentlemen, George Higgins." The writer early-on penned "the Balzac of Bullet-Letters," then proceeded with a fifteen minute speech on the loves and perils of writing fiction for money; pausing to quote Joyce and Faulkner and to ruminate on the genital deficiency of a certain critic on the Houston Chronicle.

"I don't know how the hell I got here," he exclaimed, swaying slightly, "and I regret it as much as you do." Then with a writer's braggadocio he went on in the flat, nasal tones of pure Boston: "I had this bad habit of writing novels that nobody bought."

On writing as a profession: "You don't do it by choice, you never had the choice to do anything else... as a rule I go a lot on sound and cadence... there is nothing quite as pleasant as getting the galley-proofs of your next book. Nothing."

On writing screen-plays that get rejected: "The people who make movies are called bankers. They said 'This is not great American literature' and they were right."

By the end of his speech Higgins had visibly warmed up to the audience, getting laughs for the occasional expletives thrown into the question and answer period. A young black stood up and asked how to proceed in journalism school, "Get out," Higgins shot back, recounting how he had once got a job with a newspaper after the editor had made sure Higgins had never attended such an institution. When questioned further on how to break into journalism Higgins replied, "Why be a journalist?... there's no money in it, the hours are awful, you're on when everyone is off work, you're off when everyone else is on... if you're really successful you might end up making as much as a middle management guy in a welding corporation." Exit one deflated black journalism student.

The media event of the weekend was Kurt Vonnegut's speech Saturday night. It was a coup for the Globe to bring it off; it brought thousands of Boston's college students into the Fair. Partitions had to be brought down to seat everybody (4,000 or so) on the floor of the Auditorium. The crowd buzzed with the names Billy Pilgrim, Kilgore Trout and Elliot Rosewater on everybody's lips. Flash-bulbs were adjusted. The publishers had thoughtfully provided thousands of red, white and blue buttons to be worn, announcing in bold letters, the title of the writer's new book."

Slapstick!
Lonesome No More!
Vonnegut

Globe writer Bruce McCabe's introduction dwelt on Vonnegut's experience as a prisoner of war during the fire-bombing of Dresden during World War II. There wasn't a soul in the house who hadn't heard of it, or for that matter hadn't read of it in Slaughter House Five. When Vonnegut took the stage in a dark, pin-stripe suit, looking younger than his 54 years he was greeted with thunderous almost reverential applause. The familiar curly hair, the bushy moustache and glasses, the near apologetic gait — here was a father figure to the millions of college kids who had gobbled up his books all during the sixties and on into the seventies. It was conceivable he had been for them what Charlie Chaplin had been for the parents; a compatriot, one who knew life was fundamentally tragic — the only thing to do was laugh about it.

Vonnegut began by telling his audience he hadn't had time to write a new speech so he'd be reading one he gave earlier in the week at a dedication for the new library at Connecticut College in New London. He added a comic touch by gesturing, now, and then, to the imaginary library behind him, on the platform at the Hynes.

The gift of speech had to do with the values of books and writers in society; without which man would have few outlets for his imaginative powers. He said he had once experimented with the "socially fruitless" meditation techniques of Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. He then proceeded to demonstrate this technique, closing his eyes and humming his mantra for all to hear. Next he listed the great authors and books of western civilization, concluding, that "reading and writing are the most nourishing forms of meditation anyone has ever discovered."

He asked rhetorically, "Are we foolish to be so elated by books in an age of movies and t.v.? and answered, "Absolutely not."

Citing film as the "perfect crutch" for the under-development imagination he maintained it was "a hideously costly way to tell stories." Vonnegut admitted the printed word was a difficult medium to master. "Reading is such a difficult thing to do... most of us spend our childhoods learning how to do it alone."

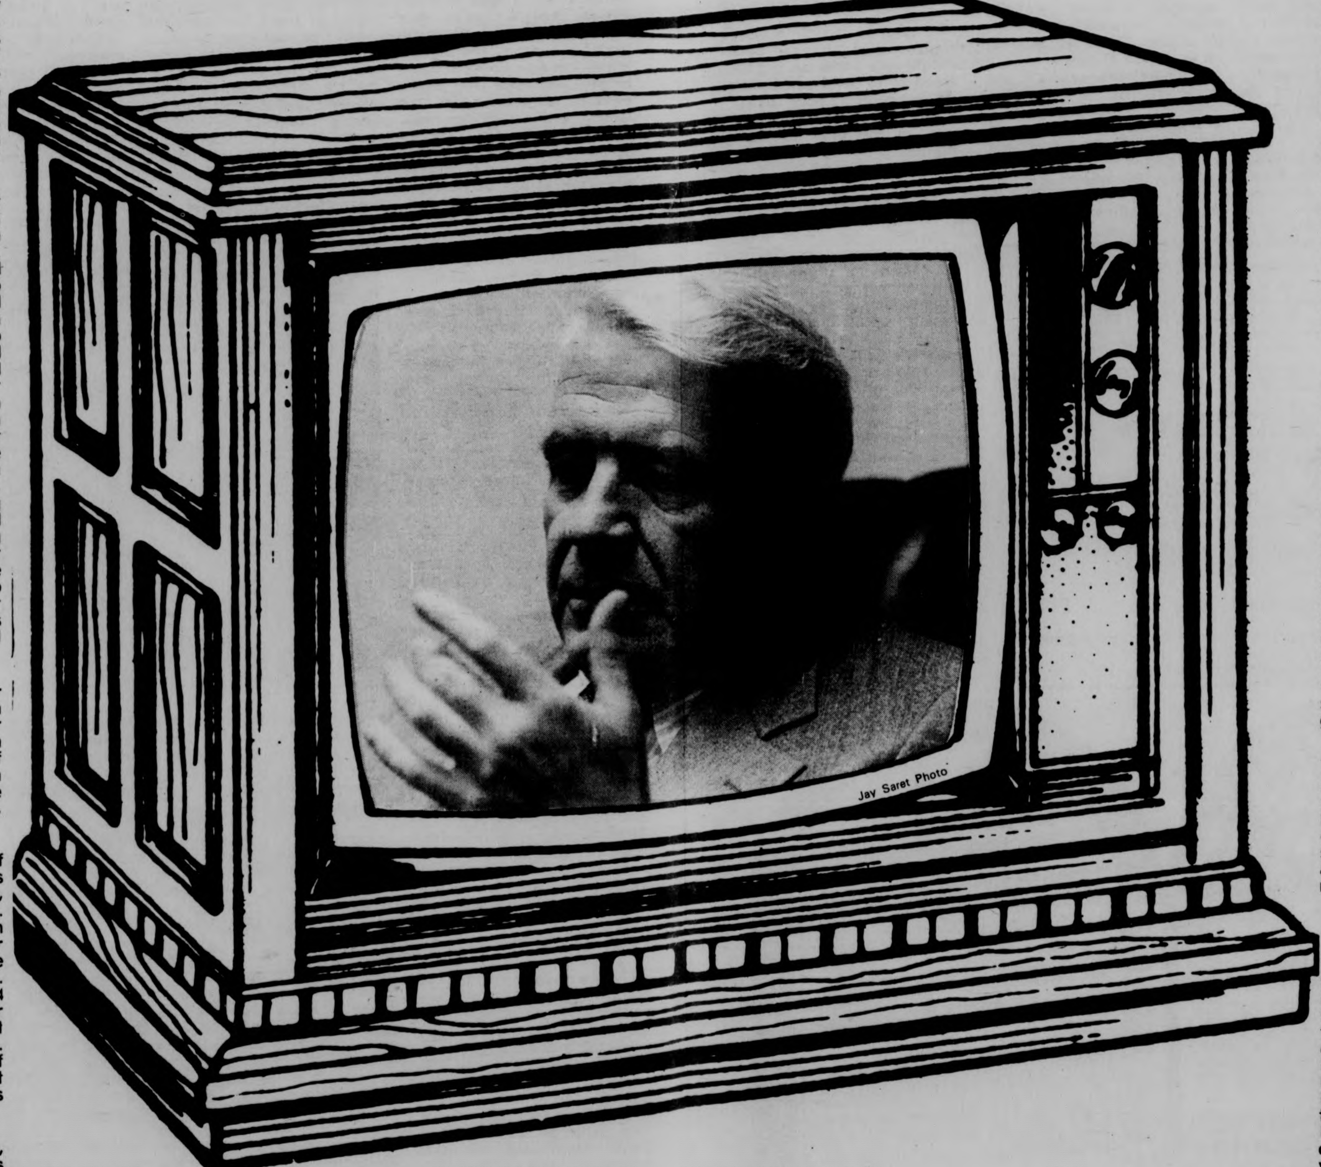
the Below the Salt interview

Harry Reasoner; not just another pretty face



by Rick Gureghian and Paul Bradley

He is a man beset by the common touch, a six-figure a year salaried news anchorman whose office reminds one of a junior accountants in a multi-faceted firm. His only submission to the luxuries of position are an over-stuffed black vinyl swivel chair — and a New York Mets jacket hanging limply behind the door.

But for Harry Reasoner — respected and revered — the dean of ABC Evening News, the overt extravagances of prime time television have been loosed upon his career. He has watched with sullied pride the recruitment of another media star to share his limelight, her awardance of a salary twice his own, and the inclusion of ratings, entertainment and happy talk to strengthen the image of the news. For a man whose journalistic credentials stretch back almost 35 years, upstart Barbara Walters and the promotional hype about her should be a hard thing to swallow. Harry says it isn't — and Barbara isn't talking!

Reasoner's 7th floor office is enmeshed within the labrynth of ABC studios on West 67th St. Unlike the corporate offices located in the heart of Manhattan, the news segment of ABC has always been ignored. That is, until the network lured Walters away from NBC, offering her a multitude of money, the chance to do documentaries and specials, and a co-anchor spot on the Evening News. From that point on, the exorbitantly budgeted and highly professional entertainment segment of ABC got into the act, primping the newly created news duo as the first and finest mixed news show on television.

In the beginning, the headlines that heralded Walters' imminency also brought skepticism from Reasoner. Feeling slighted at the publicity and expense surrounding the new co-anchorwoman, Reasoner reportedly refused to continue as an anchorman unless his salary was raised — and allegedly offered a few choice quotes about Walters ability. Reflecting on the past brouhaha concerning Walters, Reasoner denied over having questioned the money aspects, saying, "I never said anything about the money at all. The only thing I said about the money, which is one of the few areas I am not neurotic, is not about what other people make. But if I make, well; I won't say fair, but as much as I can get — if I make that much, I don't care if somebody is making more. It was fairly well known when the subject first came up that I was initially against it. But it was not against a woman, and it was not against Barbara, it was against a co-anchor. But I came around, and I think maybe it's a good idea!"

But ABC's promotion of Walters, making her out to be a celebrity, rather than a newscaster, was at first thought to have irked Reasoner's newscasting pride. He denied such feelings, reasoning, "She is the new element in the broadcast. She is by nature a great novelty, the first woman co-anchor. She's an extremely well-known person in broadcasting, I think probably the best known woman in broadcasting news. So I think it's natural, as the news show starts; the new element with all its characteristics, it should get the publicity."

That may be so, but for Reasoner, schooled in a journalistic field of perserverence, it must be a grating throb within his mind. Born in Dakota City, Iowa in 1923, Reasoner was educated at Stanford University and the University of Minnesota — but he never did receive a degree. In 1942, he joined the Minneapolis Times, worked a year and was then drafted into the Army. After the war he returned to the Times — and worked as a drama critic from 1946-1948. From then on, broadcasting beckoned.

He became a newswriter for WCCO in Minneapolis in 1950 and then just as quickly joined the United States Information Agency in Manila. He lasted three years, and then landed a job as news director for a Minneapolis TV station. In 1956 though, his "break" came when CBS News hired him. He toiled for almost seven years as a correspondent and in February of 1963, he took over as anchorman of CBS Sunday News. It was, as they say, rags to riches.

Ironically, Reasoner didn't always want to be a journalist, although his pursuit of such an occupation should belie that fact. He added, "I thought I was headed for the foreign service. I went to Stanford because that was a good school for the foreign service. I ran out of money, and I came back to the University of Minnesota. I had always liked writing, so I started hanging around the campus humor magazine, which was edited by a man by the name of Max Shulman — who became a very prominent humor writer. So we were in the basement of the journalism building, and I was sort of there, and I took Introductory Reporting 1A and decided Journalism. World War II was in the process of coming along, and I was quite a bit younger than my class group, so when the reporters in Minnesota started to get drafted — I had about a year before I got drafted — and I was able to get a job and I quit school for that."

In one felt swoop, Reasoner destroyed the belief in journalism schools as a prerequisite for aspiring journalists, adding, "On the basis of which is still true: If you can get a job on a metropolitan paper, it's better than a B.A. The only trouble is except during a war, you can't."

His career at CBS had been of rising-star quality. He was assigned the choicest assignments, the plushest journalistic plums. The list is unending, beginning with his post as co-anchorman for coverage of Pope Paul's visit to the United States in October, 1965. After covering the 1964 Presidential election, he took over as White House correspondent from January 1965 to August, 1966. He covered the House of Representatives on election night in 1966 and had major assignments in the 1968 election campaigns.

But it was his in-house reportage, the numerous CBS News documentaries and news specials that garnered him the most praise. He was the reporter on the "Portrait" and "One of a Kind" series, and co-host of "Dear CBS" and "Calendar." He was guide on the light-hearted essays on bridges, on doors, on hotels, American automobiles, and women — plus "The Strange Case of the English Language" in March of 1968.

He has also won journalism awards, so many they would be too numerous to name. But the distinguishments, so long and so varied, are another tribute to Reasoner's continued professionalism.

He learned from the best, one of his associates being the famed Edward R. Murrow, a man who so revolutionized news broadcasting that even today, no one person has ever threatened his pedestal. Murrow's forte was reporting; incisive, straight-forward, and sometimes damned near destructive. He had more power, more prestige, and more of a following throughout America than any broadcast journalist since.

But in being so, the implications raised, reverberated back to Murrow's fame, and Walters recent celebrity status. Journalism has definitely been weakened, threatened by the rise of journalists as stars themselves. Said Reasoner, "I think that it obviously has its dangers. I think it is important for the media to keep a sense of perspective, and I think back. I once asked of Edward Murrow essentially the same question. He was very much the center of attention. I asked him what he thought of the star system, did he think that it hurt. Well, he didn't think so, but he said 'as long as you remember, meaning 'you' as a star, that although your voice carries halfway around the world, you are no wiser than when it carried only to the end of the bar."

Even today though, Reasoner reflects back on the past, the deadlines, the beats, chasing fires in the night. But his stardom is his biggest obstacle; it becomes increasingly more difficult to cover stories. "This business is fairly young," he said, "I think broadcasting has been going on for about 20 years, and that is how long I've been in it. And Charlie Kuralt, and a couple of other guys and myself invented how to do it. So there are still areas where I think I can make a contribution. But sometimes you can't cover a story because of the attention that you get. (Walter) Cronkite can't cover a story because he'd be more interesting than the story. But there are stories where I think you can do a good job — including overseas."

Such happenstance has followed Reasoner, and "it happens to an extent in this country. People take an interest in who you are. But it is balanced by the fact that an anchorman can sometimes get in to see somebody, or get a phone call answered that an inexperienced reporter could not."

His role as an anchorman has given him the power to sometimes shape the news itself, and he worries about that power, realizing that it is inherent within reporting, but even more so, realizing that it is as equally preponderant within the politics and politicians he covers. Reflecting on the Presidential debates between President Ford and Jimmy Carter, Reasoner said, "I think they're a transparent dodge to void the law. I don't think that it is ever nice, especially when the two men involved are vying for our nation's Presidency. It's a bad thing to have responsible organizations like the League of Women Voters, the two candidates, and the networks all colaborating to evade the law. Of course, the solution is simple. It would take a responsible Congress about an hour to suspend Section 315, and let us report the news."

Although the debates have enjoyed widespread publicity, both candidates and a quaudry of other politicians have criticized the press, blaming their multitude of problems on them. But Reasoner professed no worry concerning the abundance of criticism, saying, "I have always had a theory, whether you are dealing with mayors, or governor, or presidents, or presidents of corporations, if there is not some kind of antagonism between the news source and the new coverer, one of them is not doing their job. It is basically an antagonistic relationship. That does not mean that it cannot be respectful, or friendly, but public officials and candidates want to do good things, and he wants the press to tell the people that he is doing good things, and he doesn't want the press to ask any embarrassing questions. And that is true of Jimmy Carter, and it was most notably true of Richard Nixon, who emotionally felt that the press was out to get him. But that was extreme, but the theory is true of all presidents — I don't think that it was true of Dwight Eisenhower, because I don't think that he noticed the press — but it was true of practically every President."

The Carter phenomenon was on his mind though, and he added that he spotted Carter earlier than most members of the journalistic pack. "I won a lot of money on that one," he said. "For a fairly unusual time, I was right, I spotted him last November and I made some bets at very good odds."

He admitted that he was impressed with Carter, saying, "I was making an effort last fall to meet all of the Democratic candidates, not for interviews, but just so we would know each other during the campaign. He came up to the office and spent an hour with us. I just felt, in the first place, that he had an extremely fine mind. He was the guy who had the clearest conception of this years campaign, of what he had to do, about how to use the Federal Campaign Finance laws, and where he ought to campaign. I just had the feeling, compared to the other guys that I saw, and on the assumption that people would not vote for Humphrey. I just thought he was very likely to win.

But he admitted, like many others, that Kennedy could have been a spoiler, saying, 'I think that any time up until the Ohio primary, Kennedy could have had the nomination if he wanted it, but I assume that he meant what he said.

Within his trade, though, Reasoner expressed a fear for the future of journalism, its quality and its existence. He added, "I am sometimes depressed by the quality of writing I see in young reporters in the papers that I read. I don't work with them out on the street, so I don't know how they are at that. There is a danger of a few years ago that I think has disappeared. In the turmoil of the 1960s, a lot of young reporters were turned off by the idea of objectivity. They wanted to be involved, and practice the journalism of activism, they thought they should be on the right side, helping them. I thought that was extremely dangerous, because if you are right with one group in one year you will be wrong the next. I think mass journalism, you have to stay in the middle. But I think that danger has disappeared, or lessened to a great degree. There is always room for the journalism of opinion, but I am talking about mass circulation papers, and mass circulation broadcasting. I think we should play it down the middle.

Harry Reasoner's career may be at the crossroads. His teaming with Barbara Walters, and the general direction of journalism today, may be the death note for responsible reporting. Only time will tell, but implicit within such a prediction is a small bit of bantering between Reasoner and Walters last week.

The high priced priestess encountered Reasoner, and in jest said to him, "You're in a no win situation. Countered Reasoner, 'no, you're in a no win situation! The fact is of the matter remains as Reasoner previously implied, the craft of journalism may be in a no win situation!

> His career has been of rising-star quality.
> He was assigned the choicest assignments,
> the plushest journalistic plums.
> The list is unending...

Doctor Dodder

Dear Doctor Dodder,

I know that you usually answer questions about plants but I do not have any problems with my plants, just my dog. Miles is a golden retriever who has not yet had his spark plugs removed and believe me, he is a live wire of an animal. We have enough space to handle his bursts of energy but every time I hang the wash to dry, he pulls down all of the freshly laundered clothes and buries them. He does not chew them or dirty them at all, occasionally I have found the clothes pins still attached to the neatly folded clothes. What can I do?

Still a Plant Lover

Dear Lover,

How about hanging your clothes on a higher clothes line.

Dear Doctor Dodder,

What are the chances of growing avocados on the East Coast? And if it is possible, how do I start?

Holy Guacamole

Dear Holy,

The probability of ever having an avocado tree bear fruit in New England are about the same as convincing someone that the world is flat. But for those of you who still believe that we are living in 15th century Europe and are not overly awed by the prospects of a thirty foot tree growing in your living room here we go.

First you must obtain the seed which happens to be located inside the fruit. The seed should show signs of cracking and yet not appear too hard and dry. Insert three toothpicks into the side just far enough to support the seed on the edge of a tumbler of water. Keep the level of water up to and just touching the bottom of the seed. Remember that is is a land plant and not a seaweed so do not float or submerge the avocado pit in water. In a few weeks roots and shoots should emerge.

Dear Doctor Dodder,

The warm weather is finishing off in grand fashion. Along with the myriad of blooming wildflowers the crowns of the trees above soon will be a blaze in the hues of Apollo. I dread thinking that this winter the most color I can look forward to is the falling pine needles. Aren't there any plants which will be in bloom over the winter?

Acer saccharum

Dear Acer,

What is wrong with falling pine needles? Why curl up around a roaring fire when you can be out identifying trees by their bud scales? Here are some plants though which will do well inside with you and that Art History book you should have started reading in September. Try some begonias, or some hyacinth, paperwhite narcissus, scented geraniums, jasmines, or even an amaryllis or two.

The narcissus, hyacinth and amaryllis are bulbs which require "Forcing" but to force a bulb one does not need bamboo splinters under the leaf scales or even to force the narcissus into an iron maiden; but I will go into forcing in greater detail next week.

Doctor Dodder will be happy to answer any and all questions, attempt to solve your plant problems, so if you want to exhibit your rose, or just want to know what mushrooms to dazzle your friends with at the dinner table, tell them to write the doctor in care of BELOW THE SALT.

He said he wasn't a very religious man, having been brought up a Unitarian, but the "freedom to read and speak was thunderously holy" as far as he was concerned. Books were, in the final analysis, "literary mantras that have worked like dreams."

Vonnegut left the hall to rousing applause, moving in to the exhibition area to sign autographs. He could have used a phalanx of Secret Servicemen to protect him from well-wishers. Somebody at the Globe had the presence of mind to seat him behind a railing so that he wasn't swarmed. Copies of his new novel, his first in three years, Slapstick, or Lonesome No More were thrust at him to sign. He answered questions politely but it was clear he would be glad to leave. For an hour or so last Saturday night, in Boston, fame had caught up with Kurt Vonnegut.

THE HARVEST FESTIVAL
Canaan, N.H.
by Mark Gunter

Yes, a fine time had by all.

The urbanites crowding and Rolling Rocking in front of the stage. As rural people, halfway back, stretching out amidst tents, fires, coolers, and friendly folks. And the real back country hicks, on the outskirts of the fairgrounds, cooking on grills in front of their tents, paying little attention to the music, but obviously in high spirits.

Canaan, New Hampshire. A small town in the foothills of the White Mountains. We continually wondered if they'd ever seen anything like this. From at least 4 a.m. Saturday until sometime that afternoon, there was a constant stream through the town of young and old hippies, greasers, bikies, and assorted derelict of all types from throughout New England. As we were waiting to get in, ½ mile from the entrance, a scout from another car came back saying there were already 60,000 people inside. Later reports said 45,000, 35,000, and finally 25,000. Anyways, like Arlo Guthrie said at Woodstock: "Lotta freaks." Weighed down with cases of beer, sleeping and green bags, and food, everyone was ready for a wild day of partying. And there probably were a few who came just to hear the music.

Much of the audience would have found enough entertainment just watching the diverse festivalers that stumbled, floated and weaved by them. But there was also music. From around 10 a.m. until after 9 p.m., and it was excellent.

White Mountain National Blend started things off. (Some may remember them from last spring when they had the unenviable job of opening for the Who in Boston.) They have a dedicated following in N.H. and Maine, and from the nodding heads and clapping hands, it looked as though they picked up a few more fans here.

The townspeople sat on their porches, bemused and amused, some taking movies. The storekeepers must have mixed feelings. Though they, and every other store within 20 miles, sold their every last beer, the stores were overrun. People eating food off the shelves, stealing cartons of smokes and cases of warm Pabst Blue Ribbon.

Maze, a Boston band, followed, and were the only ones of the day that played other bands' material almost exclusively. Nothing too exciting; most of the audience stayed sitting or lying down.

Dr. Hook cancelled but was replaced by Elephant's Memory, a New York band that made a few albums with John Lennon and Yoko Ono. Few knew who they were, but they played an easy going jazz-rock that got some people moving, and most everyone smiling.

Duke and the Drivers got all the Boston Boogiers (and there were lots of them) jumping and hollering.

Then came one of the long lost greats of rock: Canned Heat. Bob 'the Bear' Hite, the lead singer, was fatter than I'd imagined and it was with great delight and humor that I watched his flab shake perfectly in time with each song. He was the one to watch, but the rest of the band really cooked also, particularly Harvey Mandel on guitar. The crowd loved them. They played several of the old favorites: "Amphetamime Annie" (a song with a message), "Let's Work Together," "Fried Hockey Boogie;" ending with "On the Road again" and the Bear telling us for the third time "And don't forget to boogie!"

John Sebastian, dressed in a plain dark jacket instead of his trademark tie dyes, was greeted with cheers, for being a semi-legendary songwriter of the past, and jeers, for having written a TV show's theme song. Accompanied only by a pianist and his guitar, he played a quiet set with several high spots. "Nashville Cats" and "Red Eye Express" brought rounds of approval, but when he started "Welcome Back," the greasers and geeks in the crowd started booing. But no one could deny that his last song, "Darling, Be Home Soon," and old Lovin' Spoonful number, was beautiful.

The activities of the day caught up with me after that, and I slept through most of the James Montgomery set, waking up to see the last song, the people leaving, and night coming.

Everyone thought it was over, and all except the diehards and the immobile were gone when Bob Seger and the Silver Bullet Band came on. Too bad really. They were clearly the best band of the day; a good show band that is also highly talented musically. It was cold by then, but the remaining people, huddling towards the stage and around fires, were happy and enjoying the music, agreeing that this group would be 'the next big one.' "Turn the Page" will be a rock classic.

Then it was over. One-day festival friends said see you laters, picked up their pieces, and headed out through a sea of beer bottles.

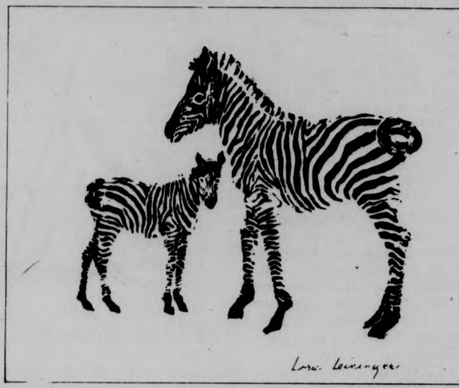
Prints Charming

by Harvey T. Rabitt and Stacy Belkind

The fine art of printmaking: a lay person's explanation as told to a rabbit who is evolving into a zebra. Did you ever look at the stripes of a zebra and wonder how they got that way? Well, various printmaking techniques will help you to understand the process.

There are three basic techniques with many varied, assorted and sundry ways to apply them. First is the planographic print more commonly referred to as lithography; invented at the turn of the 19th century by the notorious Bavarian creampuff Alois Senefelder. Interestingly enough, artists still use Heir Senefelder's quarry as their single source for obtaining the limestone used in lithography. This highly grounded limestome is used in conjunction with water, grease and ink. First, a thin coat of water is applied to the stone's surface. Onto this, the artist draws a design using different types of grease, wax, pencils, crayons and ink ("tusche") — not to be confused with the zebras. Ink is then rolled over the moistened surface; it adheres to the greasy areas and is repelled from the watery spots thus demonstrating de Greaze's most famous 50's maxim: grease and H20 don't mix. You can see some fine examples of 19th century lithography in the Collins Print Room of Amherst Colleges Mead Art Gallery.



Next comes the intaglio process from which we get dry point, engraving and etching. The intaglio technique utilizes metal plates (often copper) and tools of varying degrees of sharpness. The tools used in drypoint have sharp rounded tips that displace the metal leaving grooves into which ink is then rolled. In order to print the design paper must be moistened and then placed together with the plate into the press. The pressure exerted by the printing press must be powerful enough to force the paper into the grooves. The resulting print may usually, sometimes but occasionally have a fuzzy appearance (Was he?) Engraving differs from this technique in that the tools used are sharper, thus producing a crisper print. Etchings are also produced with sharp tools however, a coat or ground is applied to the plate before the design is made. Then the plate is dropped into a body of acid (don't drop the acid into the body by mistake) et voila! The acid "bites" away at the area no longer protected by the ground. Again ink is rolled on the plate to be printed. Want to see my etchings?

The final process under discussion is a relief. This technique differs from all previously mentioned because the print is produced from the raised portion of the block. The design can be drawn directly on the block, traced or stenciled in. The wood block technique of printmaking dates from the 15th century. Artists through the centuries have utilized the varying hardness and grains of the woods to produce a variety of textures in the print.

If this article has been confusing then by all means visit the print making studios located in the Fine Arts Center for first hand information. If this article has not confused you (for some unknown reason) you can still visit the studios and see it all for yourself.

Tashi: Live and Recorded

Left to Right: Fred Sherry, Ida Kavafian,
Peter Serkin, Richard Stoltzman

TASHI CONCERT REVIEW

by Robert Armstrong

Approximately two-thirds of the Fine Arts Center Concert hall seats were filled Tuesday night, yet those in attendance responded enthusiastically to a performance by the quartet Tashi. The quartet is made up of pianist Peter Serkin, violinist Ida Kavafian, celloist Fred Sherry, and clarinetist Richard Stoltzman.

Tashi has received a considerable amount of press attention in the past year, particularly in the New York area. The main reasons for this attention are the fact that Serkin is the son of renowned piano virtuoso Rudolf Serkin, the fact that Serkin wears his hair in a ponytail, and has expressed admiration for the music of Frank Zappa and the Grateful Dead. The group's new age orientation includes their name, the Tibetian word for good fortune, the fact that they devote much of their repetoire to modern and avant-garde music, and the fact that they played on a very well received double bill at the rock emporium The Bottom Line in New York with Anthony Braxton last spring.

All this is, of course, periphereal to the music proper, and if Tashi's performance Tuesday night is indicative of their normal standard of musicianship, they deserve to be heralded for their virtuosity, while their image should be recognized as being of secondary importance.

The program began with Debussy's Clarinet Rhapsody, a duet with Serkin on piano and Stoltzman on clarinet. The piece began in a slow, pensive character, then evolved into the multi-colored combinations of sombre, joyous, and ironic passages typical of Debussy's works. Serkin adroitly performed the varied piano structures with the appropriate punctuality, while Stoltzman wove some beautifully clear and singing notes with a lucidity befitting a clarinet rhapsody.

This was followed by Mozart's Trio for Piano, Violin, and Cello, Kochel No. 542 in E Major. The first movement of this piece was more playful and merry than the following two, which were relatively more formal and refined. The trio embodied all the niceties of formal chamber classicism. Mozart's works always place great demands on the musician, particularly in a chamber setting, as they require an almost impeccable sense of rhythmic precision and call for difficult, almost imperceivable variations in dynamics, but Tashi performed this work with great assurance and style. The weaving of Serkin's delicate piano phrasings and Kavafian and Sherry's strong yet graceful obligatos, made for enjoyable listening indeed.

There was a fifteen minute intermission during which Sherry took the opportunity to go on stage to announce what it was the quartet had performed, as the program was incorrect.

The finale was a composition written in 1975 by modern composer Charles Wuorinen expressly for the Quartet, appropriately entitled Tashi. The piece is made up of three movements and two interludes, and the music is of the polytonal, dissonant, structurally expansive character common to much of modern classical music. It is a piece of jagged, ironic, impulsive outcries from the instruments. Tashi performed this work with a conviction and intensity that resulted in a stimulating, thought-provoking performance of a composition of a highly spatial nature, throughout its entire thirty-five minutes.

Although the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall is perhaps too large for chamber music, the acoustics are excellent, and this helped to enrich an excellent performance by the Quartet, to which the audience responded enthusiastically with a long ovation, which was acknowledged by three bows from Tashi.

MESSIAEN: QUARTET FOR THE END OF TIME
AS PERFORMED BY TASHI
(RCA-Red Seal)

This work for piano, clarinet, violin, and cello was composed by Oliver Messiaen in a Nazi prisoner-of-war camp during World War II. The rather unusual instrumentation was determined by what was available in the concentration camp. Like much of Messiaen's work, this is a very thoughtful, brooding piece, with a great deal of polytonal structural separation between the instruments; a piece of musical existentialism that one might expect to be written in a prisoner-of-war camp.

The work is made up of intermittent, clanging chords and sparse notes on the piano, which Peter Serkin plays with the appropriate punctual-space-projection style, Fred Sherry plays lucid, somber cello figures with considerable cleanliness, Ida Kavafian bows tense, sinewy notes on the violin, and Stoltzman warbles in and out with clear clarinet vibratos. The piece has a very expansive character and a variety of tonal depths and colors.

This is no party album. It is an album to listen to while reading some of John Cage's more esoteric writings or while contemplating whether or not the universe is actually expanding.

—Bob Armstrong

RICHARD PRYOR
Bicentennial Nigger
(Warners)

FRANKLYN AJAYE
Don't Smoke Dope, Fry Your Hair
(Little David)

Right away you know Richard Pryor is somethin' special. He's a comedian's comedian. Not only is his rap funny, but it also has a message and wisdom. Bicentennial Nigger is his latest, following the superb This Nigger's Crazy and Is It Something I Said?. Unfortunately, it's not quite up to its forefathers due to some silly one-liner skits which are really not appreciated or needed. But the rest of Bicentennial is top shelf Pryor. Once again we're treated with the latest addition of "Mudbone" tales, the fantasy story of an old black wino and his recollections. Here's where Pryor reaches maximum splendor, using his twisted imagination and his real life experiences. "Mudbone" is virtually blown away by the title track, one of Pryor's strongest commentaries yet (and needless to say, his strongest material). Here Pryor offers the view of a slave and his past, present and future. Sung over the strains of "Glory, glory hallelujah", Richie closes with "I suppose you all forget. I know I'll never forget". Tough stuff and probably hard to swallow for many who like those silly one liners. You should get beyond that though. Pryor is here for the taking. (B)

Probably due to the success of Richard Pryor, young black comedians like Franklyn Ajaye will finally get a chance to shine. Ajaye's new album, Don't Smoke Dope, Fry Your Hair, is a good effort, though it lacks what Pryor has. Which means he depends on a lot of obvious jokes and one-liners that will no doubt fail to excite under repeated listenings. His does however come through in a few spots, most notably on "The Walrus of Love" and "Be Black Brother, Be Black". "Walrus" is a rip on Barry White, while "Be Black" tactfully hits the sudden cultural consciousness of changing one's name to an "authentic" African one overnight. It's taken all in good stride and Ajaye has his stuff down well. With more skits like "Be Black" in his lineup, Ajaye could advance to star status. (B-)

APRIL WINE
The Whole World's Going Crazy
(London)

GASOLIN'
(Epic)

Both of these albums are mildly interesting because each band is quite successful in its home country. This would lead us to believe that they are good bands — right? Not so friends — both groups leave a lot to be desired. April Wine is from Canada and just about as successful as Bachman-Turner Overdrive. Judging from this lp (their sixth), April Wine is your standard two guitars, bass and drums lineup playing nothing beyond the point of "baby it's all right" — wah wah fuzz tone poo-poo-isms. Going Crazy just doesn't and that's the problem. Oh Canada indeed. We have been blind enough to pick up on Bachman-Turner Overdrivel, but this is another story. (C-)

Compared to April Wine, Gasolin' is a much more rewarding band. Like April Wine, Gasolin' has had a string of hit singles and a couple of gold albums. Gasolin' is their first American release, a compilation of all their Dutch hits. Their approach and delivery reminds me a lot of Mott The Hoople, though they manage to stir up some dust with some out-of-place stop-start techniques. My favorite tune is "What A Lemon", whose lyrical sentiment is not unlike Zeppelin's "The Lemon Song" — only more humorously. Musically, it's the perfect showcase for Gasolin' favorite trick — stopping in the middle of the song and starting again with a slight change in the backdrop. More often than not, the change comes with the use of strings. When Gasolin' does stuff like this their material rises to the occasion. Unfortunately, the bulk of the lp is ordinary. (C+)

As You Can Plainly See

ROY AYERS UBIQUITY
Everybody Loves the Sunshine
(Polydor)

Ubiquity indeed! Roy Ayers Inconsistency would be a far more apt title for this band. Webster's defines ubiquity as being everywhere at the same time, or, as us scholars like to say, omnipresent. But, to paraphrase The Firesign Theatre, how can you be everywhere at once when you're really nowhere at all. Everybody Loves the Sunshine sounds like Ayers couldn't make up his mind as to the type of music he wanted to play. He knew he wanted some contemporary funk, heavy on the synthesizers, but after that it appears confusion set in.

There are snips and snipes of good music, but half the songs seem unfinished or intended to be openings to longer pieces. They have no structural changes or lyrical content. Excellent vocalists are wasted on endlessly repeated phrases unworthy of the lowest variety of moron. The entire first song consists of some synthesizer and the phrase, "Hey uh — what you say come on".

It's a shame there's so much trash on this LP because there are definitely some bright spots. 'The Golden Rod' and 'The Third Eye' are decent instrumentals with some fine electric piano. 'It ain't Your Sign it's Your Mind' has a pleasant chorus, and 'Everybody Loves the Sunshine' is hummable.

Someone should invent an 'Album Improvement Kit' so we could cut out the tracks we liked and paste them back together. It would probably be the only way to salvage this album.

—Greg Tarlin

ARLO GUTHRIE
Amigos
(Warner Bros.)

One of the best concerts I was lucky enough to see this summer was out at Tanglewood. On a pleasant summer night I saw Pete Seeger and Arlo Guthrie thrill, entertain, and teach an attentive crowd of varied political and economic backgrounds. Something in the music the two were making was able to touch wealthy residents of Lenox, ragged denim clad kids from Washington's farms, and the assembled political activists equally. And the one that got to me most was a new song by Arlo in quiet praise of this state, "Massachusetts".

Arlo's subsequent release of Amigo includes the song and this is an album so fine, it is only one of my favorites. Patiently polishing the craft of song writing, Arlo has steadily slipped unnoticed into the ranks of excellent, contemporary songwriters. Woody would be proud. This funny 'kid' who had us all in fits of laughter when we heard "Alice's Restaurant" has outgrown the unsophisticated aspects of his earlier efforts and has written the outstanding songs on this album like "Darkest Hour", "Victor Jara", "My Love", and "Ocean Crossing".

Taking these with the inclusion of the Stones' "Connection" done here at such a tempo and joy that it's a different song, and "Manzillo Bay", Amigo becomes one of this season's least compromising, more intelligent and entertaining albums. Atta boy Arlo.

JOE ZAWINUL
Concerto Retitled
(Atlantic)

'Concerto Retitled' consists of eight previously released songs from three of Joe Zawinul's pre-Weather Report solo albums, those being The Rise and Fall of the Third Stream, Money in the Pocket, and Zawinul.

The cuts are mellow, classically-based pieces of music. There is none of the tremendous amount of electronics that so thoroughly dominate Weather Report's music. Zawinul sticks mainly with acoustic piano and one cut, 'My One and Only Love', is a piano solo. The other tracks could be classified as mainstream jazz. Featured players trade off solos in front of a steady rhythm section. However, the classical influence is obvious because of the textural changes and presence of strings.

It is both interesting and pleasing to listen to the difference in Joe Zaniwul's early music and his current electronic gymnastics with Weather Report. I've always believed that the right to experiment artistically is first earned by being well versed in the basics. It is obvious from these cuts that Joe Zaniwul is at least that. He blends colorful melodies with intricate changes to form moving pieces of music. He surrounds himself with extremely capable musicians, including Jimmy Owens (who has a beautiful trumpet solo on 'From Vienna With Love'), Blue Mitchell, Joe Henderson, Pepper Adams, Herbie Hancock, Woody Shaw, Miroslav Vitous, and Jack DeJohnette. Together, they play the jazz core that is often buried under today's experimentation. It reminds one that artists must not forget their roots and proves, as Joe Zaniwul knows, that there is more to innovation than mere experimentation.

—Greg Tarlin

UPP
This Way
(Epic)
SMALL WONDER
(Columbia)
SUPERCHARGE
(Virgin)

Undoubtedly the only reason why Upp was allowed to make a second album is due to their friendship with Jeff Beck. Well that's just great. Honestly, sometimes Upp sounds like a white hard rock Barry White — what with their infatuation with heavy string arrangements and disco beat. The strings suffocate, Beck is hardly there and Upp never really surfaces above the mess. And I'm not even intrigued to investigate. (D+)

Small Wonder, by the time their second release rolls around, should live up to their name. Their debut is a good pop-rock album that does lack a certain amount of polish, but happily steers clear of being slick. "Why Walk When You Can Dance" is a clever little tune, showing some humorous lyrical and musical digs associated with a poor man's 10cc. Small Wonder is still an embryonic lp, quite raw in some spots. If things get a general shoring up, especially production-wise, they could prove to be a fruitful investment. (B-)

I had the opportunity to listen to the English copy of Supercharge's first about six months before its American release. I am still not impressed at all. Basically, Virgin Records (normally an avant-garde label) has seen fit to try and break this English boogie band in the States. At their worst, Supercharge sounds like bad outtakes of AWB or Kokomo. That's about it for critical evaluation. However, Virgin should be reprimanded for this "effort." With oodles of talent already on the roster (Henry Cow, Gong, etc.), they could have done infinitely better than this. (D)

—Dave Santos

Ivor Cutler
JAMMY SMEARS
(Virgin)

"The squire on a hippomotamus is equal to the son of the other squires."

Like his previous two albums, this latest release by Ivor Cutler and Phyllis April King is by no means intended for the literal-minded. If, though, you are the sort who reads telephone books for the plot or finds The Critique of Pure Reason to be excellent material for a situation comedy then Ivor Cutler is someone you should look into.

Ivor is a Scotsman about fifty or sixty years old with a very fertile, perhaps overly fertile, imagination, which goes to make this a very difficult record to review. None of the best material here could survive re-telling and most of it is too long to quote. In song, prose, and poetry, Ivor and Phyllis tell delightful stories about bicarbonate of chicken, men with woolen eyes, the catching of literate herring and their pedagogic value, and many other things of this sort. Granted this isn't terribly informative but then there isn't really anything else I can liken this album to, except the other two Ivor Cutler albums: Dandruff and Velvet Donkey. Of the other writers I know, Richard Brautigan may come the closest to Ivor, though his frequent cynicism has no counterpart in Ivor's work. Ivor is much more playful and fantastic.

Anyway, enough superficial comparison. All that needs to be said is that this is a record that should delight anybody who has a tenuous grasp on the conventions that pass for everyday reality.

—Eric Hansen

BONNIE BRAMLETT
Lady's Choice
(Capricorn)

Bonnie Bramlett had made a strong record effort towards re-establishing her career in the music business with Lady's Choice. All cuts on the album are excellent picks, primarily old 50's and 60's R&B standards into which she totally throws herself.

Bonnie assembled a Capricorn label super band to put the final touches on the tunes. House rockers Johnny Sandlin and Tommy Talton handle the guitar chops on all songs except for guest shots by Richard Betts and Wet Willie's Ricky Hirsch on two tunes.

The concept of including such old material would be open to criticism if Bonnie had not done such an A-plus job on all the classics here. She also wisely gets into a few duets, harkening back to the best of Delaney and Bonnie's days, with Greg Allman, Dobie Gray, Jimmie Hall, Bobby Whitlock, and from Elvin Bishop's Band, Micky Thomas (who did the fine work on "Fooled Around and Fell in Love").

Bonnie has drawn from James Brown's catalog of many tunes, along with some sharp stuff from Stax-Volt's heydays. One quick look at the titles of the songs and you will find one or more that you would likely place in your personal top twenty from the last two decades. Rest assured that she does the selection justice.

Chuck Mangione: 'If we knew how to sell out, we'd all do it.'

MANGIONE

Second Show
October 2
Saturday Night
Academy of Music

Despite a full house, the Chuck Mangione Quartet seemed uninspired Saturday night at the Academy of Music, but the quartet and the audience came alive when singer Esther Satterfield joined them for the second set.

While Mangione and his jazz band were tight and tactful, they were also a little too tame and tired for me, or anyone else who saw them last month at Springfield's Storrowtown Theater.

In Springfield, with the same musicians and songs, Mangione had the crowd up and cheering on nearly every song. They've been on the road since then, and all are admittedly tired.

Saturday night's one standing ovation came at the end of the show, mainly to bring the band back for an encore, which it did. Satisfied, the audience then left — without bothering with another ovation.

It was the second show of the evening, and my unofficial poll rated the first show higher. Maybe a band that usually cooks as hard as Mangione's shouldn't attempt two shows per night.

Of course, most of the audience having not been in Springfield last month or at the first show, and so not knowing better, loved the 2½ hour show. I really don't blame them. Esther Satterfield alone made it one of the better acts you're likely to see in the area.

The first set, without Satterfield, featured the band members in long — maybe too long — solos. Drummer Joe LaBarbera showed his stuff in "Dance of the Wind-up Toy."

Bass player Frank Gravis then revealed his Texas roots in a laid-back rocker "Can't We Do This All Night?" I began to wonder if he would "do this all night," as it too was a long solo.

I prefer shorter solos and more interplay, which were later provided by Mangione on flugelhorn and Chris Vadala on soprano saxophone.

Vadala has fit perfectly into the band, replacing Garry Niewood, whose first album will be released soon. Vadala played mostly soprano sax, which blends with Mangione's Spanish-flavored compositions like "Hill Where the Lord Hides," and "Legend of the One-Eyed Sailor."

His tenor sax behind Satterfield's bluesy numbers, along with his flute and piccolo on others like "Bellavia," were also appreciated.

Mangione informed the audience that Record World magazine recently voted Ester Satterfield the best new jazz singer of 1976. The audience cheered their agreement and the second half begun.

Whereas Mangione's majestic fanfare sometimes seemed misplaced in the small theater, Satterfield's unpretentious and personal style was suited to the setting.

She's got all the ingredients of a good singer, sounding at times like Dionne Warwick and Laura Nyro. I just wish the lyrics were more than the sentimental goobbly-goo they are. I don't want to "Look to the Children," because they don't "know more than we." Unfortunately she didn't do any of the Stevie Wonder tunes she does so well.

The audience apparently didn't share my feelings though, as they responded strongly to "The Need To Be," from her new album and Mangione's "Land of Make Believe."

Her high vocals on "Hill Where the Lord Hides" along with excellent solos by Vadala and Mangione was the concert's high point.

Mangione was, as usual, entertaining with his wit as well as his flugelhorn and electric piano. His songs are little magical voyages, flowing and floating to the "Land of Make Believe," where everything, including the song resolves, smoothly. His song titles are remarkably well chosen.

It is imaginative music; very structured compared to much of the currently popular jazz, yet allowing for some fine improvisation.

His music has been called pop-jazz, but as he quickly pointed out after the show, it's not that easily categorized. "Jazz is nearly a meaningless word; I play Chuck Mangione music."

Like all other musicians though, his roots and influences can be traced. He said he was first impressed with the Spanish sound in 1948 when he heard Dizzy Gillespie.

He said he also listens to Johannes Brahms, Gregorian chants, Chick Corea, and Cannonball Adderly. Anyone who can lump all those into one category can call his music avant-disco if they want.

Mangione had the most praise for trumpeter Miles Davis, who he calls "the number one innovator for the past twenty years."

His biggest influence however was his older brother Gap, who also has an album on the way. "He got me improvising when I was ten," said Mangione.

Mangione played trumpet until 1963, when he switched to flugelhorn because its mellowtone agreed with the acoustic guitars of Don Potter and Bat McGrath, who both appeared on his early albums.

He said his biggest obstacles have been "maintaining my confidence and musical integrity." Six years ago, when he was teaching at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester N.Y., he had enough confidence to put his first album out himself. It was the successful Friends and Love with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

He says his main goal is to continue playing for and pleasing people. "The music business is weird," he said, "because everyone wants to make it, but they accuse the musicians who do make it of selling out or going commercial. I don't know what selling out means. If we knew how to sell out we'd all do it."

Students going to court

By ELIZABETH S. KENT
Collegian Staff

Seventy students have been apprehended for shoplifting in the University store since the semester began, and, according to Winthrop L. Cummings, the general manager there, 20 of them will soon be arraigned in the Hampshire County District Court.

Since about the beginning of September, Judges Luke Ryan and Alvertus J. Morse of the Hampshire District Court have handled about 12 cases concerning larceny on campus.

"Larceny is just a fancy word for stealing," said Morse, "it is taking something without the intention of returning it to its owner."

In order to be brought to court, the University police must swear out a complaint, and then the accused will be summoned to court to determine what the plea will be. If a plea of "not guilty" is entered, then the accused is brought to trial.

Theft of items valued at over $100 is considered grand larceny, similar to robbing a bank. If found guilty, the accused may be sentenced to a state prison. Theft of items under $100 is a misdemeanor and if sentenced, the accused may do time at the county jail.

In certain cases, Judge Morse said that the accused might be given a "continuance without finding" which means that the accused does not have a police record and "no funding" is given for the case. In such an instance, the accused is usually assessed for court fees which could amount to $100 or $200. "In order to be given a continuance, there must be extenuating circumstances surrounding the case," Judge Morse said.

"I don't think that the students understand what can happen if they are caught stealing," said Morse. "The students are putting themselves in the position of ruining their lives. It's plain foolishness. They are throwing themselves on the mercy of the court. With a misdemeanor or felony record, a student will have little or no chance of getting a job in the public sector."

Morse said a fair number of University property thefts were cases of furniture being taken for use in apartments or fraternity houses.

"It's a great gamble to pull a stunt like this," he said.

University Store Manager Cummings said "shoplifting is a perennial problem, but has increased in recent years." The University store has a security force composed solely of students. The force works similarly to plain-clothes policemen within the store. When a student is observed shoplifting in the store, he or she is not stopped until after leaving the store. This is because the student might have intended to return the item if accosted within the store.

"The store is not a private operation. The over-all profits of the store are returned to the University in the form of the Campus Center Operating Fund", said Cummings. "The fund pays for custodial staff and general operations of the Campus Center.

Because the profits of the University store go into the operating fund, the student activity fee does not have to cover the amount needed for running the store. The profits of the store greatly decrease the student activity fee.

In this way, if a student steals something from the University store, the student is, in effect, stealing from the general student body."

Cummings said, "The number of girls being stopped for shoplifting has increased significantly. Last year girls were found to number 20 to 30 per cent of the thefts. This year, though, the figures have risen to about 50 per cent."

"Most of the items taken are things that people can live without, such as cosmetics, health and beauty aids and sport shirts," Cummings said.

"The student should stop and think before shoplifting. Students do go to court and according to the Student Code of Conduct, the student is supposed to be dismissed from school if found guilty of such an action," he said.

Cummings said, "One of the most unpleasant parts of my job is dealing with shoplifters."

Ellis S. Landset, staff attorney at the Legal Services Office (LSO) said, "The courts are taking a dim view of students stealing University furniture. Students should think twice before acting" in such a manner.

The judges have been getting harder on the accused because they feel that the threat of punishment does not always deter people

Acting Provost Dean Alfange, Jr. discusses the Faculty Senate motion to set specific dates for the summer school add-drop period. (Staff photo by Rob Carlin)

Add-drop period set

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday set a specific add-drop period for summer school and voted to allow Division of Continuing Education courses given off-campus to count toward the baccalaureate degree.

"The original General Academic Regulations neglected a provision for an add-drop period for summer school," said acting Provost Dean Alfange Jr.

Students had been experiencing some difficulties in changing courses because of this defect, according to the annual report of the Academic Matters Committee. Specific time limits for adding and dropping courses has now been written into the regulations which are similar to the add-drop period during the regular semesters.

The provision for residence credits had specifically excluded off-campus continuing education courses from the list of courses which counted toward the minimum 45 residence credits for a baccalaureate degree.

"This rivision modifies the residence credits regulation to include approved courses taught off-campus by approved instructors," said Alfange.

These courses and faculty must be approved by University procedures.

The Faculty Senate also approved a proposal made by the Committee on Overseas Programs and Exchanges.

"The proposal was for the committee to evaluate courses and programs outside of the country before students take them," said Professor Howard J. Wirda, chairperson.

"We act as an umbrella group and help to coordinate overseas courses and programs," he said.

In the past, the committee has contributed to the State-Wide Committee on International Studies and Programs. The Committee has also aimed at the establishment of an International Center in Amherst.

The senate also approved a proposal for the merger of the Leisure Studies Program and the Department of Landscape Architecture.

The objectives of the merger are to bring the faculty members of both departments together in one administrative unit, and to provide students with a program of professional training leisure-related activities, leisure as a societal problems and management of leisure facilities.

Long leaves leaving

Students will be faced with a tough choice this long Columbus day weekend, as exams and peak foliage viewing coincide.

Many students will avoid the choice altogether by leaving the distractions of UMass for their homes, which are more conducive for study.

Tourists are expected to stream into the area, presenting the remaining students with an additional distraction.

These two scholars have opted for the academic route, but they seem to be able to read between the leaves.

Over 600 attend convention

One of the largest here Monday

By STEVE POLANSKY
Collegian Staff

The largest international convention of its kind will convene at UMass on Monday.

Registration will begin Monday night on the third floor of the Campus Center for more than 600 scientists from the United States, Europe, Asia, and the Communist-bloc countries.

They will be here to participate in the 1976 International Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers-Antennas and Propagation Society symposium and United States National Committee-International Union of Radio Science meeting, to be held Oct. 11-16.

Robert E. McIntosh of the University's Engineering Dept. is chairperson of the steering committee promoting this convention. He said more than 480 papers will be presented during this four day period. Many authors, including three from Russia, will present personal research data.

McIntosh, who says this is the largest gathering of its kind, said past meetings in the U.S. have been held in Boulder, Co.

Why UMass?

McIntosh states, "We proposed to have this convention at UMass, knowing that the fall foliage and the excellent location of the Campus Center would be advantageous to the prestigious persons who would come as well as being an overall asset to UMass."

"This is one of the biggest endeavors to come to the University this year. With over 600 persons converging on the Amherst area this week, the Campus Center hotel, as well as other area hotels, are filled to capacity," said McIntosh.

Daily topics will range from "The Radio Search for Extraterrestial Intelligent Life" by Frank Drake of Cornell Unviersity to "Some Aspects of Fiber Optics Research in France" by D.B. Ostrowsky, Nice, France.

Ten Massachusetts-based companies will show their wares, hoping to stimulate new business in the state. This could result in what McIntosh calls "big money for the state."

One such Mass. based company, ESSCO, has worked to install an extremely sensitive millimeter wave telescope, funded by an award from the National Science foundation to UMass at Quabbin Resevoir. Bus tours will be arranged for the formal dedication ceremony there Oct. 15.

"The conference is a service outreach," said McIntosh. "It enhances the professional activities of the scientists and engineers in the field while helping to keep Massachusetts in the mainstream of international progress."

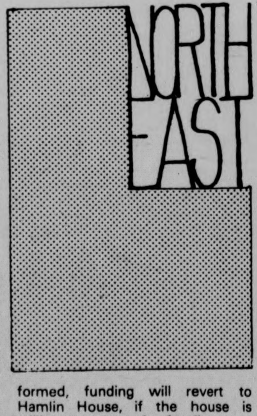
"This symposium is not only great for UMass, but our engineering students will profit from the exchange with the visiting scientists. I've urged all my students to attend as many sessions as they can."

Asked what is the most difficult aspect of putting together a convention of this magnitude, McIntosh replied, "Without the great help of Diane St. George and everyone else at the Campus Center hotel, this task would be immensely difficult. Their cooperation really helped a great deal."

He added, "My students will get the opportunity to learn from experts in their fields. This type opportunity comes only once in a lifetime for many, and I'm glad that they'll have this chance."

New senator elected, weight room sought

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff



Robin Boots was elected Northeast Area senator to the Undergraduate Student Senate last night at the weekly meeting of the Northeast Area Government (NEAG).

Boots, of Knowlton House, was elected by majority vote to fill the position of ex-officio senator, acting as a liason between the NEAG and the student senate. She will be attending meetings of both bodies and reporting to each group with ideas to improve communications.

In other action, a proposal was made for the establishing and furnishing of a weight room in Johnson House for use of the Northeast Area residents. It was suggested by one of the representatives that the room include equipment other than weights so that women would be able to utilize the room.

The establishment of a coffee house committee was stressed by NEAG President John Weisse. He asked for the names of anyone that would be interested in the administrative details of organizing coffee houses for the Northeast Area.

Weisse said that if there are no names, or if a committee is not formed, funding will revert to Hamlin House, if the house is willing to accept the funding.

Vice-President Savos Danos said the group's looking for people willing work on a coffee house committee. He said interested people should talk to their representatives as soon as possible.

NEAG will meet at Lewis House for the next two weeks, on Thursdays at 6:15 p.m. Area residents are invited to attend.

Swine flu

People over 65 and others with high-risk health problems (asthma, chronic bronchitis, heart or kidney disease or diabetes), who wish to obtain swine flu shots should go to the Student Union Ballroom Oct. 25 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. where they may obtain consent forms and be immunized.

These shots will be "bivalent", meaning they will guard not only against the swine flu but also the A-Victorian flu.

The second round of vaccinations will be given in mid-November. These will be "monovalent" and cover only the swine flu virus.

CC food tax questioned

By JAMES ODATO
Collegian Staff

Certain food sold in the Campus Center which may be eaten outside the restaurant where they were purchased and are in original packagings are possibly being taxed incorrectly, according to the Student-Financed Legal Services Office's interpretations of a 1975 amendment of the Massachusetts General Laws.

The amendment states that food or beverages sold by a restaurant in unopened, original containers for consumption off the restaurant premises shall not be deemed a meal providing that such foods are commonly sold in retail stores in such a manner.

The amendment was approved by the legislature Dec. 6, 1975 and became effective Dec. 19, 1975.

Directors of the Campus Center and Saga Food Services agree there may be some mistakes in levying the meal tax to items sold in the Campus Center, yet a spokesperson for the Commission of Taxation said the tax is being correctly applied.

James H. Starr, Legal Services attorney said, in his interpretation of the law, the tax should not be levied on items which are prepackaged by some unit other than the restaurant in which they are sold, and are eaten off the restaurant's premises.

"Often I'll go to the Coffee Shop and buy Hostess cupcakes. They are prepackaged and I do not always eat them in the restaurant, but I'm taxed two cents." Starr said. He said he believed this taxing to be wrong.

The Hatch and Coffee Shop levy taxes on all foods sold including Hostess and Drakes cakes, potatoe chips, and yogurt. These are all prepackaged, and eaten both in and off the premises of the restaurants.

Nicholas Metaxas, deputy to the Tax Commissioner, said all items sold in a restaurant should be taxed except packaged ice cream products commonly sold from ice cream vending trucks, these including popsicles and fudgicles.

"I think we're correct," Metaxas said, "we're telling them (restaurants) to tax all other items."

He said in a recent Boston Superior Court decision, it ruled that ice cream sold by venders was exempt from meal tax.

Sydney Myers, a University attorney, said he is "going to look into" the matter of the meal tax, but as of yet has not.

Myer said Metaxas was probably making "his honest interpretation" of the laws, but added "that one must be aware that the Commission of Taxation is interested in as much tax revenue which it can attain."

Myers said if it was needed, the University would first check with the Tax Commissioner to see if a meal tax is being incorrectly levied to some items.

"If we find there is a conflict between what the state says and what the law is, then the administration must make a decision as to where to go from there," Myers said. He said the opinion of the state atty. general might be requested.

"It's possible (the taxing) is not correct," John R. McGill, director of Saga Food Services, the agency which buys all foods and beverages sold in the Campus Center.

"If these few items are not supposed to be taxed, I'm sure that 99 per cent of all items we sell are supposed to be," McGill said.

Kenneth H. Dean, staff administrator of the Campus Center, also said he believes restaurants of the building may be incorrectly taxing the certain items.

"That's a very good question," he said, responding to the uncertain meal tax point posed to him. Dean said he had no data but he believed a high percentage of the food items in question are eaten on the premises of campus restaurants.

Saga Food Service Director McGill said that if the few items such as potatoe chips, cupcakes, and others are not taxable it would present a problem to cashiers and in the accounting records of the restaurants.

"The cashiers register a total price including tax when they ring up items," McGill said.

Each night, the sales recorded by the cash register is totaled. This number is divided by 1.08 to arrive at the amount of taxes the restaurant owes the state.

CUP CAKES
FILLED
CUP CAKES
CUP CAKES

"If certain items in the total sales were not taxed, we wouldn't know," he said.

McGill said the problem would be easily resolved if electronic cash registers were purchased to substitute for the old registers now in use. He said the cost of 26 electronic registers is estimated at $35,000.

Two NW Road options conflict

By BERNARD DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

An opponent of the university-proposed Northwest Road said last night he was pleased with the Amherst Planning Board's vote against an article asking town endorsement for construction of the road. The article will be presented at an October town meeting.

> 'I'm delighted with the Planning Board vote'
> —Richard Minear

The board voted late Wednesday night to oppose the University's proposal to have the state Department of Public Works construct "Option A" of the defunct Northeast Bypass.

An article from the Amherst Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors asking for endorsement of Option B was also voted against at the board meeting.

Option A of the defunct Northeast Bypass, also dubbed the Northwest Road, would connect Rt. 116 and North Pleasant on the north side of campus and would extend Commonwealth Ave. north to North Village.

Option B would run from North Pleasant St. on the northeast side of campus behind Sylvan, to East Pleasant St.

Town meeting members will vote on the articles at the Oct. 18 Amherst Special Town Meeting.

Opponent to the road construction plans Richard H. Minear said, "I'm delighted with the Planning Board vote."

It was "probably the only realistic course open to them because of the last minute nature of the University's proposal," he said.

The board's position will "very definitely" affect the vote of town meeting members on the issue, according to Minear.

UMass Coordinator of Community Relations Gerald J. Grady who presented the University's position at Wednesday's board meeting was unavailable for comment last night.

Bost Minear and Grady presented arguments about the Northwest Road at the board meeting but had to leave prior to the board's vote on the issue, in order to attend the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting later that same night.

Irving Howards, Planning Board Chairperson, said that although the board recognized the need for better traffic conditions on North Pleasant St., they "just weren't convinced" Options A and B would accomplish the goals intended.

The road construction proposals were brought before the Planning board, Howards said, because "they are planning related issues."

He said the board's position will be presented at town meeting when the town moderator asks the various boards in town to state their positions on the articles.

Howards said the board's Roads and Transportation committee would study traffic circulation around campus and North Amherst if town meeting indicates it would desire such a study.

Grady told the board Wednesday the University wanted to reduce North Pleasant Street traffic and "make it safer" and thought the Northwest Road would accomplish this with "very few serious disadvantages."

Robert L. Klein, member of the Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors and sponsor of their article also spoke at the meeting. He said Option B would be an easier route for North Amherst residents to get to Amherst Center.

"It's good for Amherst because the center of town is where your tax base is," he said, and "that's where all of our jobs are."

Housing shortage causing rising rental rates in Amherst

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

A housing shortage in Amherst is causing rents to rise in the area, and a member of the Amherst Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee says the group is not equipped to take any real action on the problem.

Judy Eckhouse said the committee, a volunteer group of five members and two alternates, must be replaced by professional staff who can deal with the local housing shortage and rising rents.

Currently, the committee has one landlord representative, one tenant representative, and three public property owners. Eckhouse is the tenant representative.

According to Eckhouse, the group hears complaints from tenants regarding their housing, and most frequently they complain about rent. She said the problem has never been greater.

The committee, she said, is therefore sponsoring three articles to be presented at the Amherst Town Meeting on alternatives to rent control by the town.

The first proposal asks the town to establish a Fair Rent Commission, which each year would publish an index of cost of living increases, since this has a direct bearing on rent.

Under this proposal, tenants could challenge their landlords, through the committee, in order to establish how the landlords established their rent.

Eckhouse says this would be a "modified rent control" system, and would operate with professional staff at a cost of $18,000 each year.

An alternate proposal before the town meeting would expand the present committee so that it could act on complaints concerning rent. Under this plan, the group would seek justification of landlord's policies.

The third alternative would be to keep the committee as it is currently, where they discuss complaints they receive.

For now, the committee is publishing a booklet on the rights of tenants, Eckhouse said.

The next meeting will be Wednesday at the Amherst Junior High School at 7:30 p.m. and Eckhouse says the public is urged to attend.

Free peep show in Boyden Gym lockers

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

A Boyden Gym shortcut may offer a peep show to women who have classes there.

To get from the women's equipment area to the women's basket room, women often cross through a walkway that provides a clear view of a section of the men's locker room and showers.

"It's not a big problem," said assistant to the dean in charge of facilities. Justin L. Cobb said, "I've never received any complaints from students about it."

The Physical Education Department has been waiting four to five years to have the problem corrected, said Cobb.

Women do not have to cross through that walkway; they're not even supposed to, according to Cobb.

There are two other routes between the equipment area and the basket room, where the personal equipment is stored between uses. But each involves coming through a different entrance, either by going around the outside of the building or going upstairs and down the other side.

The walkway is much shorter, so many women prefer to take that route.

There is only one aisle of lockers and the showers are visible from the walkway. The other three sets of lockers had plywood screens put up between them last spring.

"We'd like very much to have it enclosed; and the department plans on doing it," said Cobb. Besides completing the enclosure another renovation planned is to turn half of the basket room into a shower and dressing area for women.

"There's been a work order in for four or five years now," said Cobb. "The legislature hasn't appropriated enough money so they can't get outside contractors and physical plant has to do it.

"Material has been purchased, the design has been approved (but) physical plant is hard pressed. They've been tied up with renovating dorms. We're 19th on the priority list."

"This work order was in long before Title IX. This order was a response to women's needs" he said.

Questioned by the Collegian a dozen men said how they felt about women seeing them in less-than-complete stages of dress. Most said they didn't really care. The most common response was, "It doesn't bother me."

A woman who remained anonymous said she felt "it should be closed off."

Another woman said, "I haven't had any embarrassing situations, but bodies don't bother me."

Medicaid 'allows crippling, retardation and death' of children

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Mismanagement in the Medicaid program allows the crippling, retardation and death of thousands of poor children entitled to help, a House subcommittee reported yesterday.

The report, approved by the subcommittee on a 10-1 vote with only Rep. James M. Collins, (R-Tex.) dissenting, was the second congressional attack on Medicaid practices in recent weeks.

Subcommittee chairman John Moss, (D-Calif.), in a letter transmitting the report to the parent House Commerce Committee, said:

"The subcommittee finds that mismanagement by HEW of this program has caused unnecessary crippling, retardation, or even death of thousands of children."

The report itself, titled "Short-changing Children," said about 12.9 million persons under age 21 were eligible for medical examinations and treatment in 1975 under a law that was to have taken effect in 1969.

But 10.9 million of the eligible children were left unexamined and untreated, the report said.

Based on testimony at subcommittee hearings, the panel's staff estimated that about 1 million of the unscreened children would have been found to need treatment for a perceptual deficiency such as a significant hearing defect; 650,000 would need treatment for eye defects; 770,000 would have some kind of learning disability, and 435,000 would need treatment for iron deficiency anemia.

Nearly 5 million eligible children who were not examined would have been found to need medical treatment, the report said.

Moss said HEW has failed to put the program into effect adequately "or provide care for children most in need of health services."

The report blames HEW "Maladministration," including laxity in issuing program regulations, fragmented services and cumbersome procedures for penalizing laggard states.

It said only nine states were able to report to the subcommittee the number of children treated as a result of routine health examinatiins: Colorado, Delaware, Hawaii, Idaho, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Vermont and Virginia.

Last week, a Senate investigations subcommittee heard testimony from private consulting firms that they wined and dined and provided personal services and payments valued at more than $9,000 to Charles Cubbler, a Medicaid management specialist for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Wholesale prices rise

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Wholesale prices rose by nearly a full percentage point in September to the highest level in almost a year, the government reported yesterday.

Jimmy Carter blamed Preesident Ford for the increase which could signal renewed inflation.

The 0.9 per cent surge in wholesale prices carried the strong threat of further inflation at the consumer level between now and the Nov. 2 presidential election.

September's rise in wholesale prices reflected an annual rate of 10.8 per cent, which eventually will be passed along to consumers in the prices of retail goods. Not since October, 1975, have these prices risen so sharply.

Democratic challenger Carter quickly branded the wholesale price rise as "still another tragic example of the complete failure of Mr. Ford's economic prices."

Feds bust distributors

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal agents yesterday arrested 230 suspects in a crackdown on major distributors of Mexican brown heroin in 34 U.S. cities, the Drug Enforcement Administration announced.

DEA administrator Peter B. Bensinger said at noon the arrests were continuing. He said agents also seized 20 kilograms of brown heroin worth $20 million at street prices.

The seizures included 28 pounds agents had spotted at the Mexican border last Friday and "convoyed" to Chicago where one of the suspects was arrested on delivery, Bensinger said.

The arrests — called "Phase 3" of a four-phase investigation begun last May 1 — were triggered by the unsealing of federal indictments in six cities against 110 persons late Wednesday, Bensinger said.

Bensinger said the indictments were returned in Detroit, Chicago, San Antonio, Tex., Phoenix, Ariz., Los Angeles and San Diego, Calif. — "target cities" in which about half of all seizures have been made since May 1.

The arrests "should not be interpreted as the end of heroin in the U.S.A. or cause a major crunch in heroin supplies," Bensinger said. But he said follow-up arrests in Phase 4 "will have an impact."

The impact might well mean lowering the present 400 monthly fatality rate from heroin overdoses, reduced addiction and reduced crime as the scarcer heroin is sold in weakened form at higher prices, he said.

Brown heroin from South American sources has recently been widely substituted for the traditional white heroin. Supplies of the more highly refined white heroin dwindled because of lowered opium poppy production in Turkey, seizure of the Marseille "laboratories" where it was purified, and heavy international crackdowns on the established smuggling routes from abroad.

Earlier phases in the DEA program brought about 1,300 arrests and the seizure of 600 pounds of heroin — with a $300 million retain value — one aircraft, over $700,000 in cash, nearly 300 vehicles and over 200 firearms, Bensinger said.

Asked at a news conference why the announcement was not delayed until completion of Phase 4 after the national election next month, Bensinger — an appointment of President Ford — said the grand juries dictated the timing.

"The federal government cannot afford to stop all its activities because of the election," he said.

Charges could be dropped against mother

NEW YORK [AP] — The Manhattan district attorney recommended yesterday charges of criminally negligent homicide be dropped against a woman whose infant daughter was mauled and partially eaten by the mother's dog.

The infant, Carra Bashold, had been left alone in an East Harlem apartment by her mother, Joanne, 24.

In requesting the dismissal, Asst. Dist. Atty. Alan Broomer said, "We are persuaded that no proper purpose of the criminal law would be served by continuing the prosecution."

Broomer said that a 30-day investigation showed no reason to prosecute the woman. The death occurred on Labor Day when Miss Bashold left her six-day-old daughter in her apartment to return to the hospital to pick up $100 she had left there.

Miss Bashold returned from the hospital to find that her 4-month-old German shepherd dog, in a state of near starvation because it had not been fed since she entered the hospital, had partially devoured her baby.

Miss Bashold, a native of the Cleveland, Ohio, area, was arrested and charged with criminally negligent homicide. She was released the following day.

In formal papers submitted today in Manhattan State Supreme Court, Broomer described the events leading up to the death.

Miss Bashold, destitute and on welfare, had told welfare workers that the baby was conceived when she was raped. She lived alone with her dog in a rundown tenement in Spanish Harlem. There was no furniture in her apartment.

On Sept. 1, she was admitted at Bellevue Hospital in labor, and Carra was born that evening. On the night of Sept. 5, Sunday, the mother and baby were discharged. They left so late that the hospital's property office was locked for the day. Miss Bashold had to borrow money to get home.

The next morning, she returned to the hospital to retrieve her money so she could buy food for the baby and the dog.

But the dog was starving and the baby was left on the floor because Miss Bashold did not own a crib or a bed. When she returned 90 minutes later, she found the dead baby. She told arriving police, "The dog ate my baby."

News in Brief

'Operation successful'

NEW YORK [UPI] — Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey underwent an apparently successful operation for bladder cancer yesterday, his doctors said.

Dr. Edgar Berman, Humphrey's personal physician, told a news conference at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center, where the surgery was performed, "I'm tremendously relieved that the senator... has come through this procedure extremely well."

Dispute settled

DETROIT [UPI] — The 175-member United Auto Workers Ford Council yesterday overwhelmingly approved an historic contract agreement with the Ford Motor Co., raising hope 170,000 striking Ford workers will return to their jobs by the end of next week.

The new, three-year $1 billion-plus pact now goes to the membership. UAW officials said ratification would begin immediately and should be completed by late next Tuesday. This would permit a resumption of production by the No. 2 automaker at the end of the fourth week of the dispute.

Bette pays again

BOSTON [UPI] — Bette Arnold paid $50 Wednesday for parking violations and said she expected to be back in court soon.

Ms. Arnold has paid more than $4,000 for parking violations since 1970. There will be more, she said, "when the computers catch up with me."

Ms.Arnold parks her yellow Rolls Royce outside her restaurant, "Bette's Rolls Royce," everyday to bring attention to her business. But it's in a restricted parking area and also attracts the attention of the police.

Brown University students block truck, are arrested

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Eleven Brown University students who blocked a delivery truck in support of striking workers were arrested yesterday on misdemeanor charges of obstructing a passageway.

The 11 sat down in the street when the truck tried to leave a dining hall garage. They were part of a group of students supporting 400 striking library and maintenance workers at the Ivy League school.

They pleaded innocent to the charge in District Court and were released on personal recognizance. A trial date was not immediately set.

Robert A. Reichley, associate vice president of the university, said the administration would press academic disciplinary charges against the students.

It was the first time in decades Brown students have been arrested in an act of civil disobedience, he said.

Supporters of the arrested students said they planned a "non-violent peaceable demonstration" when university trustees meet on campus tomorrow afternoon for a routine fall gathering.

"We will keep the peace as the judge has advised us to do," said Michael Curtin, an arrested student.

"The only way this strike can come to an end is by the prevention of deliverance of services," said Nancy Ylvisaker, who was also arrested.

The strike by Local 134 of the Service Employes International Union began July 1 when their contract expired.

Forty workers, shouting "Let the Students Go," walked a picket line in front of the dining hall as the 11 were arrested and taken to a downtown police station.

The university repeatedly has rejected demands by the Undergraduate Council of Council and a small group called Students in a Vise to submit the wage dispute to binding arbitration.

Saxe jury deliberates

BOSTON [UPI] — A six-man, six-woman jury yesterday began deliberating whether Brandeis University honors graduate and antiwar activist Susan Edith Saxe took part in a 1970 bank robbery and, if so, if she is guilty of first degree murder.

Ms. Saxe, 27, wore a cheerful, brilliantly yellow cotton blouse that belied the gravity of the charges against her:

—Two counts of armed robbery for allegedly taking part with four other persons in the theft of $26,585 from the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co.

—One count of first degree murder in the killing of Policeman Walter A. Schroeder by the robbery lookout man after the thieves had fled the scene.

Each count carries a life sentence upon conviction.

"Guilty, or not guilty. It's as simple as that," Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin said at the end of his 95-minute charge to a 15-member panel. When he finished, three male jurors were chosen by lot to be alternates. Nine of the remaining panelists are 30 or under.

The jurors were sequestered immediately with the 47 pieces of evidence admitted by the prosecution.

McLaughlin's instructions were low keyed at first as he discussed fairness and burden of proof, then progressively more intense as he lectured on the controversial felony murder statute and the various state Supreme Court rulings upholding, narrowing and further defining it.

During the nine-day trial, in which the defense called only one witness, several prosecution witnesses said between 30 seconds and five minutes elapsed from the time the robbers left the bank and the time Schroeder was shot.

The judge said the jury could choose to doubt the credibility of the state's two star witnesses, Robert J. Valeri and Michael S. Fleisher, because of their admitted participation in the robbery.

Meal tax exempt?

BOSTON (UPI) — The Massachusetts House yesterday voted to ask one of its committee's to release a bill exempting meals served to students at private colleges and universities.

An order "requesting" release of the bill from the Committee on Bills in Third Reading next Tuesday was passed by a vote of 122-75. The non-binding order was sponsored by Assistant House Minority Leader Thomas Simons of Montague.

James True, legislative agent for the Association of Massachusetts Independent Colleges and Universities, said the bill would save the average student about $80 a year.

Meals served at public colleges already are exempt from the eight per cent meals tax. Extending the exemption to private colleges will result in a loss of $10 million in state tax revenue.

True said he is optimistic about passage of the bill despite the procedural problems, which he said are "largely political."

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution yesterday filed a petition in the U.S. Court of Appeals seeking to block construction of the Seabrook atomic power plant.

The petition, filed in the Boston court, asks for a review of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's decision to allow construction to continue on the $2 billion seaside facility.

McCarthy on ballot?

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Independent presidential candidate Eugene J. McCarthy was granted another shot yesterday at getting his name on Rhode Island's Nov. 2 general election ballot.

The state Board of Elections scheduled an appeal hearing next Tuesday on the former Minnesota senator's 29 vote shortfall in valid nominating petition signatures to qualify for the ballot.

Secretary of State Robert F. Burns Tuesday ruled valid only 971 signatures statewide and 24 from Briston county on McCarthy's nomination papers.

PARIS: Carrying banners protesting the government's austerity plan, Parisians march from La Nation Square to Place de La Republique in Paris' working-class district yesterday to dramatize their one-day nationwide strike.

By ARTHUR HIGBEE

PARIS (UPI) — An estimated 500,000 workers marched against the government's austerity program yesterday in the largest demonstration since the student-worker rebellion of 1968 which led to the resignation of President Charles de Gaulle.

The marches climaxed a 24-hour general strike call against a government program to battle France's 13 per cent inflation through price and wage restraints.

In the only reported incident, several marchers charged four non-striking bus drivers who had stopped to let the parade go by. March marshals headed off the would-be attackers and cajoled them back into the line of march.

Labor unions said more than half a million people marched peacefully in Paris in brilliant autumn sunshine. Police declined an immediate estimate of the number of marchers, but independent observers said 500,000 appeared to be a reasonable estimate.

The parade was supposed to be led by striking police in uniform but they did not show up. However, striking farmers brought along barrels of red wine and sold it to demonstrators for eight cents a plastic cup.

The strike itself was spotty. Schools stayed closed, mail went undelivered and garbage uncollected. But electric service was maintained for the most part. Most shops, stores and factories were open, if understaffed. Public transport was slowed but not stopped.

The strike was called by two of the three biggest unions in France — the Communist-led General Workers' Confederation and the far-left French Democratic Labor Confederation.

The third big union, the Socialist-leaning Workers Force said the strike would do more harm than good, but some of its locals walked out anyway in a rare show of insubordination.

From a quarter to half of auto and steel workers stayed off the job. But up to 90 per cent of coal-miners, bitter about a disaster that killed 16 miners last week, went on strike.

In Paris, only one out of three subway trains and about half the city buses operated.

New Thai leaders remain in control after bloody coup

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Thailand's new military rulers released deposed Prime Minister Seni Pramoj Thursday and ended the midnight-to-dawn curfew. They told newspapers they may be allowed to reopen in three days if they pledge a firm anti-Communist line.

The rector of Thammasat University, scene of bloody battles that killed at least 27 persons and wounded 180 others before the Wednesday coup, was released from custody and left the country for London. It was not clear if he was expelled.

More than 1,300 leftwing students were arrested at the university, authorities said, including the leadership of the National Students Center of Thailand which sponsored violent antigovernemtn protests that led to the coup. The students denounced Seni's government for its failure to move against former dictator Thanom Kittikachorn, who returned from exile in Singapore last month.

Thanom, who re-entered Thailand as a Buddhist monk, has had no comment on the military takeover.

A burst of submachine gun fire Thursday night sent pedestrians scrambling for cover near the university. Security forces said it was a "misunderstanding."

Army jeeps carrying heavy machine guns patrolled Bangkok's streets.

The new government of Adm. Sangad Chaloryoo, which calls itself the National Evolutionary Administration Council, summoned the heads of all diplomatic missions, including U.S. Charge d'Affaires John Burke, for a briefing and an outline of the new regime's foreign policy plans.

Family sources said Seni, who reportedly is a friend of Sangad, was released after spending the night in protective custody. He was "invited" to supreme military headquarters Wednesday an hour before the coup leaders abolished the constitution and dissolved the government and parliament.

Sangad's new administration, which shut down all newspapers in the country, told editors Thursday they will be subject to precensorship if publication is permitted, and they must "support democracy and the throne" and take a firm anti-Communist line.

There was speculation some of Bangkok's more than 30 English, Thai and Chinese language newspapers will be denied permission to reopen. Applications will be reviewed for the next three days, the government said.

The only newspaper to publish Thursday was an unofficial ultra rightwing publication that carried a photograph of Sangad, Air Chief Marshal Kamol Dechatungka, the new "peacekeeping director," and former army commander in chief Gen. Boonchai Bamrungpong.

Television stations have been allowed to resume normal programs, provided they broadcast no political commentaries.

Disorder in China

HONG KONG (UPI) — State radio broadcasts have reported increased social disorder and street crime in at least six Chinese provinces since the death last month of Communist Party Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

The provincial broadcasts monitored in Hong Kong have given no indication of how widespread or serious the trouble may be but the reports attributed much of the violence to youths and cited many specific "crimes" that clearly were not political, such as "robbing, smashing, looting."

The trouble in the provinces was followed by calls for "unity" by the central leadership in Peking and warnings that "resolute action" would be taken to supress the disorders.

Since a power struggle among potential successors to Mao erupted early this year, there have been numerous official Chinese reports of "sabotage activities" by "class enemies."

Kissinger avoided radical leaders

By DAVID OLSEN
Pacific News Service

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's latest round of shuttle diplomacy, aimed at fostering a moderate black government in Rhodesia, carefully avoided contact with the very leaders who will hold the trump cards in forthcoming negotiations.

These men, comprising the radical nationalist leadership, have overshadowed the older, more moderate leaders in three of the most crucial areas: their command of military forces, their popular support, and their backing by other important African leaders.

Yet none of them has been included in the early negotiations to set up talks aimed at establishing an interim government in Rhodesia.

The key radical leaders include:

—Robert Mugabe, leader of the leftist political party ZANU (Zimbabwe African National Union) and the major representative of most of the Zimbabwean guerrilla fighters based in neighboring Mozambique. Mugabe, a former teacher, was imprisoned by the Ian Smith regime for 11 years for his political activities.

—President Samora Machel of Mozambique, who was personally instrumental in creating the Zimbabwe People's Army (ZIPA) in 1974 in an effort to unify the differing guerrilla factions. As the most active supporter of the guerrilla war among all black African leaders, Machel probably has more influence with the guerrillas than any other outsider.

—Methodist Bishop Abel Muzorewa, leader of the militant faction of the Rhodesian African National Council, a coalition of nationalist groups. By some accounts, Muzorews has the strongest popular backing of all black Zimbabwean leaders.

—The high command of the Zimbabwe People's Army, composed of 18 leaders of ZANU and ZAPU (Zimbabwean African People's Union), which are the oldest and most important African political parties in Rhodesia.

—President Agostinho Neto of Angola who, like Machel, is wary of all American attempts to play a role in structuring the future of Africa. U.S. relations with Neto's MPLA-led government are still strained as a result of the U.S. backing of anti-MPLA factions in Angola's civil war.

MODERATE TARGETS

While excluding these leaders from his talks, Kissinger concentrated his widely-publicized shuttle diplomacy on "moderate" and non-aligned politicians, and on Prime Minister Ian Smith, leader of Rhodesia's white minority government.

The only nationalist leader Kissinger met was Joshua Nkomo, considered a moderate both at home and abroad. Nkomo, who first came to prominence as one of the original nationalist agitators in the late 1940s, had lost most of his following by early 1976 when he negotiated unsuccessfully on his own with Smith.

News Analysis

A deeply religious Christian, Nkomo has long advocated peaceful negotiation and non-violent protest as the road to black majority rule in Rhodesia. He is believed to have little if any support among the guerrilla forces and leaders, who branded him a traitor for his talks with Smith.

Yet in proof of the Midus touch quality of a Kissinger visit, when Nkomo returned to Salisbury Sept. 25 following the meeting, he drew a larger crowd than did the return of the popular radical Muzorewa five days later.

In contrast to Nkomo's moderation (and the assumption that he would agree to halt the guerrilla fighting during the negotiations), the radical leaders whom Kissinger shunned have called for an immediate transfer of power in a clear rejection of the British-American proposal for a two-year transition period.

"We are talking about majority rule in four to six weeks, when with the formation of an interim government the powers of the government of Rhodesia will be passed on to the majority," said Tanzania's President Nyerere, speaking for all the pro-Nationalist leaders.

The militant leaders have also stressed that they will not allow the structure of the interim government to be determined by whites, and they have rejected Smith's proposal that the ministries of defense and law and order remain in white hands during the interim.

In addition, unlike Nkomo the radical leadership is committed to some form of African socialism. While they are believed to be neither pro-Soviet nor pro-Chinese, it is certain that once in power they would seek to impose a form of national planning in an effort to restructure the present white-dominated capitalist economy.

Kissinger's avoidance of the radical leaders appears to be in keeping with his intentions for a Rhodesian settlement. U.S. diplomats aboard Kissinger's plane have been quoted as saying that the Secretary "is aiming for the emergence of a belt of friendly pro-western states from Namibia on the south Atlantic seaboard, through landlocked Botswana to Rhodesia."

Kissinger clearly wants to avoid the kind of protracted guerrilla war against white domination that occurred in Angola and Mozambique.

The effect of the radicals' exclusion from the pre-negotiation talks is impossible to assess. Yet some observers speculate that by talking only with the moderates (and inflating Nkomo's popularity in doing so), Kissinger may have influenced the shape of negotiations to come by leaving the radical leaders in the back seat.

Other observers point out that even if Kissinger had invited some of these leaders to talk with him they may have refused out of fear of losing their credibility with their peers. All Zimbabwean radical leaders have denounced Kissinger's involvement in the Rhodesian crisis.

C.I.A. keeps quiet

[ZNS] — A federal court in Denver ordered the C.I.A. to explain why the agency will not disclose information it possesses on the mysterious disappearance of a University of Colorado professor seven years ago.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch gave the agency until October 26 to spell out why C.I.A. files on Professor Thomas Riha should not be turned over to Riha's family.

Riha was a 40-year-old associate professor of Russian history who vanished without a trace in March of 1969. However, portions of C.I.A. documents obtained by the Riha family under the Freedom of Information Act indicate C.I.A. operatives may have seen the professor alive in Czechoslovakia as recently as 1973.

The C.I.A. deleted the names of its sources in the documents, contending that the names are exempt from being revealed under the Freedom of Information Act.

Riha's family is asking for a full explanation from the agency as to what the C.I.A. knows about the professor's disappearance. The C.I.A. has admitted to "processing" Riha during the professor's student-exchange days in Moscow in 1959, but denied that he was ever an agent.

Some of Riha's former acquaintances suspect that he may have been an agent for the C.I.A., the Soviet Union or Czechoslovakia.

Banks discriminate against older neighborhoods, coalition charges

CHICAGO [UPI] — Banks and savings and loan companies discriminate widely against older neighborhoods in lending money to buy and repair houses, an organization representing community groups nationwide said Thursday.

"This is the first time in the history of this country that people get an inside look at banking policies nationwide," said Gale Cincotta, chairwoman of the National Peoples Action, a coalition of 104 community groups which has led the push for congressional reform of lending practices.

The data, obtained under a new federal law, is based on fiscal year 1975 investments by about 50 financial institutions in 25 cities. It strongly indicates that the lenders limited their investments in certain neighborhoods while making mortgage money readily available in others.

The practice is called "redlining" — by which financial institutions single out certain areas considered to have a high risk for mortgage loans. It stems from the habit of some insurance firms of mapping high-risk areas with boundaries of red ink.

Nationwide, the financial institutions surveyed invested more than $109.8 million in about 30 "nonredlined" neighborhoods, compared with slightly over $11.6 million in a similar sample of "redlined" neighborhoods.

Many of the less favored neighborhoods were older, working class sections or house large numbers of minorities.

"The banks are redlining", Mrs. Cincotta said, "specifically, geographically discriminating against certain neighborhoods."

"It's only at the whim of lenders whether certain neighborhoods should live or die. We need a federal antiredlining law prohibiting geographic discrimination."

About 8,500 mortgage lenders, including banks and savings and loans, were compelled to disclose the data by Sept. 30 under the Mortgage Disclosure Act of 1975.

All of the banks did not comply with the law. Mrs. Cincotta said community groups in more than 30 cities attemtped to obtain the disclosure data from about 100 financial institutions, but about 35 failed to provide the data.

She said there was not always a "logical pattern" to the discrimination in lending practices, which affected neighborhoods in cities ranging from San Francisco to Waterloo, Iowa, Buffalo, N.Y., and Wilmington, Del.

In one example, data provided by two major Chicago lenders showed they granted few conventional mortgages or home improvement loans during the fiscal year ending June 30 to residents of North Austin, an older west side neighborhood undergoing racial transition.

First Federal Savings and Loan of Chicago invested $98,000 in North Austin, while granting $2.1 million in loans to residents of surburban Northbrook. Continental Bank made no loans to residents of North Austin while granting $3.16 million in loans to Northbrook residents.

Winner prefers box of Fig Newtons

NEW YORK [UPI] — Eduardo Agosto is the first New York City resident to win $2,500 in groceries via the New York State Lottery and the first item he bought was a box of Fig Newtons.

Lottery officials had arranged for Agosto to go to a Bronx supermarket Thursday to make the first selections from his gastronomic good fortune.

Arriving at the A&P the 54-year-old Agosto announced he was a man of many tastes. "I like rice and beans, chicken, pork, ham — any food gets me filled up," Agosto said.

"Only buy the bargains. It'll last longer that way," James Nolan, the lottery's regional director for the city, told him. Nolan was there to give the store manager a $2,500 check to establish a line of credit for Agosto.

The grinning Agosto grabbed a shopping cart and then, with television cameras grinding away, looked around carefully and finally selected his first purchase — a box of Fig Newtons.

About a half-hour and $19.30 worth of pork chops, canned spaghetti and meatballs, American cheese and orange juice later, Agosto triumphantly left the store.

"I've got two refrigerators ready to be filled," he confided on his way back to his apartment.

Few could be considered more needy.

Agosto says he's unemployed because of a heart condition and has a wife and five children to feed.

A clerk placing bottles of soda on the store's shelves remarked enviously, "I've bought lots of lottery tickets, but I haven't won a penny yet."

Columbus brought VD and vices

BERKELEY, CA., (PNS)

The myth of Christopher Columbus' discovery of America has been frequently and convincingly punctured—and yet it survives. But now, as Americans prepare once again to celebrate Columbus Day, a new study of Columbus has appeared that adds insult to injury.

Columbus, it seems, not only wasn't the first European to sight the New World — when he arrived he introduced to these shores all manner of mayhem, murder and greed.

In Columbus: His Enterprise (Monthly Review Press, 1976), Hans Koningsberger, a novelist turned historian, sets out to take "a cold and hard look at what Columbus was all about."

In the process — involving examination of historical studies and the writings of Columbus and his contemporaries — not even the most treasured schoolroom tradition survives: Columbus, says Koningsberger, was far from alone in believing that the earth was round. Most educated people of his time were convinced of the earth's roundness.

Columbus — a self-educated merchant seaman — differed only in believing that the earth was much smaller than it is. His mistaken belief that Asia, rich with spices and exotica, lay just over the western horizon prompted his promotional campaign before the royal courts of Europe.

Spanich monarchs Ferdinand and Isabella, who finally granted Columbus funds for his expedition, knew little about sea exploration and considered the effort a shot in the dark — worth the risk only because it was not very expensive — says Koningsberger. They even agreed to Columbus' terms: 10 per cent of all trade with Asia, admiralty over the western ocean and governorship of any newly found lands.

Landing in the New World, Columbus wrote in his log, "here is a people to be converted to our Holy Faith by love and friendship and not by force..." But in the same log he added, "should your Majesties command it, all the inhabitants could be taken away to Castile, or made slaves on the island. With 50 men we could subjugate them all and make them do whatever we want."

In fact, the natives of Haiti—which Columbus thought was Asia—would never be converted to Christianity, but would be subjugated and then exterminated by Columbus as he tried to squeeze the riches of the Orient out of the impoverished Arawak Indians.

Reporting to Ferdinand and Isabella on his first voyage, Columbus wrote, "Hispaniola is a miracle. Mountains and hills, plains and pastures, are both fertile and beautiful...the harbors are unbelievably good and there are many wide rivers of which the majority contain gold...There are many spices, and great mines of gold and other metals..." As Koningsberger comments, "All of this was fantasy."

Later an agent of Columbus promised Ferdinand and Isabella, "On the next voyage the ships will carry away such quantities of gold that anyone who hears of it will be dumbfounded."

Trying to make good on his promise of unimaginable riches, Columbus quickly resorted to a system of brutal exploitation against the native Arawak Indians. According to Bishop de las Casas, a member of the expedition, the Indians were treated "not as beasts, for beasts are treated properly at times, but like the excrement in a public square."

Every Indian man, woman and child over 14 was required to collect gold for the Spaniards. Those who failed to bring in their quota had their hands chopped off. According to Koningsberger, "there are old Spanish prints that show this being done: the Indians stumble away, staring with surprise at their arm stumps pulsing out blood."

from committing the crime, he said. The judges feel that certain cases must be sentenced or fined so that people know that there is punishment for theft.

Since school began, Landset has handled about four to five cases involving shoplifting and about the same number for theft of University furniture.

"If a client has committed the act, the best that can be hoped for is a continuance. If the act is repeated, the first charge might be revived," said Landset. "Continuance is an effort on the judges' part to give the students a break."

LSO handles cases once the person has been caught or arrested, if the person contacts the office and requests assistance. LSO follows through on the entire legal process.

"Theft from the Campus Center hotel is minimal," said Don E. Witkoski, accomodations manager for the hotel.

"However," he added,"over $1,000 worth of signs have been stolen from the Campus Center garage since school stated in September. The signs stolen included a 'Handicap Parking' sign. There is virtually no recovery for stolen signs. On Wednesday alone, four windshields and-or rear windows were smashed and one CB radion was stolen. Since last year, all of the fire extinguishers have been taken."

Witkoski also said that increased controls in the garage would not be worth the money expended if the controls were to be truly efficient.

Contaminated water may be carcinogenic

NEW YORK (UPI) — There are approximately 4 million chemicals in the universe.

With technology and constant motion, new chemicals add to the natural batch and, says Dr. H.F. Craybill, this makes for a big pollution problem in the world's waterways.

Craybill, scientific coordinator for the Environmental Cancer Program at the National Cancer Institute, focused on worries about water when addressing the opening session of a New York Academy of Sciences conference on aquatic pollutants and their possible relationship to human cancer.

"Contamination of the waterways and municipal water supplies requires serious attention because it impacts on the total human environment," Craybill said.

But whether some of the things in water directly cause cancer is a question that has yet to be answered. Craybill said further studies are needed on concentrated mixtures of water contaminants to see if they can cause cancer.

The problem, he said, is that it is legistically impractical and prohibitively expensive to test each chemical compound entering the environment. New methods are needed for rapid evaluation of the cancer-causing potential of whole classes of compounds.

Only recently, Craybill noted, have instrumentation and analytical techniques, sophisticated enough to detect and measure micro-levels of contaminants, been applied to drinking water.

"The passage of the SAFE Drinking Water Act of 1974 was accelerated by an awareness of the fact that some of these contaminants, recognized as suspect carcinogens cancer causers, could pose a threat to human health," he said.

Craybill said a National Academy of Sciences report on a study of the adverse health effects attributable to contaminants in the drinking water is scheduled to be completed and presented to the Environmental Protection Agency and Congress by Dec. 15.

"It should serve as a basis for revision of national interim drinking water regulations in accordance with a timetable prescribed in the Safe Drinking Water Act," Craybill said.

A new twist... to an old wrinkle

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. [UPI] — Anthropologist Dr. Paul T. Baker, who doesn't believe highlanders who claim to be 150 years old, says it's just a new twist to the old lies about age.

Unlike aging Americans, the highlanders tell the lies in reverse.

After completing 14 years of research in the Peruvian highlands of South America, the Pennsylvania State University scientist is convinced that "ages of 115 to 120 represent the outer limits of credibility."

Baker said highlanders in Russia, Tibet and Ecuador who claim ages up to 150 "reverse the American habit of lying about age to seem younger, by lying about age to granted long years."

Baker said he also found that "some of the high age claims simply stem from the newness of numerical usage in traditional highland societies."

"For generations, they have counted themselves not in years, but as children, young adults, adults or old; and when someone now asks them their age, they pick one — and the older the better," Baker said.

This, according to Baker, could lead an old Russian highlander of 70 years to say he is 100 years old. And if he is interviewed 30 years later, "he is of course 130 years old."

Baker said his studies focused on the legend of a healthier life in the world's highlands.

There's some myth to that claim, too, he said.

"Lowlanders traveling to high altitudes suffer headaches, nausea and heart problems, even leakage of water into the lungs," Baker said.

"And when they see highlanders working or playing without those symptoms, they assume them to be healthier and their assumption builds a partial myth."

Baker said there is some evidence that life in the high mountains, particularly in societies that have low salt, low fat diets, leads to better health.

"They tend to develop a far larger bed of small blood vessels," he said.

"That greater vascular bed not only permits greater exertion in thinner air, it cushions the heart against tension and crises and serves other body organs better."

But age has its admirers

PARIS (AP) — Before figuring out how to stop decay in the 3,211-year-old mummy of Ramses II, French scientists are trying to get it safely out of an oak packing crate unceremoniously marked "top" and "bott".

"We spe the last week trying to devise a way to take the mummy out laterally," Prof. Lionel Balout, the 69-year-old director of the Ramses II project at the Museum of Man, said in an interview in his third-floor office, just down the corridor from the operating theater where the mummy is kept.

"We even sent two technicians to Cairo for advice. We hope to have him out by the end of next week so we can proceed with Act II of this opera, if you will."

"Act II" will consist of extensive examination by means of infrared, electron and X-ray photography.

After all the lab reports are in, Balout and his team of about 20 French and Egyptian representatives will huddle and decide on Act III: how to stop the decay and preserve the remains intact.

"The mummy is not in very bad condition," Balout said.

Asked if the arrival of Ramses II caused a stir at the museum, Balout, who has worked on hundreds of mummies from Egypt and Peru, said, "It's just another mummy. The only difference is we know it's Ramses."

Ramses II is famous for the Temples of Abu Simbel and other vast building projects undertaken during his record reign from 1301-1235 B.C. and is widely believed to be the Pharoah who refused to let Moses' people go. A Ramses II exhibit has been drawing huge crowds in Paris for several months.

The idea for the mummy conservation project began last year when Maurice Becaille, a French doctor, went to Cairo to do research on the cause of the death of Ramses II and discovered what poor condition the mummy was in. French and Egyptian leaders agreed in December that the body would be sent to Paris for extensive treatment by some of the world's greatest experts.

Last month the mummy was flown from Cairo to Le Bourget Airport aboard a French military plane. It was accorded military honors usually reserved for sovereigns as scores of French and Egyptian dignitaries clustered solemnly about the packing crate on the tarmac. The body was whisked to the museum where it remains under 24-hour guard and the care of specialists in white coats, surgical masks and rubber gloves.

Balout said the mummy's deterioration is due to a number of factors over the centuries, including adverse temperature, humidity and lighting conditions, chemical changes due to the interaction of exotic embalming resins, and the effect of insects, fungus and bacteria.

He said his team, plus specialists from other French hospitals when their skills are needed, will work free of charge, and that in no circumstances will the body be altered.

"The team knows the religious respect attached to the mummy, and that someday the soul of Ramses II is expected to rejoin the body, so none of us would contemplate any kind of alteration," Balout said.

Congratulations,
you're in medical school.

Now, you have to pay for it.

That can be a very serious problem today, especially with tuition costs climbing relentlessly. Yes, you can borrow, but by the time you enter practice those debts can be substantial.

There is an alternative—an Armed Forces Health Professions (AFHP) scholarship. Whether you're studying to be a physician or a dentist, whether your goal is to become an osteopath or an optometrist, it can pay your entire tuition and fees all through medical school. It will also provide you with a substantial monthly allowance. In other words, if you qualify, one of those scholarships can give you financial independence now, when you need it most.

When you're ready to go into practice, an AFHP scholarship will also have paved the way for you to start your career under highly favorable circumstances. You'll be a commissioned officer in the military branch of your selection. Your practice will be waiting for you. You'll step into it and know that the challenges you'll meet will be solely medical ones and professionally stimulating.

There will also be opportunity for further study. The Armed Forces have created extensive and outstanding clinical, teaching and research programs. Once you decide on a specialty, you may find yourself taking the graduate medical studies of your choice at one of their facilities.

The details are many. But if you'll send in the coupon, we'll mail you literature which will give you a good overview of the scope of our operations. Why not write? We think you'll be interested in the possibilities.

Probing pornography problems

By J.M. VAN TOL

The old "intractable obscenity problem" truly contains a wealth of amusement. For those light-hearted connoisseurs of campus humor amongst us, the pornography squabble has been very gratifying indeed. As the contentions continue to fly around, we'd like to mention and expand on some of our favorites.

First, kudos to Charlotte Allen. Her knowledge of pornography is encyclopedic. For example, she points out the hitherto little known distinction between pornography and oppressive pornography. Apparently the latter genre comprises those films in which "men are always show as macho and dominant, while women are submissive". Progressive porno would seem, then, to mandate equal time for both sexes.

Albert Sparks has moments of magnificence as well. With elitism being such a problem on this campus, he points out with rightful pride that his Baroque Enterprises is "shooting for the average student, with a C average or below". To support his position still further, he mentions that a good part of Baroque's membership flunked out of school last semester. We are pleased to learn that someone, at least, is willing to pander to the moron crowd. (Mr. Sparks' correlation, of course.)

And speaking of treats to come, Sparks mentioned the possibility of cameo appearances by real live porno stars, in which they would speak and sing. We can only say that any chance to witness a Marilyn Chambers-Harry Reems duet ought not to be missed. However, to avoid duplication of effort, we suggest that the Distinguished Visitors Program make all the arrangements.

But seriously, cries of censorship are no more than red herrings, or more eloquently, represent "the typical liberal wishy-washy position". Many responsible sources have already given thought to possible solutions. We look with approval upon Mr. James Nollet's proposal to delegate all censorial tasks to a board of distinguished Judeo-Christian clergypersons. Certainly they have access to higher morality. But that would not be at all progressive.

In the interest of "student control of our lives", students should make their own choice. And indeed, the Undergraduate Senate will hold a referendum on the issue shortly. We have great hope that truth shall be found in numbers. (Our sources tell us that it is NOT true that the Young Democrats Club has petitioned the Senate to hold a referendum on whether the "Ford for President" people should be allowed to come on campus.)

If culture should best obscenity in the referendum, an enforcing agency will of course become necessary. We suggest the formation of a watchdog committee composed of respected members of Hillel, the Newman Club, and the Campus Crusade for Christ. This group's decisions would be final, and it would be completely independent of the Student Senate.

Finally, no good issue is complete without a conspiracy. We have surveyed the campus, trying to determine which individuals or groups might have compelling motives for fomenting unrest. Our conclusion is that the only organization to have profited from the agitation is WMUA. Its Public Affairs Director stated that the Allen-Sparks debate drew the best telephone response in 'MUA history.

We find it reprehensible that WMUA sponsored the pornography debate for the sole purpose of making money. It ought to be clear by now that some things should not be discussed in public. IS THERE NO DECENCY LEFT???

Law and order

By DAVID E. LEAVITT

The society in which we live has become one of fear. In our cities and even in some of our suburbs, we barricade ourselves in our homes after sunset and dare not venture out unless an emergency makes it necessary.

We continually worry about the safety of our possessions and of our loved ones when we are away from them for any span of time. Driving to restaurants, sporting events, or the cinema is a chancy venture, lest we find our automobile no longer there when we return to the parking lot.

Our society has become one where the criminal element has perpetrated all facets. We are faced with crime and corruption in social services; in public and private business concerns; and, most distressing of all, in government.

Where can we turn? Even now in Massachusetts, we are told that if our homes are invaded by an intruder, we must take only one action — flee. In short, it is the criminal and not the victim who is sheltered under our present criminal justice system.

The time for change is now! The American people demand it! Unfortunately, that change is not coming from the local Democrats who have controlled the State House since the early fifties, or from the national Democrats who have controlled the Congress since the mid-fifties.

Keeping in this vain, the Democratic National Platform does not mention any attempts that it will make concerning the improving of laws to make ours once again a safe and just society.

We as Republicans favor laws that protect the citizen again and not the criminal. In the GOP National Platform, plans are put forth to make ours once again, a safe and just society. It favors automatic and mandatory minimum sentences for persons committing crimes that fall under Federal jurisdiction and that involve the use of a dangerous weapon; that involve extremely serious crimes, such as trafficking of hard drugs, kidnapping, and aircraft hi-jacking; and that involve injuries committed by repeat offenders.

The final part of this is most needed since 64.2 per cent of all the crimes committed between 1970 and 1975 were done so by repeat offenders.

The President has also acted to make it once again possible for citizens to walk the streets without fear. He has called for an end to "Saturday Night Specials" which have no other purpose except against humans.

He has asked for laws establishing mandatory sentences for persons committing violent Federal crimes.

President Ford has asked for an extension of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration authorizing up to $6.8 billion of Federal aid to State and local governments to combat crime and improve personal safety.

On the statewide scene, Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley has long been one of the major proponents of gun control laws. Stiffer gun control laws should be enacted as 51 per cent of all crimes in 1975 in the United States were committed with handguns. Two major advocates of stricter gun control laws are both Republicans; Josiah Spaulding, and John Buckley.

Combining all of the above, we as Republicans believe that the time is now for the law to concern itself with the rights of the people it was designed to protect. The victims of crime, not the criminals.

Disgusting disco

To the Editor:

Realizing that "disco" is a popular form of music on this campus I can see why they might have it one, maybe two nights a week but certainly not four. In case you haven't already guessed I'm referring to the Blue Wall.

Let's take a look at what a student's T.O.C. sticker covers: the Hatch, the Top Of The Campus, and the Blue Wall. The Hatch offers live music on weekends and is closed the remainder of the week. The T.O.C. offers live music on various nights and when there is not live music there is no music, and even when there is live music it is difficult to get in because it is so crowded. Which brings us to the Blue Wall, my main point.

The Blue Wall offers live music once or twice a week, a movie or game once a week, and "disco" four nights a week. Why not diversity a little, for instance keep the wall's present schedule but instead of "disco" four nights a week have it one or two nights a week and have a night or two set aside for a coffee house type of night, or a night in which there are other forms of music playing such as Top 40, country and western, bluegrass or jazz.

There are other tastes of music on this campus and it is totally unfair to have them ignored, as presently exists. You might call it musical discrimination.

Sorority life

To the Editor:

About a week ago Ms. Charlotte Allen wrote an editorial which not only degraded the entire sorority system but also struck out against women as individuals.

The following is the Panhellonic Council's reply to her remarks.

Apparently Ms. Allen is very misinformed about sororities and their activities. She seems to think all they have time for is drinking and checking out the frat guys. Contrary to populr belief there is much more involved in sorority life.

Over the past two weeks sororities have devoted the majority of their time to a program known as Formal Rush. What is it? The program was set up through the combined efforts of all the sororities to introduce any interested women to the Greek system. So what's so great about that? Every sorority devoted a good three hours a night to parties designed to acquaint the women with the various houses. These parties also meant giving up Saturday and Sunday afternoons. Each sorority house thought of themes for their parties, gave tours and put a great deal of time into the planning of the program. It was a chance to let university women see what sororities are "really" like. In return for their efforts, the various sororities had a chance to meet some wonderful women and to clear up any misconceptions about sorority living.

I wonder where Ms. Allen is when sororities are busy with area activities. The Greeks devote a great deal of effort to various fund raising projects. Who spends hours behind the phones at Alumni Hall? Those people who label all sorority members as your typical "Susie Sorority?" Guess again. Yes, it's the sororities and fraternities who sit there getting contributions for your school. However, our work does not stop here.

Now almost everyone on campus has heard of the famous "Schlitzarama." During this week each fraternity and sorority sponsors an event to raise money for various charities.

Sororities also seem to have a reputation for being glamorous babes with no brains at all. Sororities work hard toward achieving academic gains. They have set up scholarships based on academic standing as well as designed their own area colloquia.

We could continue our list of activities to include Arcon, representation on the Board of Governors and intramurals. Sororities are continually involved in some project. There is one thing all students should realize about sororities and fraternities. When you see that woman with her sorority jacket on sitting next to you in class don't move away from her. Or don't stereotype her as a "sorority chick." You see she really is different in one very important sense. She comes from a Greek system where people work harder towards their goals. She comes from a system which promotes community, social, academic and individual growth.

And what about Ms. Allen? Obviously she is too involved in her own life and too narrow minded to notice that there is a whole lot more to Greek life than enjoying oneself at the local bar.

Salary differentials

To the Editor:

The recent articles on the MSP Women's Caucus and their use of the "Hoffman Report" have been very interesting.

To set the record straight, the title of Dr. Emily Hoffman's dissertation is An Econometric Analysis of University of Massachusetts-Amherst Faculty Salary Differentials, which was supported by a grant from the U.S. Department of Labor. Her work included a detailed statistical analysis of faculty salaries, which by Massachusetts law are a matter of public record. In addition to the dissertation, she wrote a Final Report which gives a summary of the results in simpler terms, including some suggested methods for reducing salary inequities.

This year, Dr. Hoffman is a Visiting Assistant Professor of Economics at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. However, I have a few copies of the Final Report available for those who may be interested. I can be contacted at 253-2702.

Changes in the family image

All posed like a ladder, step ladder, stepping up: the little sister, brother, then came Mom and Dad. Hands on each other's shoulders, glancing over toward the photographer and smiling. Be happy as a family is.

And presents pass on birthdays with kisses attached and cards — can't forget the cards that must end with the word "love" and x's for kisses, o's for hugs. Goodnight kisses and Mom and Dad tucked you into bed. They were never wrong and hit you when you were wrong, but you never thought to hit them back. And big brother was a hero. He played with trucks and little sisters played with dolls. Sometimes big brothers were even kind enough to play house with little sisters. And bubble baths were fun things to do together.

It was the family image. There was no way to deny it, no way to argue it down (but who would want to anyways?) It was what you were born into and you didn't fight it until the family image began to change.

Grammar school was an eight year thing — stable, instilled with the family image. But suddenly the years came to an end, the security came to an end. You packed your books and a great chunk of your childhood up and went to high school. You felt important and your mind was beginning to be challenged.

Something was happening to your body. You felt it — it was scary, but exciting. Friends were gaining importance. Looking into the mirror you wondered ... is that really me? — is that face really connected to all the thoughts I have?

It was the beginning of self-realization and playing different "image" games. Dress, hair, make-up, football stars — they were the new image. Where was the family image going? Suddenly it became unimportant.

High school years passed by — life decisions to be faced. You turned around and your childhood — gone. I remember being 14, my brother 17 and him telling me "don't wish your childhood away." He missed it terribly, but I never did.

Then all the barriers set by the family image were being torn down by new ideas. The setting of your own life style was taking place. Things became right by your own standards, not because Mom and Dad had told you they were definitely wrong, definitely right. And all their old ideas were resented, along with the old family image.

Conflict began and angry tears. Resenting parents resenting you for moving on. Half being in their lives, them trying hard to stay in yours caused indecision. Standing shoulder to shoulder, the old picture cracked — fell to the floor.

A new family picture, a new family portrait was being taken. Be happy as a family is not hands on each others' shoulders posed like a ladder glancing over toward the photographer. But sitting side by side hand in hand. Mom-person, Dad-person, sister-person, brother-person: suddenly all the family members took on the individual identity of "people" not objects for cards and birthday gifts or x's and o's. But people deserving kisses, people to appreciate for being different people.

What's this? Another family image all posed like a ladder, step ladder, stepping up: the little sister, brother, then came Mom and Dad. Hands on each others' shoulders, glancing over toward the photographer and smiling. Be happy as a family is. Funny now the roles have changed and all you can do is hope you'll understand when the family — your family — image begins to change.

Join the Walk!

To the Editor:

We are going to Washington On October 16, to demand immediate and unilateral action toward disarmament, full employment at decent wages, an end to racism, equal rights for women, full amnesty for all Vietnam war resisters, and immediate, massive aid to our cities.

The Trade Union movement — from the great organizing drives of the C.I.O. in the 1930's to Cesar Chavez's Farm Workers today — has shown that if workers organize they can defend their rights. The Civil Rights Movement led by Martin Luther King, Jr. nonviolently won important gains in the 1950's and buried Jim Crow. The Peace Movement of the 1960's and early 70's ended the war in Indochina. The Women's Movement leads in a new consciousness for men and women.

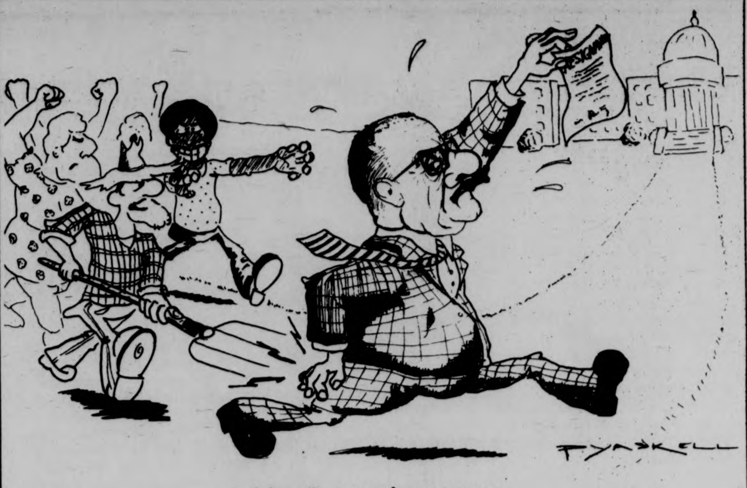
We believe profound change is possible through organized peaceful action. Ralph Abernathy, Daniel Ellsberg, Cora Weiss, David McReynolds, Anne Braden, Dave Dellinger, Sin Lens, Sam Lovejoy and others will be speaking in Washington, D.C. on our immediate demands and future agenda.

Buses will be leaving our area late Friday night, October 15, arriving in the Capitol in time for the final walk into Washington. Buses will return late Monday after we gathered at the Lincoln Memorial for a silent "Procession of Death" to the Pentagon carrying coffins of people, cities, buildings, communities, projects which have died as a result of Pentagon spending; coffins will be deposited on Pentagon steps. In the early afternoon the Walk turns into a "Procession of Life" unfurling banners, releasing baloons, and heads back to Washington past the HEW to the White House with a list of demands for the President. [But will he appear?]

The Bus people insist that we must have a minimum number of reservations by TODAY. The cost for the roundtrip ticket is $25. Sleeping accommodations will be provided at no cost. Look for the CONTINENTAL WALK FOR DISARMAMENT AND SOCIAL JUSTICE table in the Student Union or Campus Center, or phone 584-8975 or 586-4163 for your reservation.

We have waited for the politicians to give us Another America but they can't. This is an America we must build for ourselves — no one can give it to us. So we will struggle for this version. The upcoming October weekend marks the end of the Continental Walk — and the beginning of a struggle which may last a generation. Sisters and brothers, take it easy, take it peacefully, but take it.

THE CONTINENTAL WALK FOR DISARMAMENT AND SOCIAL JUSTICE



No Butz about it!!

Let me count the ways...

Over the past decades, many ideas and attitudes have undergone radical changes, not the least of which is love. Centuries ago love was not even a consideration when thinking of marriage and the future; emotion was of secondary importance, and personal feelings weren't considered either. As society advanced, individual's rights and feelings came out of the closet and into focus. People began to think more and more about how they felt about a possible spouse, and not as much about material advantages to be gained.

As attitudes towards love grew more progressive and permissive, so did the methods of describing it. Odes, sonnets, and miles and miles of free verse began to appear, expounding the virtues of the loved ones. Poems also tried to describe the innermost feeling of the heart and soul.

One famous woman who successfully did this was Elizabeth Barrett Browning, with the poem that begins "How do I love thee, let me count the ways ... " In this creation, Mrs. Browning describes many personal feelings, and also those universal ones felt by lovers everywhere, even those in our own day and age.

Well, like I said before, things have changed of late, and if the venerable Mrs. Browning was alive and writing that poem today, here's the way it might read ...

"How do I love thee let me count the ways ... "

I love you when: You step on MY feet and call ME clumsy.

— When you throw cold water on me when I'm in the shower, and then deny you were ever in the bathroom.

— When you forced me to go with all of you into an unlit tunnel, knowing I have claustrophobia and am afraid of the dark.

... I love you like an actress loves a broken leg.

— love you because you're more fun than my Raggedy Ann doll

— ... Because you eat six pieces of my French toast and still ask for more.

— ... Even though you never let me win at tennis.

— ... even though you got your hair cut so short that there was nothing left for me to run my fingers through.

— ... when the closest we can get is a long distance phone call.

— ... because you jumped out a window for me.

— ... because you don't think I'm silly for being afraid of the thunder and the dark.

— ... because you would have fought a kumquat for me if I had asked you to.

— I love you even though you let all your plants die from dehydration.

— But, most of all, I love you for yourself, because you are the only one like you in the whole world.

A year for peace

By BRUCE SMITH

This is the year 5737 in the history of the Jewish people. Our history has been long and proud. We have withstood all people who have tried to take our religion and culture away from us. This resistance has meant death for millions of Jewish people throughout the centuries.

Twenty eight years ago, after being without a country for 2,000 years, the Jewish people established a nation and a homeland for all Jews. Israel, has become, and rightfully so, the focal point of all Jews everywhere.

Hopefully, the year 5737 will bring about the signs of peace that Israel has been striving for.

What did the year 5736 mean for the Jewish people? It started in the United Nations, with the Arab state's resolution equating Zionism (the desire to keep Israel strong) with racism. Decent people the world over despised this pernicious resolution. However, good did come from this evil. Israel, and the Jewish people saw who their real friends were, and who their enemies were.

This bill also awakened Jewish people from their complacency. It had been just 30 years since the Gas chambers at Auchwitz were liberated. The surviving Jews thought that the world would now finally let them live in peace. This resolution showed people that anti-Semitism is not dead.

This year more sickening news if being forced into our consciousness. Time magazine and other periodicals have reported events that are truly scary. In Argentina, a land full of ex-Nazis and all their millions in WWII money, a new group (which is the neo-Nazi movement) has declared war on the Jewish people. Pictures of Adolph Hitler are on street corners around Buenos Aires. Already many temples have been bombed and Jew killed. It is frightening to think that sick people such as the Nazis are still around and still filled with hate.

The year 5736 also saw many hijackings. Over the summer their was a French plane hijacked and flown to Uganda. There Idi Amin, the self proclaimed field marshall and ruler of Uganda, welcomed the terrorists and their international hostages. The terrorist's then looked through all the passengers passports and singled out all the Jews for death. This is reminiscent of the lines at Auchwitz where Jews were singled out for death in the gas chambers.

At Auchwitz, the world remained silent, and the Jews had no one to help or protect them. This time, the Jews were not alone. Israel knew what their fellow Jews were going through, because the survivors of Hitler's death camps came to Israel. Israel acted quickly and decisively, and surmounted one of the most daring raids that the world has seen.

All the hostages were rescued. All the terrorists were killed. Jews everywhere stood up and felt proud to be Jews. No more did Jews go to their death without fighting. The raid at Entebbe airport will be remembered for the courage and determination of Israel to act when Jewish people anywhere are threatened.

The last year went out with yet another sign of promise. Both the Syrian and Lebanese borders have been opened to allow families to reunite after many years of separation. It is a positive step that shows there is a chance to live in peace.

. Hopefully, the year 5737 will be a good year for the Jewish people and for all people. Peace is not unattainable. People just have to work at it together.

Maybe this will be the year.

Ahm Yisrael Chai!

Service station sexist

To the Editor:

To all concerned car owners, particularly female, I would like to share with you an experience I had in the hopes of keeping you informed about area service stations.

Last Friday, I took my car to D&M Sunoco, on Route 9 across from Zayre, for a simple oil, grease, and filter change. With the convenience of a lift and a friendly mechanic, I thought it would be wise to have hime show me where the plug was so that next time I could change the oil myself. He showed me and I began feeling more confident about understanding my own car. I then asked about changing the filter, and he showed me that as well. Not knowing anything else to ask I waited in the office by the window just to watch.

That weekend the car was needed for a long trip. It was Saturday before the damage was felt. When in second gear the car made terrible noises and I was sure it was on its way out. I took it to a different station here in Amherst and was asked if when the oil was changed they had checked the grease level in the transmission. I answered that I'd assumed so because I'd told them to. This new mechanic informed me that there was practically no grease in the transmission and that I had a leak as well. To take it out and have it resealed means expensive labor.

I called D&M and spoke to the manager. I informed him politely of what had happened and, as it had been repaired elsewhere, I explained that I felt a definite negligence on their part. He asked me which car it was and I told him. Then he said he remembered me, I was the one that kept walking back and forth and confusing the mechanic with silly questions. He advised me and my female friends to let the mechanic write out the work order and just sit in the office until the job's been done. "It's a pain in the neck." I began to explain that I didn't see how asking where the plug was so that I could change the oil myself was a pain in the neck. He hung up.

I've talked to others who have had similar experiences with D&M. That is why I called in the first place, to let them know that their attitude is discriminatory and must change. I recommend that you don't have your car serviced there but if you must, remember to sit in the office, don't ask questions, pay whatever price they demand and you'll leave with a friendly, "Now you can be on your way Babe".

Columnist discredited

To the Editor:

After reading her column last week in which Charlotte Allen made fifteen grammatical errors while espousing her inane and sometimes impish views, I thought she had reached the peak of incompetence. In her latest column however, she exceeded all past performances by becoming even more absurd in subject matter while reaching a new height of eighteen grammatical errors within sixteen paragraphs.

Maybe the best thing Ms. Allen could do for the women's movement would be to return to junior high school.

Police thanked

To the Editor:

Recently, I had the unfortunate experience of having my bike stolen. However, due to the professionalism and competence of both the UMass police and the Ludlow police. I now have my bike back. I would like to express my appreciation and gratefulness to the officers involved, especially Sgt. Grater.

Sound Guard™ keeps your good sounds sounding good.

Over the years, you've probably noticed how the sound of your records seems to deteriorate. The reason is friction. An inevitable result of hard stylus tracking softer vinyl grooves.

Now you can protect the sound of your records with Sound Guard* record preservative. Sound Guard preservative puts on a microscopically-thin, dry film to help the stylus track smoothly in the grooves — instead of eroding them away.

Sound Guard's been tested by independent audio experts and proved to be effective and safe on new records and old 78's.

Musical '1776' bows bicentennial salute

Tickets are now on sale for the UMass Fine Arts Center production of "1776".

The musical opens Friday, Oct. 15, and plays on both Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 16 and 17. The production then resumes its salute to the bicentennial again on Homecoming weekend Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 23 and 24. Performances are at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

"1776" won a Tony award and played for two years during the 1970-72 Broadway Season. The musical will feature Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin. Other professional actors coming to the Amherst area for the production include William Linton as John Adams, Darrell Sandeen as Thomas Jefferson and Barry Busse as Edward Rutledge.

Tickets for "1776" are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center box office and all Ticketron outlets. Full information is available at 545-2511.

Fine arts magazine welcomes staff, work

There will be a meeting for all those interested in working on the Spectrum, the fine arts magazine of UMass, Tuesday night at 7:00 in Campus Center room 106.

Anyone interested in working on the staff is welcome to attend.

Spectrum is now accepting poetry, fiction, photography and artwork.

Deerfield hall site of piano concert

The Sunday Concert Series will resume for the months of October and November at the Memorial Hall Museum in Deerfield, with a recital of piano music Sunday at 4:00 p.m.

Kenneth Forfia, pianist, will present a program of works by Beethoven, Schubert, Liszt and Chopin. He will play on the museum's 1886 Steinway grand piano.

Forfia received his B.A. from UMass and is presently a graduate student there. He is studying piano there with Nigel Cox. Forfia is also record librarian for radio station WFCR.

The concert will take place in the music room of the museum, which houses a fine collection of American historial musical instruments. Admission to the concert is free, although a collection will be taken to benefit the musical instrument restoration fund. It is open to the public and all are welcome to attend.

seen in performance at Bowker Auditorium at UMass Tuesday as the first even in the University's Arts Council's Dance Series.

The troupe will be under the leadership of Bando Yaenosuke, the most famous of Kabuki fight-scene teachers and choreographers. Nakamura Matagoro and Onoe Kuroemon, both well-known Kabuki actors and acting teachers, will appear.

The stage-battles of Kabuki are formalized encounters which play a major role in the production of many Kabuki plays. Though the movements and techniques employed in the various types of tachimarwari (stage-battles) are based on those actually used in such martial arts as kendo and judo, they are transmuted on the Kabuki stage into stylized, dance-like patterns.

The ensemble is from the National Theater Institute of Japan. Its American tour is sponsored by the Performing Arts Program of the Asia Society. Tickets are now on sale at the Fine Arts Center Box Office at $5, $4, and $3. The box office is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Jewish holidays mark desert exodus

Succot is a Jewish holiday like many Jewish holidays; it has both an historical and an agricultural basis. On the historical level, it marks the journey of the people of Israel through the desert after the exodus from slavery in Egypt. During the journey they lived in booths — succot in Hebrew. On the agricultural level, the holiday falls at the time of the final harvest. The lulav and etrog (a palm, willow, and myrtle branch and a lemon-like fruit) reflect this level of the holiday.

The festival itself begins Friday night and continues for over a week, ending this period of thanksgiving and rejoicing with the holiday of Simhat Torah, which will be marked by a Five-College celebration Saturday night, Oct. 16.

Your Birthday
by Stella Wilder

Friday, October 8 — Born today, you are a prudent, perhaps overly cautious individual who works hard, long and tirelessly to gain objectives that are self-determined, self-envisioned. At the same time, you are very little inclined to work enthusiastically or energetically for those aims that others may have set for you. Though you are not one to talk much about your independence, its existence as a mainstay of your nature becomes obvious as you go about the business of everyday living. You are a meticulous person who takes great pride in his ability to prevent mistakes before they happen; you are also a person of great foresight who is often helped more by his knack for prediction than by his learned knowledge.

You take time periodically for self-analysis, for you believe firmly in the principle of "know thyself." Somewhat prone to fault-finding in your relationships with other people, you are, unfortunately, quick to take offense when others criticize faults of yours. Self-knowledge never seems to strike home to such a degree that you begin to work on those character traits that prove an irritation to other people; this, however, is something that proves, if nothing else, your affinity to your fellows, for it is a most common failing.

You insist upon a high standard of behavior for others, but are not nearly so insistent upon such standards for yourself. On the other hand, you are quick to forgive transgressions -- and just as quick to let others know of your generosity for so doing. Nevertheless, others find you endearing and go out of their way to gain your good will.

Saturday, October 9

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — A period of uncertainty begins early in the day. Make your points clearly and succinctly as soon as possible.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — The influence of material possessions upon your outlook may be more obvious, that you would like to think. Reconsider recent decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This may be a particularly trying day -- but only if you are unaware of new ways and means of hurdling old obstacles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Enjoy your position on the home front as much as you can today. There may be some changes in the offing that will bring you dissatisfaction.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — If presently unemployed, this could be an especially good day for you. Financial matters come to a head late in the day.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Make changes on the home front as you see fit -- but be prepared to defend your decisions against family opposition at evening.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Success in a general way is yours today; specifically, however, it may be a different story. Don't expect great gains without great effort.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — A raise in the general level of existence makes it possible for you to enjoy life more from now on. For starters, look on the bright side.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — You are more apt to be noticed by those in charge of community affairs if you will volunteer for service. Awareness increases gradually.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — If you have hopes of being in the limelight today, you would do well to contribute generously of you time as well as your material goods.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Nothing is easier to give than money -- if you have it. Measure your contribution in terms of personal labor and concern.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — A challenging morning brings rewards late in the day. Don't be hesitant about asking for another's opinion of your chances for success.

Bluebird forecast

By JACOB LOVE

The Full Moon occurred last nite at 55 minutes past midnite. With the Sun shining from Libra (sign of balance in relationships) and the Moon reflecting solar light from Aries (sign of Glorious Self) our night may have gone in one of two directions. If we've been developing our ability to balance with a partner, last night could have marked an enlightened sense of Self thru reflection or sharing. But if a sense of partnership and balanced purpose failed to develop during the last 14 days of the lunar cycle, the Self may have impetuously rebelled, denounced sharing, and taken refuge in the Glory of Individuality.

Today's flow of time will accentuate whatever we got out of the Full Moon. A big wave of energy is rolling in towards 2:40 p.m. as the Sun forms a consciousness-raising 135 degree angle to Jupiter. This angle can be harsh if we're not riding with it and, as Jupiter is the joy planet, the resulting energy wave may hurt those who are not turned into Libran balance. Jupiter is in Gemini, the sign of communication, so if we're not balancing our selves with others and communicating some joy, we may feel isolated and unhappily introverted.

Isolated self-hood may face further changes today with the Moon in Aries and Mars, the ruler of Aries, about to change signs. Mars is the masculine planet, at his best helpfully extroverted. But at worst, he's the god-of-war. He's been in Libra for the last six weeks, trying to balance things out. But at 4:25 p.m. he goes on into Scorpio, the realm of death-and-rebirth. For those who aren't ready for it with developed balancing skills, the Scorpionic intensity of Mars may cause friction and fighting. Especially in the transition period between now and noon Saturday, when he forms a sharp angle to Jupiter, we'd better watch out for Mars unless we're sure we can handle it.

With the Sun in Libra, the overall focus will not only be on that sign's sense of balance.

Ruggers meet Boston power

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The unbeaten and unscored upon Beacon Hill rugby club, the premier squad in the Boston area, invades Amherst for a 1:00 p.m. Saturday encounter with a surprisingly strong UMass fifteen. The ruggers take an impressive 4-1-1 ledger into this contest which the sagacious mentor Robert "Doc" Laurence calculates, "will quite candidately be the toughest opponent we'll face this fall."

Inexperience, which proved disadvantageous in last weekend's initial setback to the Sorcerer's, should once again handicap Lawrence's injury-riddled troops. Beacon Hill is older, more experienced and have played together for several years in direct contrast to the game the Minutemen play. The pack, which was ineffective in last Saturday's loss will be hard pressed to control the scrum against the visitor's physically superior forward wall.

Beacon Hill soundly lambasted the Boston Club, last year's New England Champions, 29-0 earlier this season in a rout which the patriarchal Laurence, a seasoned analyst of the rugby scene for 23 years, described as "frightening — hard to conceive."

This dreaded juggarnut then steamrolled a highly regarded Charles River "Rats" side, 24-0. One does not have to be a mathematical magician to tabulate the composite they have accumulated against two of Boston's perennial powers.

Intimidating as this year's slate appears, last spring UMass defeated this same Beacon Hill Club. Injuries have rifled the ruggers roster relagating Rick Lopes, outside center Kelley Atterage and fly half Larry Tebo to limited action.

Fearless fullback Jeff Stefani, a catalyst and spokesman for the club articulated, "We did real good when we beat them last spring, but a lot of players are hurt now. It will be a lot tougher to beat them now."

WMUA

UMass football returns to the gridiron after a week's absence, and WMUA will be there to bring you all the action. Join Bob Paquette, Judy Van Handle, and Charlie Holmes as the Minutemen take on the Terriers of Boston University at Nickerson Field in Boston. Air time is 12:50 over the voice of UMass sports, WMUA, 91.1 FM in Amherst.

David Letters sets his mark, rolls his skates for benefits

David Letters who has skated from UMass ...

Sports, money, holdouts, contracts, and selfishness. Ah yes...these words combine in such wonderous fashion to create a flowing style journalists are so eager to attain.

Let's try again. Sports, money, generosity, donations, and volunteering. No. wait a minute, something is drastically wrong here! Too choppy, too different. It just doesn't sound right...or does it?

Granted, the words money and generosity seldom gain entry into the same sports sentence without causing a contradiction. But that rare occasion generally provides for an interesting subject as in the person of David Letters, a 29 year old senior at UMass. For Letters, earning money to donate has become the right combination.

This Sunday at 12:00 noon, in Winchendon, Letters will don a pair of roller skates, and for five hours will try to cover as much distance as possible. Letters has local businesses and individuals with pledges for every mile he skates, similar to the annual March of Dimes Walk-a-thon. With the same idea in mind, Letters will be racing through the streets of Winchendon to raise money for the Clark Memorial, a non-profit community center and athletic facility in the Winchendon area.

Letters figures he will take in $7,000 for 50 miles, but hopes to cover 60 miles at the minimum. "If it's a cool day, and there's little wind, I may cover as much as 80 miles," Letters said. "I've done it before in that time." He hopes to skate at an average speed of 14 miles per hour, taking five minute breaks on the hour. Letters described the course as "hilly", but explained how he uses a running motion to climb hills and usually can ascent the slopes as fast as a runner.

The event came about when Letters and townspeople of Winchendon met to concentrate on a solution to the financial problems of the Clark Memorial. Letters noted that "If they can raise $40,000, they can combat problems of inflation. It's either that or raise the fees to go in there." After the discussion, Sunday's event was the answer.

The skating will be the center of activity in Winchendon center, but other related events will be included to help raise money. A hole-in-one golf tournament, a CB jamboree, a display of local arts and crafts, a flee market, a pie and bake sale, the world's largest rocking horse (13 feet) for kids to ride, and various games for children will add to the skating festivities.

Special maps for foliage touring of the area will be supplied on which side-roads will be mapped out to provide the maximum scenery during the peak foliage weekend. Winchendon, 41 miles east of Amherst (Routes 202-2-202) is considered to be the center of the foliage area.

Letters feels the day's event could conceivably net $10,000 to go directly to the Clark Memorial.

For David Letters, skating has been a way of life since 1973. It was then Letters embarked on a cross country skating tour from Gloucester, Mass. to San Francisco, Cal. He completed the trip in 137 days, of which 88 were actually spent skating.

"Since then, people have come to see me skate," he said. "It's become a saleable item, and I want to utilize it for charity, for a good cause."

Letters also takes part in the Jerry Lewis skate-a-thon at the Whalom skating club in Lunenburg each year. The event raised $12,000 last year for the Muscular Distrophy Fund.

This past summer, he skated across the country for 10 days with Comedian-Political Activist Dick Gregory. They skated about 50 miles per day, and on a day Gregory asked Letters to set a pace, they covered 64 miles in a mountainous area of Pennsylvania. Letters and Gregory met each other in Dallas City, Illinois, during Letter's Gloucester-San Francisco trip, as Gregory was heading the opposite direction on a cross country walk. "We just got off on each other," Letters said.

Their purpose this summer was to raise money for the World Food Council, and Gregory succeeded in raising $1.5 million. Letters sees the possibility next year of joining Gregory on an around-the-world tour to make people aware of the hunger and stavation in the world.

So for David Letters, skating has become a valuable experience. It has become a way to see the country, meet people, and more importantly, to help institutions and charities which we so often take for granted.

Minutemen look for win against BU

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

The UMass soccer team has what coach Russ Kidd calls "a must game" tomorrow as the Minutemen host Boston University beginning at 1:00 p.m. on Boyden Field.

With only one win in five games, coach Kidd is deeply concerned about his team's capability to turn that record around, but he remains extremely confident.

"We have to get back to winning and the only way to do that is for us to score some goals," said Kidd. He never spoke truer words as the team statistics point this out quite clearly. UMass has scored but six goals while giving up a total of 16.

The Minutemen continue to have their scoring chances, however. The Keene State game was the turning point for the team in its struggle to organize a structured offensive attack. Now that this has been accomplished the problem of putting the ball in the net has arisen.

"We don't have that superlative scoring threat which most of the top soccer schools have, therefore we have to work a little harder on setting ourselves up for good scoring chances," said Kidd. "Our kids need more confidence and experience around the net to develop better scoring skills — it takes time," Kidd added.

The goaltending by the Minutemen H&H combination has been excellent. Mark Hanks and Norm Hodgon have played very well behind an undermanned defensive corps currently minus Ed Niemiec with an ankle injury and Mark Vassolotti out with the flu.

Boston University comes into the game off a 2-1 victory over Providence, a strong Division II club. The Terriers currently sport a 4-4 record overall and 1-2 in the Yankee Conference. They have been involved in four one-goal games, winning three of them.

Coach Kidd indicated that he would not make any changes in personnel or strategy for the BU game but emphasized that this was the most important game of the season thus far. The Minutemen are currently 0-2 in the Yankee Conference and can ill afford another loss.

Field Hockey

Women host Cortland

By JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

A good lesson in the basics of field hockey will be the Minutewomen's objective today as the UMass field hockey team hosts cortland State at 2:30 on the field behind NOPE.

UMass will try to get back on the winning track, coming off a tight 3-2 loss to Mt. Holyoke on Tuesday. "We missed a lot of shots on goal against Mt. Holyoke", commented UMass coach Judy Davidson.

Last year Cortland State was ranked in the top three in the post-season Eastern Regional Tournament, but failed to finish that high. "It is important for our team morale to beat Cortland," said Davidson. A win would really get the ball rolling for the Minutewomen, as five of their next seven games are against top-ranked teams including number one Springfield College.

Moving the ball well, keeping the attack spread wide, and trying to play its own game will be the main objectives of the UMass game plan. Another key factor in a UMass win will be the goaltending. "We need a good game from Kathy Gipps in order to stay in the game," Davidson said.

The only injury UMass has to worry about is the sore back of co-captain Judy Kennedy. She practiced for the first time in over a week yesterday, and will still start at right link. The remaining starting line-up will be unchanged.

JV's win over HCC

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

Freshman Tarek Elnabli scored a three-goal hat trick, to pace the junior varsity soccer team to a 4-3 victory over Holyoke Community College yesterday.

It didn't take UMass too long to get on the board as Elnabli took a pass from Jack Gallagher at the 20 second mark and booted the ball past HCC goalie Mike Kirby.

The Minutemen had a number of good scoring opportunities, but their shots were either wide of the goal or over it.

Mike St. Martin put UMass up by two when he headed the ball past Kirby at 11:17. Jack Gallagher picked up his second assist on the play.

Elnabli finished the first half scoring with a goal at the 35:00 mark. Greg Omasta got the assist.

The Cougars got on the board early in the second half when Tom O'Brien scored on a penalty shot at 4:56.

At the 21:37 mark, Elnabli completed his hat trick on a penalty shot to increase the booters lead to 4-1.

But HCC made it a close game as Jon Gautheir scored on a penalty shot at 25:00 and Tom O'Brien got his second goal of the contest when his shot caught the crossbar and bounced in behind goalie Bill Tarter. However, the Minutemen held on to preserve their second win of the season against one setback.

"We may have gotten a little cocky when we took the quick lead," said UMass coach Gary McKenna, who was a co-captain on last year's varsity soccer team. "But the two penalty shots made the team think that the game wasn't out of reach."

Gridders open slate

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

The UMass junior varsity football team opens its season this afternoon with a 2:00 game against Dartmouth College at Alumni Stadium.

First-year coach Tom Mullen directs the 80-member squad, and is looking enthusiastically at the opening assignment.

"We've been improving all along in practice," he said. "We're sound on defense, have good people coming down from the varsity, and have a good offensive line."

Starting in the offensive backfield will be quarterback Mike McEvilly, fullback Steve Milkiewicz, replacing promoted Hank Sareault, who will be with the varsity this weekend, halfback Cliff Pedrow, and flanker Chris Kurtz. The split end is Dan Clerico and the tight end will be either Dave Federici or John Ferranti.

The defense with which Mullen is so impressed starts rovers Brian Saulin and Peter Russell, ends Marty Trymbulak and Duncan Gillan, and either Dick McGrail or Winston McGregor at nose guard. The linebackers are Bob Wilson and Steve Ringer, with cornerbacks Kevin Sullivan and Jay Fredkin and safeties Brian Heyworth and John Czerapowicz rounding out the corps.

Dartmouth, meanwhile, enters the game with a 15-game winning streak that stretches over four seasons. The Big Green won their first game of the season, 33-6, over Albany State.

Their squad is led by quarterback Buddy Teevans, fullback Charlie Thomas, who gained 98 yards in the season opener, and halfback Ron Robinson. Dartmouth's kicker is John Gogolak, younger brother of former pro stars Charlie and Pete. He booted 41 and 29-yard field goals against Albany.

Women's Cross Country

Harriers overpower Williams

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's cross country team took full advantage of the home course and a decimated Williams squad to overpower that school by the score of 18-45 yesterday afternoon.

Along with the Williams team, the women had to contend with the humidity, a riding class and various intestinal distresses as they ran over the rugged, hilly three mile course through the orchard.

Johara Chapman and Julie Lafreniere broke away from a pack of three other UMass runners and one Williams harrier at about the two mile mark and stuck together from there to tie for first. Their time of 18:37 was excellent since they weren't exhausted after the race and were obviously saving something for future races. The time run by the two was 29 seconds faster than Lafreniere's best, and 38 seconds better than Chapman's best time, both of which were run in the New Englands last year.

"It was a hot day to run," said Lafreniere. "The course was tough — we would work one hill, then rest in between for the next one."

Williams' Mary Hakala, a freshwoman from Alaska, was the next runner to finish, as she got through half the pack of UMass runners who were ahead of her to finish third.

"In the orchard we had about thirty yards," said Chapman, "then all of a sudden she (Hakala) was right on our shoulder and we said, "Uh-oh, time to go'."

Following this one Williams intruder were ten red-clad UMass harriers. Sue Swartz, who bettered her time from last year by 46 seconds, was fourth. Maggie Crowley and Jane Welzel rounded out the scoring for UMass by finishing fifth and sixth.

The home crowd was delighted as Barbara Callanan, Debbie Farmer, Anne Bradshaw, Monica Scott and Diane Perry combined to take seventh through 11th positions. This group had run together up until the top of the orchard when it started to break up. Also finishing before Williams' second runner were Jeanette Sturman and Bonnie Bukowski.

O'Brien cited the fact that most of the times were 30-45 seconds faster than last year's times from the New Englands, although they were still way off the course record of 17:59 set by Cathy Whitcomb of Tufts in that same race last year.

Chapman pretty much summed up the story of the meet when she said, "I just love looking back and seeing all red."

Fresh from their rather easy win over Williams, the Minutewoman harriers will probably get a chance to test themselves against some top individuals, if not top teams on Sunday when they travel to the Brandeis invitational meet.

Among the teams who will have top flight runners entered are Brandeis, Tufts, Amherst and Southern Connecticut. New Hampshire and MIT will also be there, and there is also a possibility that Middlebury will compete.

Men in Bronx again

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The men's cross country team will find out how much depth it has as two of its top three runners will be missing from the lineup, Saturday, as UMass will take on Connecticut, Syracuse, and Manhattan at Van Cortland Park in New York City. The meet is scheduled at noon.

UMass captain John McGrail and Frank Carroll will both miss this important quadrangular meet as McGrail will be taking his law boards and Carroll has a mild cold which has forced him to miss a week of practice.

Syracuse and Manhattan will be formidable foes for the 5-1 harriers as both are sporting undefeated 3-0 records. Approximately a year ago this Saturday, UMass hung on to narrowly defeat Syracuse 28-31 while beating Connecticut and Manhattan soundly, 24-40 and 10-43 respectively.

Syracuse, although not having one outstanding individual, has good depth and believes in the UMass concept of running together as a group.

The Orangemen are led by Bill O'Brien who finished fourth in last year's meet with a time of 25.34, only ten seconds behind UMass' John McGrail, who won the meet. Backing O'Brien will be Ray Meyers, Matt Hellerer, and Mike Buckley who finished 6th, 17th, and 19th respectively.

Netmen seek conference crown

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The men's tennis team will attempt to upset the conference leading UNH squad in its quest for the Yankee Conference title at the conference championships on the UMaine campus today and Saturday.

UMass and URI, tied for second after regular season play, pose the greatest threats to the favored Wildcats who went undefeated this season.

However, regular season play does not amount to much, according to Minuteman coach Bill Brown.

"The regular season is only a warm-up," said Brown. "It gives us a chance to size up the other teams.

"All the beans are in the conference championships. That's where the final standings come from, regardless of who did what in the regular season."

The rejuvenated netmen, now 3-2, with a strong finish in the regular season, are indeed likely candidates to win the Yankee Conference title.

Alan Green, Adam Rosen and Ricky Sharton are the UMass hopefuls in the singles competition. The pairings of Rosen-Green and Sharton-Heyl are expected to do well in doubles.

Green is the top second singles player in the conference. Undefeated in the regular season, he rarely had to go three sets to beat his opponents.

Adam Rosen, who can either serve and volley his opponents to death or overpower them from the baseline, lost only once, to UNH's Jeff Aarts in a third set tie-breaker. Rosen is looking forward to his rematch with Aarts.

Ricky Sharton, dubbed by coach Brown as "the steadiest player on the team," was undefeated until the last match of the season when he lost to his UVM counterpart.

The doubles team of Rosen and Green, both big servers, have played inspired tennis since their union. Sharton and Heyl are the winningest Minutemen pair. If both teams are hot, they could go all the way.

Netwomen home

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The women's varsity tennis team travels to Springfield tomorrow afternoon for a 1:00 p.m. match against Springfield College. The women were rained out Wednesday in a scheduled away match vs Boston College.

Tomorrow's contest will consist of nine matches six singles and three doubles. UMass will be without the services of number one singles player Jennifer Ranz, who has a prior commitment. Undefeated number five singles Dawn Minaai will move up from the fifth spot and play number one singles.

The rest of the lineup for singles is: Carolyn Mooney, number two, Kathy Sullivan, number three, Martha Awiszus, number four, Caron Tsapatsaris, number five, and Debby Halpern, number six.

In doubles the women will be led by the number one team of Karen Holt and Nancy O'Neil. The number two doubles team will be Jeanette Flynn and Leslie Howell, who are looking to notch their first win of the season. The number three team of Susanne Boissevan and Sue Store will be playing together for the first time this year.

Spikers: Double foe

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

"It's one of the tougher tri-matches on our schedule," said coach Dianne Thompson in reference to Saturday's home opener (at NOPE) for the Minutewomen at 1:00 against Springfield College and UConn.

Springfield is a perennial power in women's volleyball as well as other sports. Last year the Chiefs defeated the Minutewomen 15-6, 15-7; and this year they figure to be even stronger.

Connecticut is a team that UMass has never played in volleyball and coach Thompson is expecting a natural rivalry to develop.

The Minutewomen must improve their serve-receive to beat either of the visiting teams. "The way you receive a serve sets the tempo of the entire attack," said Thompson, "We must get the ball to our setter, so she in turn can set up our spiker."

Thompson was pleased with the team's serving, especially Heidi Dickson and Joan Wotkowicz. She also praised Dickson for her spiking talents, along with freshwoman Deborah Kuzdeba.

The women have been working this week at becoming lighter on their feet. "Our team is accustomed to the traditional method of volleyball whereby everyone is responsible for an area and plays only in that area, therefore becoming flatfooted," said Thompson.

Gridders ready for BU

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

After a two week layoff, the UMass football team returns to the gridiron tomorrow, when the Minutemen travel to Boston University's Nickerson Field for a 1:00 p.m. (12:50 WMUA) Yankee Conference encounter with the Terriers.

The Minutemen, who sport a 2-1 record, have had two weeks to forget about the disappointing loss to Harvard and menf injuries incurred by key personnel. Also during the past two weeks, the coaching staff feels that they have better prepared themselves for this game than for the three previous games.

"We've had two weeks to study BU's offense and defense to pick out the weaknesses they have. Now we're ready to work on those weaknesses and pick them apart," said defensive coach Bob Pickett.

Offensively, BU is very young and inexperienced. The only senior on the offensive line is right tackle Dennis Roland. In the offensive backfield, junior quarterback Greg Geiger directs BU's veer offense and often drives defensive backfields dizzy with his long bombs.

"It's important for us to contain Geiger," Pickett said. "He not only runs the veer offense very well, but he loves to throw the long bomb, a pass that he throws very well."

Geiger is closing in on all BU passing records after having an excellent sophomore season in which he revitalized the Terrier offense, making it the most potent offensive attack in the Yankee Conference.

"BU is fairly strong on offense," Pickett said. "What hurts them the most is the number of mistakes they make, especially the number of penalties they draw each game. I'm sure that has a lot to do with the fact that BU's offensive line is inexperienced. A young line will often make mistakes like that early in the season. We expect them to be ready for us," he continued.

On defense, the Terriers like to hit and hit and hit.

Led by senior defensive end Dave Lindstrom, BU, like UMass, has a superb defense. A veteran unit with size and quickness, it may pose problems to the off-and-on UMass offense.

"Ever since Paul Kemp has been coach at BU, he has taken great pride in his very physical teams. We're not afraid of BU's intimidating style. We're going to show them that we can hit just as hard, if not harder," said offensive line coach Clarence Brooks.

BU's 1-2 record is somewhat deceiving. It could very easily be 2-1 if it hadn't been for a late UNH field goal that sunk the Terriers.

The Minutemen have not lost to the Terriers since 1971. In the past two years, BU has traveled to Amherst only to have to go back to Boston empty handed.

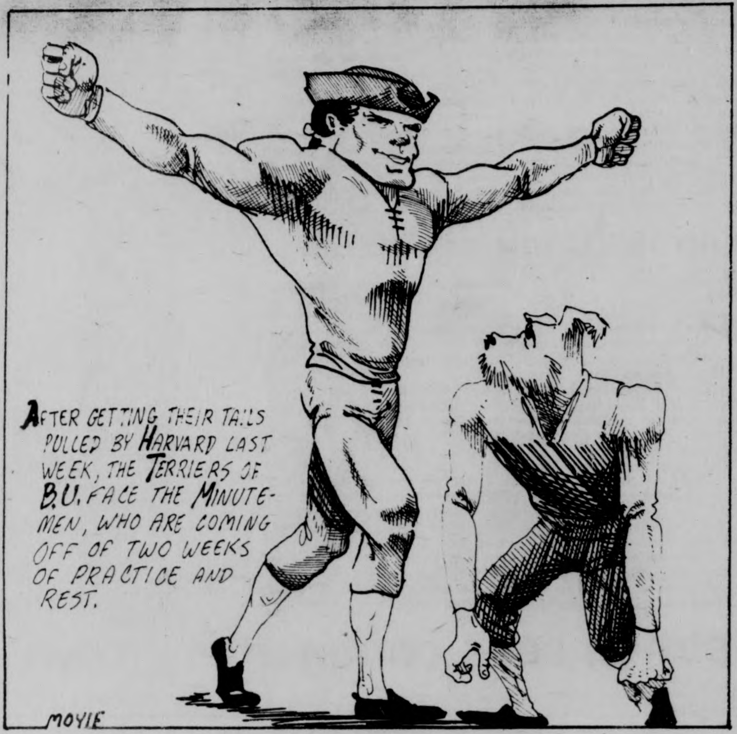
Tomorrow's game in Boston should not be looked down upon by the Minutemen. In its quest to regain the Beanpot — symbolic of the top team in the Yankee Conference — the Minutemen call ill afford a let down.

"We've had excellent practices the past two weeks. Everybody has been working hard and I don't think there'll be a letdown on our part," Pickett said.

The Minutemen are relatively healthy for tomorrow's game, although there are some questionable cases. Ron Harris, Rich Jessamy and Bill Coleman will be back in the starting lineup for UMass after suffering some annoying bumps and bruises during the Harvard game.

Those players whose status remains up in the air are John Toner and Keith Lang. Toner has been having troubles with his achilles heal all season and hasn't seen any action. Lang, who is the backup fullback and centers the ball on punts, has an injured shoulder.

"It's important that we win tomorrow so that we can regain the winning spirit we had earlier in the season, and get us rolling for the rest of the season," Pickett said.



AFTER GETTING THEIR TAILS PULLED BY HARVARD LAST WEEK, THE TERRIERS OF B.U. FACE THE MINUTEMEN, WHO ARE COMING OFF OF TWO WEEKS OF PRACTICE AND REST.

A guest prognosticator

News Item: Immortal Grid Picks Star, Metawampe (A.K.A. "The Great One"), has been exiled from the pages of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. The popular legend in his own Time but total stranger in his wife's Newsweek has vowed never to return until those in charge of the disenfranchisement "have recovered their senses of humor: the ability to laugh at themselves."

Subsequent findings have disclosed that x-rays taken of those responsible for the Great One's departure clearly showed the absence of funny bones in the policy-makers. Said one hospital spokesman, "It looked like some mad doctor had gone into them with a carving knife and slashed the bone away. It's a pretty thorough job; they may never laugh again."

For the duration of this collegiate football season, forecasting duties will be handled by a different guest prognosticator each week...not unlike Johnny Carson's Tonight Show.

This week's clairvoiant is new former United States Secretary of Agriculture, Earl Butz.

I'll bet right now you're saying to yourself, "What does this guy Butz know about football?" Well, nothing actually. I think the game is in reality a Russian plot to kill off American hogs by turning them into inedible pigskin.

Secondly...oops! Sorry, i just have time to pick the scores of the games before the heating coils warm up my cast-iron toilet seat.

Linksters qualify for ECAC tourney

By RICH ECKEL
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's golf team didn't exactly burn up the course at Ellington C.C. in Vernon, Conn. yesterday. However, it played just well enough to place second, and qualify for next weeks ECAC final.

The Minutemen tied for second place with Central Connecticut Univ., five strokes back of URI's winning 310 total. Thus these three teams will meet the other sectional qualifiers for the ECAC championship next Thursday at Hidden Springs C.C., in Pennsylvania.

Tim Diskin (76) carded the low UMass score, followed by Bob Sanderson and Jim McDermott, both of whom fired seven-over-par 79's. Bill Locke, playing out of the number five position, shot an 81, to round out the team's total.

The battle for first place could have been closer; however, the Minutemen approached the final three holes with the zeal of a charging Arnold Palmer.

"We played the final holes wrong," explained a relieved coach Fan Gaudette. "They're tough, and we should have been playing for bogey. Instead we tried for par, and birdie, and almost got hurt because of it."

Indeed the back nine almost cost UMass a berth in the finals next week. Diskin was at even par entering the 16th, however he double bogeyed both 16, and 18, finishing with a card that read 37-39-76. Sanderson also had problems, as he bogeyed 17, then double bogeyed the treacherous 18th, to finish 37-42-79, for the round.

The only player who had seemingly escaped the perils of the final three holes was sophomore McDermott. He birdied 16, parred 17, and was seven feet away from a birdie on eighteen. However, he ended the day with a golfer's nighmare by three putting, and suddenly the linksters began to wonder if they would even make the cut.

Bill Locke also had trouble on the back nine, as his card read 38-43-81 for the day. "That's a better score than we have been getting from our fifth man, but I know Bill can play better," Gaudette said.

Luckily for UMass Locke did come through, as freshman Flynt Lincoln had an off day struggling to an 83. "I don't want to make excuses for Flynt, however he was playing along side of a boy who shot somewhere in the 90's, and this may have hurt his concentration," explained Gaudette.

"Maybe this will take a little pressure off of us — everyone's been after us this season, now we'll see how URI handles the number on position," said Gaudette.

Two years ago the Minutemen finished second in this same qualifying match, then came back to edge out Yale in the finals by one stroke.

"We didn't play all that well, but we did accomplish our objective. Now let's see how we do in the finals," Gaudette stated. Obviously Gaudette, is hoping that history will repeat itself in Pennsylvania next Thursday.

CHIP SHOTS ... The finals also include the ten low individual scores of the qualifying rounds. Thus Steve Pianowski, of Springfield College, low medalist of yesterday's round with a 73, will be competing for individual honors next week. Also Billy Day, of Southern Conn., who carded a 75, The cut-off for the ten lowest scores was 77.

BOSTON [UPI] — Rick Middleton scored three goals in his Boston debut and Johnny Bucyk added three assists Thursday night in powering the Bruins to a 6-2 victory over the Minnesota North Stars.

The North Stars remained winless against the Bruins in Boston, suffering their 21st loss with five ties in their 10th National Hockey League season.

Rookie Ray Maluta scored his first NHL goal and Jean Ratelle added a third period tally to give Boston its opening game victory. Bobby Schmautz scored with 11 seconds to play for the final Boston goal.

New provost starts duties

By DEBBIE ALLIEGRO
and LISA MELILLI
Collegian Staff

Paul L. Puryear, recently appointed Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost, will begin duties today in the Whitmore Administration Building.

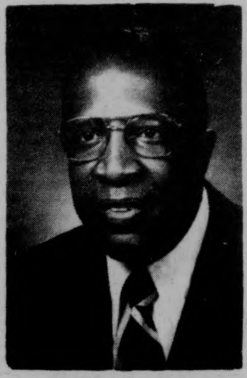
Puryear is replacing Dean D. Alfange Jr., who has filled the post on an acting basis since the summer of 1975. Alfange will return to his position as Dean of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

In making the announcement, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said "This institution is very fortunate to have for this important post someone with an extremely fine record as an academic administrator who, despite the pressure of his administrative duties and responsibilities, has managed a continued interest in his professional field."

According to Alfange, as Vice-Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost, Puryear will be responsible for all issues relating to academic affairs and academic departments. Alfange said the Vice-Chancellor reviews personnel actions such as academic promotion, appointment, reappointment and tenure decisions. Puryear will also be responsible for salary increases, if there should be such things, and other matters relating to faculty and professional staff in academic areas.

Puryear, 46, graduated magna cum laude from Talladega College in Alabama in 1953, and earned his master's degree and Ph.D. at the University of Chicago. He spent a year of post doctoral study at the University of Mysore in India under a Fullbright fellowship.

He began his teaching career as an assistant and associate professor of political science at Norfolk State College in Virginia, where he developed the college's first political science curriculum.



Paul L. Puryear

In 1961, he assumed an associate professorship at Tuskegee Institute, where he established and developed the institute's first undergraduate major in political science. After two years, he was appointed director of the Department of Social Science Research, a position he held until 1966.

For the next four years, he served in a dual post as chairperson of the political science department and director of the Center for Afro-American Research at Fisk University in Nashville.

On a part-time basis, Puryear served as president and director of the non-profit Afro-American Associates, Inc. from 1968 to 1970, and today remains a non-salaried president of the corporation. He also spent two years as a visiting scholar and staff associate for the Russell Sage Foundation.

In 1970, he assumed the post of professor of government and director of the urban research center at Florida State University in Tallahassee, where he secured about $490,000 in research and training grants. In January 1974, he was appointed provost of the division of social sciences and law at Florida State, a position he held until his appointment at UMass.

Active in a number of professional and civic associations, Puryear served as chairperson of the American Political Science Association Committee on the Status of Blacks from 1968 to 1973.

His writings on such subjects as school desegregation, employment in the Black community, Black politics in the south and others have been published by the Harvard Educational Review, the Journal of the Council of Higher Educational Review, the Journal of the Council of Higher Education, the Research Reports of the U.S. Department of Labor and other periodicals.

Between 1961 and 1966, he participated with the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference in civil rights activities in Alabama.

UMass zipped-01003

By TERESA HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

UMass has been granted its own zip code, 01003, to help the Amherst Post Office handle the mail it receives every day more efficienty.

The new number will apply to the approximately 130 dormitories and buildings located on campas, but not to any off-campus apartment complexes or houses.

John J. Mahar, postmaster of the Amherst branch office of the U.S. Postal Service, said the zip code will lead to reduced handling and increased efficiency in the processing of the 50,000 or so pieces of mail which come through his office for the UMass campus each day.

The new number will allow mail bound for the campus to only be handled once in Amherst, thus saving person-hours and money.

Previously, UMass mail came into the post office in town mixed in with all the other mail for the rest of the town.

It was then sorted twice — once to separate the "city case area" (Amherst) and the "University area" mail, and secondly, to separate UMass mail according to dorms and buildings on campus.

Now, with a different zip code, the mail for UMass will come into the office in separate sacks, already sorted from other Amherst mail. It will only have to be sorted by dorm, department, or building, Mahar said.

William R. Thomas, a General Clerk at the Amherst Post Office, said UMass used to have two of its own zip codes — 01003 for faculty and staff offices and 01004 for dormitories. This was discontinued, he said, because there was not a sufficient volume of mail to justify it.

Then, six years aog, an employe of the post office in town suggested that the practice be started again because of th greatly

Center for women in transition initiated

By DEBBIE ALLIEGRO
Staff Reporter

There is a magnitude of problems for women in transition, and there is a need to assist these women in taking control of stheir lives, and helping them find their own power, says Jefri Provost, Head of Residence of Mary Lyon House.

Women in transition are women who are in major life changes: battered women who need out, divorced and separated women, women coming out of prisons and mental institutions, and women suffering from bereavement, Provost said.

Provost and Lorraine Masterton, a UMass graduate student, are two of ten women initiating the New England Learning Center for Women in Transition (NELCWIT).

NELCWIT will be an educational, living, and counseling environment, Masterton said.

NELCWIT is designed to help women deal with emotional traumas, and help them identify with the educational, legal, and economic resources available to them in their communities, Masterton said.

"We help them to make intelligent decisions on what work they want to go into and the steps needed to become qualified," she said.

"We want to help give self-confidence so these women can become self-supportive," she added.

A major objective for Masterton is to teach the legal community who are already in counseling positions about the problems for women in transition.

When the women come out of their counseling here we want them to feel secure, instead of just putting them back into the same rut, Masterton said.

"The center will assist women in taking control of their lives and finding their own power," Provost said.

Women tend to try to meet other people's needs and not their own, she said. All women need to get together and share experiences because all women feel alone.

There is now a secure store-front office space in Greenfield, Masterton said. The office provides walk-in counseling, information of services, and advocacy programs for women who need legal advice.

Masterton is looking for funding a 24-hour crisis line because there is no such facility in Franklin County, she said.

The Center is now in the negotiation stage. The center would provide dormitory space, classrooms and offices.

The women initiating the project are planning a benefit for fund-raising in the near-future where Lilith, an all women's band will perform.

Faculty senate feels 'threatened' by reform-Martus

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate feels threatened when discussion of reorganization of the rhetoric department, and reform of the number of credits per course, are brought up by student government leaders, said Jay A. Martus, Student Government Association (SGA) co-President.

"The roadblock to student academic reform is that it has to be passed by the entire Faculty Senate. The senate feels their powers are being threatened and encroached upon when the rhetoric problem or course credit changes are brought up by myself," said Martus.

Jay A. Martus

Martus said often the senate will postpone or delay any discussion of student academic reform.

"The way to get around this is to build faculty support by lobbying and presenting material to different types of faculty and administrators. Many times we are outgunned so we have to be like politicians and make friends and alliances in the senate," he said.

Acting Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury and Secretary of the Faculty Senate Terrance Burke both oppose Martus' viewpoint.

"Many of the decisions made by the Faculty Senate are based on how the decisions will have an impact and consequence on students," said Burke.

Woodbury said, "Martus' statement is not true. Many acadmeic reforms have been made by both students and faculty. The senate has been a source of reform in the past and I think it's difficult to generalize about the senate's general attitude.

On March 10, 1976, the 21-year-old economics major was elected SGA co-President. Since that time, Martus has investigated the reorganization of the rhetoric program and the raising of academic credit from three to four per course.

According to Martus, changing courses to four credits would reduce class size, better utilize the faculty, and give students a chance for in-depth study.

"This academic credit change would make education here seem less diffuse and spread out. The number of faculty would remain the same and be better utilized," said Martus.

Burke said he agreed with Martus but that there is no strong base support among the faculty for this academic change.

Burke added at the present, he knows nothing about discussions by administrators for changing course credit values.

"Changing academic credit is an old idea that has been turned down before, but the idea has its pro's and con's," said Burke.

Burke said that if the credit change was instituted, the number of courses a student would take would be reduced from approximately 40 to 30 under the present mandatory 120 university credits required for graduation.

"With this, students would have fewer academic fields to look at and less of an opportunity to choose a major. This would give students less of a variety in different fields of study," said Burke.

The acting vice-chancellor of student affairs said there is "no real right answer to the credit problem." Woodbury suggested a program of alternative credit which would give students a choice of either four four credits or five three credit courses.

Martus also would like to see a change in the rhetoric department requirement from one writing and speech course to one mandatory freshmen composition course.

"Secondary schools are not teaching the students how to write or articulate and I think what's needed by freshmen is a good expository writing course," said Martus.

Martus said that he feels many students delay taking their rhetoric requirements because of the in-

Fine Arts Center presents semi-Broadway show,'1776'

By DAVID LETTERS
Collegian Staff

Opening night festivities of the Fine Arts Center with the presentation of '1776' was announced yesterday. Lewis Louraine, stage manager said, "In the summer of 1776 the cannons blared and the fife and drum corps played the streets on Philadelphia, we are going to do the same this Friday night."

The production, starring Broadway star Stubby Kaye as Benjamin Franklin, opens this Friday evening and continues on Saturday and Sunday. The 'Tony Award' winning musical continues its salute to the Bicentennial on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 23 and 24.

The 2nd Hampshire Regiment will fire their cannons and muskets near the Fine Arts Center this Friday night officially opening the Fine Arts Center production of 1776.

'The Spirit of 76' Fife and Drum Corps playing authentic revolutionary era music will also perform at 7:15 p.m. The twenty-eight member corps, under the direction of Dick Crossin from Springfield, has a membership age of 7 to 58.

Loraine said the bringing of extra events was "a natural, the entire production is as close to authentic in props, music, and dress, we're just adding some special events, for a special production."

The cast has been rehearsing the production for six weeks under the direction of Alan Light.

Four Broadway stars arrived last week to perform in the production and have rehearsed with the cast for ten days.

Starring Kaye the musical attempts to chronologically recreate the events leading up to and signing of the Declaration of Independence.

William Linton performs as John Adams, the Congressman from Massachusetts. Barry Busse is Edward Rutledge, from South Carolina, the youngest member of the Congress. Darrell Sandeen performs as Thomas Jefferson. Sandeen is well known from his appearance as the talking statue in a major insurance company television commercial.

The supporting cast is comprised of local talent from the Pioneer Valley. The cast includes faculty and students of the Universtiy as well as other actors from surrounding communities.

Fritz Steinway, Director of the Fine Arts Center and producer of '1776' noted "The idea of using both Broadway and local talent was to offer the local talent a chance to work and learn with the stars. From ten days of rehearsing together it appears that is coming true, as

Debate pair takes 2nd

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

Two top UMass debaters, Al Rosenbloom and Nick Burnett, came in second in a national debate tournament held at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), in Cambridge, Mass., last weekend. Rosenbloom and Burnett, members of the UMass Debate Union, made up one of three teams sent by UMass to the tournament. They were second only to a Dartmouth College team in a two to one decision among three judges.

The Debate Union is made up of forty to fifty undergraduates from all over campus, said Dr. Ronald J. Matlon, professor in the Communication Studies department, and faculty advisor for the group.

"Many, but certainly not all, of the students are pre-law students. The purpose is really to aid in the development of critical thinking skills," said Matlon.

This year David Donovan, Ellen Hoffman, and Robert Stover, three graduate students in the Communication Studies department, are also advising the program.

There are two options within the program, said Matlon. Some of the students attend tournaments at college campuses all over the country. They compete against between ten and fifty other schools in a series of two-hour debates, lasting for three weekend days. A topic is chosen for the tournaments in a particular year. This year's topic is consumer product safety. Teams of two debate up to twelve times in a weekend on such diverse subjects as auto safety, gun control, cigarettes, alcohol, contraceptives, and food additives, said David O'Brien, former president of the Debate Union.

The group researches many possible subjects so that teams can carry files to every tournment for quick reference before a debate, said Matlon.

Debates are judged by a single critic, usually a faculty member or a law student. The teams are judged on their persuasiveness, and must be able to debate both sides of every question.

Other students in the Debate Union participate in a Public Debate Program. They debate, usually during the week, before various groups, including service clubs and high school assemblies, on a variety of topics, said Matlon. They advertise publicly and are hired by groups who want to become better informed on a given topic.

The group researches any topic an organization is interested in before debating in front of them. The public debaters are expected to debate their own convictions but to adapt their arguments to their audiences. One project they are currently working on is the possibility of debating in prisons, "Hopefully on prison reform, if they'll let us," said Matlon.

The Debate Union is open to any undergraduate at the University. Interested people should drop in at room 126 South College, or call 545-2055 for more information. Women are especially encouraged to join.

There are traditionally more men than women involved in debating. "I believe this is because women are trained not to be competitive, especially against men. Women are trained to be passive, and you can't be passive in a debate," said Rosann Hynes, member of the Debate Union.

The tournament group will sponsor six tournaments at UMass this year in the Campus Center. These tournaments are open and the public is urged to attend, said O'Brien.

The next tournament at UMass will be November 13 and 14, and will be attended by over 500 high school students. The next college tournament will be held the weekend of December 4.

Sites for October debates will include, Kansas State University at Emporia, Kansas, the University of North Carolina, Army College in West Point, New York, the University of Vermont, the University of Delaware, and the University of Georgia.

The Public Debate group is planning an audience debate, at UMass against Wesleyan College. The public debaters hope to be utilized by professors on campus as a teaching aid. In the past they have been asked to debate in front of classes to illustrate debating procedures or to educate students on a particular topic, said O'Brien.

Also at MIT last weekend were two other teams from UMass. They were Rocco Defruscio with Glen Nickerson, and a freshman team made up of Mark Link and Edward Panetta.

"It's very unusual for us to send out a freshman team so early in the year and we were very pleased with their performance," said Hynes.

Both teams won four and lost four in the initial eight debates of the tournament, preventing them from going into the finals. Rosenbloom and Burnett, who came in second, succeeded in beating two top teams from Harvard and a nationally reknowned team from Catholic University before finally losing to Dartmouth.

UMass also sent two teams to John Hopkins College in Baltimore, Maryland that weekend. They were Laurie Cox with Rick Hannegan, and Mary O'Malley with David Smith.

Foreign profs on exchange in English department

By LYNNE U. SWENSON
Collegian Staff

Seven visiting lecturers from the British Iles, Germany, and Canada are at UMass in a reciprocal exchange program with the English department.

"The English department has more faculty exchanges than all other departments on campus put together," said James Matlack, Vice-Chairperson of the department.

The objective of the exchange program is, said Matlack, "To bring in people with different backgrounds and perspectives together so that students and faculty can take advantage of them."

"It also allows our professors to experience a new environment," he added.

The foreign professors interviewed by the Collegian expressed satisfaction with their positions at UMass.

"I've settled in quite well," said Michael Hattaway from the University of Kent in Cantebury, England.

Hattaway is the faculty resident of Grayson House. He holds his Shakespeare discussion classes in his apartment. Hattaway will be teaching modern poetry in the Orchard Hill-Central colloquium program this semester.

Richard Schell, from Laurentian University in Ontario, Canada, said he likes and is very interested in working in the much larger English department UMass has.

"However," said Schell, "the business like architecture is a drawback because there are not enough meeting places."

Shell specializes in Renaissance poetry, the Augustan period, and film studies.

Freiburg University in Germany has the most consistent exchange with UMass. The participant this year, Kurt Muller said, "I am totally satisfied, and especially pleased with the response of students in class."

Muller's fields are modern novel and drama, especially in the United States.

Herbert Smith, originally from America, is on exchange from the University of Victoria, B.C., Canada. He is teaching courses on 19th and 20th century American literature.

Here for one semester from Northeast London Polytechnic Institute is Malcom Hay, whose major work has been on modern drama.

Rolph Breur, University of Regensburge, Germany, and John Conaghan, University of Stirling, Scotland, are two professors teaching modern drama courses.

Breur's fields of interest include Middle English, Romantic period and Anglo-Irish.

"In the future," said Matlack, "We are considering exchanges with France, Italy and Israel."

Winchendon celebration raises funds for center

By JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

To Winchendon, a town of 6800 people, the Wendell P. Clark Memorial is more than a recreation center. It brings a certain harmony to the community, as demonstrated by the town's celebration of the first annual 'Welcome to Winchendon' weekend, held this past weekend, to raise money for the Memorial.

The Wendell P. Clark Memorial is a recreational facility which includes a covered skating rink, an indoor pool, an auditorium, a sauna, a Universal gym, and is the site for various town meetings.

Members and friends of the center have been working since April to raise money to offset a $40,000 shortage of funds in the center's operations budget.

Over $20,000 has been raised since April, and last weekend's activities added another $1,500-2,000 to the total.

According to Philip J. Sullivan, director of the Memorial, $10,000 of those funds were raised through a public phone drive, and another $10,000 was raised through a public subscription, which friends of the Memorial going door-to-door to solicit funds.

Members of the Clark Memorial joined together to organize the day's events, which included a Citizen Band radio club competition and raffle, a hole-in-one competition, kiddie rides on a fire truck, and a skate-around-Winchendon by David Letters.

During the course of the weekend various bake sales and flea markets were held. An additional fund raising event was the dispersal of foliage sightseeing maps of Winchendon.

The route skated by Letters encompassed 39 miles, which he covered in three hours. Pledges were made per mile, with other donations made to the Clark in honor of the journey.

The Meadowwood fire department of N.H. who service the major fires in Winchendon, offered the children rides on the truck, with the ten-cent fare being the donation to the memorial.

The CB buffs of Winchendon organized a raffle, with first prize being a new CB set. A sidelight to the raffle was the CB club competition held. First place in this competition went to the club with the most members present, the Black Knights of Fitchburg. All proceeds went to the Clark.

Ernest P. Fletcher, a resident of the town and a member of the center said, "It's the best in town, as a matter of fact it's (the Memorial) the only thing in town."

An added eye-catcher was the location of a 13 foot high replica of a rocking-horse, upon which people could have their picture taken by the photographer from the center, or people could take themselves.

The center organizes various activities for the town to participate in. They include men's basketball leagues, women's volleyball, and recreational swim for the adult members of the town. For the younger people there were instructional classes in skating, tennis, and softball, along with reorganized leagues in hockey, softball.

Black bishop ordained

DETROIT (UPI) — The first black bishop of Michigan's Episcopal church says he plans to do more than feed the souls of Detroiters. He wants to heal the bodies of those living in a city with one of the worst crime and poverty rates in the nation.

Henry Irving Mayson was consecrated a suffragan, or assistant bishop, in ceremonies last weekend at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. He was elected to the post in a special May 22 convention of the 90,000-member Michigan Episcopal church.

He is no stranger to the problems of Detroit.

Bishop Mayson is a member of a city task force on hunger and malnutrition, and a participant in programs dealing with drug abuse, employment, and the needs of the elderly.

He said he will continue to direct his efforts in those directions in the hope of alleviating the problems which eat away at his community — crime, hunger, drug abuse, lack of jobs.

The church can take on special significance in a city setting, he said. He sees it as a focal point not just for feeding the needs of the soul, but for solving the everyday problems of the body.

"It will certainly be my responsibility to relate the church to the community in a realistic way," he said, "and especially to the increasingly larger black community here in the Detroit area."

Ford Co. strike looking bleak entering fourth week

DETROIT (UPI) — Rejection of a tentative three-year contract by large numbers of skilled tradesmen and the inability to resolve local issues appeared yesterday to doom the chances of bringing the month-old strike at the Ford Motor Co. to an early end.

There are only 25,000 skilled workers among the 170,000 UAW members who have been on strike against the No. 2 automaker since midnight, Sept. 14. But a majority of them must approve the contract or the strike continues, no matter how the 145,000 production workers vote.

Production workers are voting in favor of the proposed settlement. Voting began Saturday and will end at 6 p.m. Tuesday. Final results of the ratification vote are expected Tuesday night.

By midday yesterday, skilled tradesmen at four of the seven UAW locals who had released results of their balloting had rejected the pact. That included the giant UAW Local 600 at the Rouge manufacturing complex in suburban Dearborn that employs 7,000 of the skilled workers — electricians, mill-wrights, tool and die makers and equipment repairment.

Neither UAW nor Ford officials were willing to discuss what course of action would be followed if the agreement is rejected.

Skilled tradesmen turned down an agreement with Ford in 1973, but were overruled by their International Executive Board in a move that observers said set up their dissatisfaction this year. Some skilled workers told newsmen they were voting down the agreement just to test the UAW leadership's assurances they would have a veto.

It is doubtful that Ford could resume building cars even if the final tally shows approval.

Egyptian girl reports on smuggling gang

KUWAIT [UPI] — An Egyptian girl who refused to be "lured into the paths of sin" has tipped police about a Cairo gang which smuggled Egyptian girls to Kuwait under forged marriage contracts, local press reports said yesterday.

The girl, identified only as Shahinda, spilled out her story when her husband accused her of bigamy.

Her revelations led to the arrest in Kuwait of Jamil Mustafa Nimeh, the Lebanese leader of the gang, his wife, three clerks and a trainee lawyer in Cairo.

The girl, who worked for an advertising agency in Cairo, said Nimeh promised her a "Better job with a better salary" in Kuwait.

Since the Egyptian government forbids women to leave the country without the consent of their husbands, NImeh persuaded her to sign a forged marriage contract — "as a mere formality", she said. Nimeh posed as her husband.

But after her arrival in Kuwait, Shahinda, a university graduate, got married and refused to heed the gang's orders for indulgence in the "dolce vita" of the oil-rich sheikhs.

The enraged gang tried to enlist the husband's help in pressuring the girl. But when the husband got wind of the story, he filed charges of bigamy against Shahinda.

Another version of the story, published by the Kuwait Times, is that Nimeh liked Shahinda and wanted to keep her for himself. His jealous wife immediately informed police, the newspaper said.

It said Shahinda will be extradited to Egypt, probably to testify in court against the gang.

Ford — Carter make use of holiday

[AP] — A major ethnic holiday dominated the campaign movements of President Ford and Jimmy Carter yesterday as they continued a quest for votes among immigrant families and their descendants. Ford, in a published interview, accused his Democratic opponent of "pure demagoguery" in recent campaign attacks.

Each candidate used a special Columbus Day event to attempt to gain favor among predominantly Catholic ethnic blocs of voters, viewed by some observers as a key to winning some populous industrial states from the Northeast to the Midwest.

At a wreath-laying ceremony at a statue of Christopher Columbus outside Washington's Union Station, Ford declared that "the people of the Old World still look to the New World as the champion of human rights. America has been their hope and their help and we will never let them down."

He made no mention in his brief speech of the Eastern European nations which have occupied a central place in recent campaign oratory, following Ford's remark in the debate with Carter last week that they were not dominated by the Soviet Union.

Carter went on to a Columbus Day Mass in Chicago with Mayor Richard J. Daley and various Italian-American political leaders, and was a feature attraction of the city's Columbus Day parade.

Daley gave Carter another ringing endorsement, praising him as a president who would eliminate "leadership without direction" and heard Carter declare that a joint commitment by himself and Democratic leaders could "restore our people's confidence in their own government."

Ford's attack on Carter appeared in the San Francisco Examiner, whose editor, Reg Murphy, interviewed the President in Texas over the weekend. Ford accused the Democratic nominee of impugning his integrity by raising questions about his past campaign finances and relationship with lobbyists.

Carter has demanded that Ford hold a formal news conference to answer questions about a 1973 audit by the Internal Revenue Service which said that in 1972, Ford used money from a home town bank account in Michigan which contained some political contributions to pay for some clothing and a family ski vacation.

The audit report said Ford agreed to count the clothing expenditures as personal income and pay tax on the amount. The audit indicated Ford reimbursed the account for the vacation.

He also said Ford should explain the IRS finding that he got along on $5 or less per week in pocket money during 1972. The IRS accepted Ford's explanation, which was that many expenses were picked up by others.

Carter, while not accusing Ford of any wrongdoing, has criticized long-term federal officials who develop close friendships with lobbyists, as Ford acknowledges having done.

Inmates 'locked in' after racial disturbance

CARSON CITY, Nev. [UPI] — Inmates were locked in their cells yesterday at the racially tense Nevada State Maximum Security Prison where two were killed and 12 injured Sunday in the second outbreak of violence in two weeks.

About 100 whites and 25 blacks were being fed in the dining hall when they began fighting with weapons which included crudely made knives, sticks and metal trays, a prison spokesman said.

Guards quelled the violence in about 10 minutes by lobbing teargas into the hall. By then, two blacks were dead and 11 black convicts and one white convict were injured. Three blacks were hospitalized.

After a night-long investigation and shakedown of the institution, 13 men were identified as ringleaders, Warden Charles Wolff said.

Two weeks ago 36 inmates were injured when blacks attacked whites and Indians. The 400 inmates, about 25 per cent of whom are black, were locked in their cells, and some were just being released after an apparent easing of tensions when the renewed riolence occurred.

"The whites and Indians got the worst of it two weeks ago," said Howard Pyle, officer of the day. "This time, the blacks got the worst of it."

Warden Wolff, who took the job two months ago in the wake of charges of lax security and narcotics traffic at the prison, termed the earlier outbreak a "disturbance, not a riot." But he said the Sunday fighting was a "full-scale riot, even though it was of brief duration."

"I believe this has developed over a long period of time," he said. "We are studying ways of controlling it, perhaps by changing inmate housing, or perhaps moving some to another institution or location. You can count on an extended lockdown."

ROME: Syrian Ambassador to Italy, Faruk El Smaras (C), talks to newsmen yesterday after three Palestinian guerrillas who shot their way into the Syrian Embassy with submachine guns surrendered to police. The gunmen wanted to speak to the ambassador but he was not present. They then told Syrian Labor Attache Yosef Miro they wanted Syria to end its support of anti-Palestinian forces in Lebanon and begin helping the Palestinian-Arab people. (UPI telephoto)

Embassies attacked

ROME [UPI] — Three Arab youths stormed the Syrian embassy with submachine guns blazing yesterday to protest what they called Syrai's "massacre" of Palestinians in Lebanon.

The trio took two hostages but released them unharmed an hour later and surrendered to police. One Syrian diplomat was wounded and four other persons suffered minor injuries.

Three youths lobbed a hand grenade at the Syrian embassy in Islamabad. Pakistan, yesterday in a similar attack. An embassy source said police killed one of the attackers and the other two were arrested.

An embassy consular officer in Rome, Humin Hatem, 45, was shot and seriously wounded in the leg when he jumped from his desk to confront the attackers during the initial assault.

Police identified the attackers as Nabil Hasnen, 25, of Lebanon, Ahmed Ossein, 22, a Palestinian, and Jaad Mohamed, 20, of Syria.

Officers said the three were students and apparently arrived in Italy Saturday.

"They deliberately shot Humin Hatem because they wanted to make us afraid before making their demands," said one of the hostages, embassy labor attache Yosef Miro.

Two other embassy officials were slightly injured when they jumped out of windows. In addition, two Italian employes at the embassy, a messenger and a cleaning woman, were hospitalized for shock.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Search continues for missing teen

WILLIAMSTOWN (AP) — Several dozen volunteer searchers spent the holiday yesterday looking for Cynthia Krizack, 17, a high school honor student and Sunday school teacher reported missing since last Thursday evening.

More than 100 persons searched during the weekend, and many of them continued yesterday.

Her parents reported Miss Krizack, known by the nickname "Rocky", left home to walk to the Williams College Library, police said.

Buildings on the campus and surrounding areas were searched. Scuba divers searched a nearby pond.

Professor testifies for marijuana

HOLLIDAYSBURG, Pa. (UPI) — A Harvard Medical School professor said yesterday the use of marijuana does not cause psychological damage and does not lead to the use of harder drugs or to criminal activity.

Dr. Lester Grinspoon was called to testify at the first day of a scheduled three-day hearing in Blair County on a motion to have Pennsylvania's marijuana law declared unconstitutional.

The motion has been filed by San Francisco attorney Mark Soler, representing about 30 defendants charged with violating the state's marijuana law during drug raids in Blair County last June and July.

Reporter harassed by F.B.I. agents

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. (UPI) — A local newsman yesterday filed formal complaints that he was pushed around by Secret Service agents during a campaign visit by Michael Ford, the president's 26-year old son.

Larry Smith, news director at radio station WTSA, said he was preparing for a prearranged interview with Ford yesterday when agents dragged him forcibly from the room, shoved him against a wall, insulted him, searched his recording equipment and broke a microphone.

Tip O'Neill fund influences votes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. Congress Fund has helped 130 Democrats with $66,500 in contributions to try to win House election contests.

The Massachusetts Democrat is in line to become House speaker next year, and the figures indicate where he is putting efforts to keep or enlarge Democrats' current House control of 286-145.

The money from the current House leader's fund went to 66 of the 79 House Democratic freshmen, 29 Democrats trying to unseat Republicans, and 35 veteran Democrats.

Poll shows Watergate is non-issue

NEW YORK (UPI) — A poll of 1,4/1 voters shows that the Watergate issue is not working for either of the two major presidential candidates, the Harris Survey reported yesterday.

By at 58 to 29 per cent margin, those polled rejected the statement, "The whole Watergate mess was brought on by a Republican Administration, and to avoid such problems in the future it would be better to put a new Democratic adminstration in the White House."

The poll's directors said that the fact that the voters do not regard Watergate as a decisive issue does not mean that they have put the great political scandal behind them.

Ex-Cambodian head in unknown quarters

HONG KONG [AP] — Prince Norodeom Sihanouk, the former Cambodian chief of state ousted by a general's coup in 1970 and returned to his country by victorious Communists last year, has dropped from sight.

Since the 54-year-old prince resigned in April the Communist Khmer Rouge regime has provided no news of his whereabouts.

Most Cambodian watchers in Bangkok and Hong Kong feel Sihanouk and his wife, Princess Monique, are alive but are kept out of sight of the handful of Communist bloc diplomats accredited to the strict Cambodian Communist regime. Phnom Penh radio has not mentioned Sihanouk since he resigned and it announced then he had been granted an $8,000 annual pension.

Letters from friends addressed to him at the Cambodian capital of Phnom Penh are being returned marked "addressee unknown", sources here and in Bangkok claim.

Reports from Phnom Penh are hard to come by. Even Communist diplomats are forbidden to go more than 50 yards from their embassies without a Khmer Rouge escort. A Chinese plane makes one round trip a week from Peking to Phnom Penh, where authorities make it difficult to leave.

One diplomat had to feign illness to get out, a European colleague said.

One version of Sihanouk's Cambodia existence circulating here and in Bangkok is that he lives a monk-like existence and tends his vegetable garden. Some sources say he is living near the royal palace, others believe he is living in Tankhmau, a Phnom Penh suburb, three miles south of the center of the capital. One report said he shaved his head last June.

Sihanouk and his exiled followers journeyed from Peking to Cambodia after it fell to Communist forces on April 17, 1975. A number of those who traveled with the prince later defected to the West, complaining about the forced evacuation of Phnom Penh and Khmer Rouge cruelty.

Mothers-to-be warned about freshwater fish

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Two public interest groups urged yesterday that women who plan to breastfeed their babies be advised against eating freshwater fish since they may contain the toxic chemicals called PCBs.

The Environmental Defense Fund and the Ralph Nader-affiliated Health Research Group said a government panel's conclusion that PCB-contaminated milk is not dangerous was "very misleading" and "failed to adequately deal with the issue."

That conclusion was reached by a special panel of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare at a meeting Sept. 23. The session was called after the Environmental Protection Agency reported finding PCBs in 79 of 80 samples of milk fat from mothers in 11 states.

PCB stands for polychlorinated biphenyls, a family of chemicals widely used for electrical equipment and in other industrial products. They find their way into the air, water and soil and can remain in human fatty tissue for years — as they do in fish.

Scientific information on the effects of breastfeeding with PCB-contaminated milk is very limited, the public interest groups said, and the HEW committee's finding should have reflected that fact.

The HEW panel has recommended studies to determine whether PCBs can cause learning disabilities of hyperactivity.

The health and environmental organizations, in a letter to HEW Secretary David Mathews, proposed that women be advised to follow diets designed to minimize the risk of contamination of their breast milk.

"HEW should recommend that women of childbearing age refrain from eating freshwater fish to minimize the possible exposure to PCBs," the environmental groups said.

Rescued boaters touch ground on football field

HULL [UPI] — A Coast Guard helicopter rescued two Rhode Island men from their capsized boat Sunday and landed them safely in the middle of a football game.

The Coast Guard in Allerton said guardsmen first sighted the overturned boat but couldn't find any passengers.

But the Vecchios had swum about 150 yards to a rock located near the Boston light, where they were spotted by a helicopter carrying three New Jersey people to Quincy. The three persons had been rescued around noon from a drifting rented boat.

Because of the rough weather, a Coast Guard boat was unable to get close enough to rescue the Vecchios from the capsized craft north of Shag's Rock Island and a helicopter was called from Cape Cod.

The helicopter plucked the two men up safely and flew to the Hull High School football field, located on the coast about five miles from Boston. Vecchio and his son were reported shaken up by the ordeal.

A football game was in progress at the time, but the game was stopped and the players cleared from the field while the helicopter landed.

Boston medical aide boasts 'sure cure' for the hiccups

BOSTON [AP] — "I am the only man in the world with a sure cure for the hiccups," says Benjamin Tiso, a 28-year-old senior medical aide at Boston City Hospital.

Tiso's method ffr curing hiccups which he perfected 11 years ago is simple, he says. He uses a common household compound then administers oxygen to help breathing.

From time to time, he gives lectures for doctors.

"You think they could pick it up easily and do it themselves, but no. It's like a batting coach in baseball," he says. You can demonstrate techniques but they don't necessarily rub off on other people.

"I've been called on to cure difficult cases at University Hospital, St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Peter Bent and other medical facilities" in Boston, he says.

He says he cured a Brooklyn man in 45 seconds after nine months of hicupping. A South Ben, Ind. man was relieved in a minute after two years of hiccups, he says.

About half of his subjects during the first five years of his treatment had repeats of the hiccups.

"So I researched, came up with my changes in my methods and during the past five years my record is 195 permanent cures for 195 patients," he says.

Pigs storm town

COVENTRY, R.I. [UPI] — Police have shot to death 10 pigs that had terrorized residents of the Perry Hill neighborhood.

"They have been running through Perry Hill like packs of wild dogs and people are afraid to walk into the woods near their homes for fear of being being attacked by the pigs," Coventry Police Chief Victor R. Pajak said.

The shootings Friday climaxed a feud between residents of Piggy Lane and Warren Picillo, owner of a nearby 400-pig farm adjacent to the lane.

Neighbors had complained for years unpenned sows dug up yards and chased children to protect their piglets, Mrs. George E. Sykes, one of the residents, said yesterday.

Acting with permission of a Superior Court judge, Pajak's men went to the rural area Friday and killed 10 pigs. Picillo nursed three more sows that were wounded, but only one was alive yesterday. He claimed police crossed into his woods to shoot the pigs and pledged to go to court to recover damages.

"The police jumped to the conclusion that they were my pigs," Picillo said. "We have about a half dozen people around here that have pigs. They lost their animals. They don't know where they are and they (the pigs) stay in the woods.

"We wouldn't mind if the police killed the pigs and donated the meat to institutions, like for the elderly," Picillo's wife Selina said. "But the cops are acting like this is World War II and it's nothing more than a pig purge as far as we're concerned."

Most of Picillo's herd are penned. But he admits leaving sows loose because they breed better.

"It's almost like the old West all over again," said Mrs. Sykes. "Fences are the whole thing. Like the cattlemen and the sheepmen.

"A pig is a very dangerous thing if cornered," she said. "If a child should get between a sow and piglets it can be dangerous. Now suppose that you have three or four sows in your yard — each one with 10 or 12 piglets. How can you help but get between them at one time or another?"

Police asked for supervision from the Soceity for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Pajak said.

Animal 'weathervanes' point toward long, snowy winter

[UPI] — Helen Lane knew the August fog meant trouble. Then she saw squirrels in thick fur coats silently gathering nuts — another ill omen. By the time the spiders came marching in, she knew it meant big trouble.

The fog, squirrels and the spiders all are weathervanes for Mrs. Lane, folk weather prophet for the mountain community fo Crab Orchard, Tenn. They all spell trouble.

Other folklore prognosticators — citing anything from the amorous inclinations of deer and the appetites of bears and fish to the color of woolly worms — had similarly dire predictions for much of the rest of the nation.

Mrs. Lane said she counted six fogs during August — two of them heavy, meaning six snows of some significance — two of them real tree benders.

"Corn shucks are real thick this year on sweet corn and the fur on squirrels is thick, too. We could get some humdingers here on this mountain," she said.

Other indicators, she said, included squirrels gathering nuts without chattering, low flying hawks and an abundance of crickets.

But the clincher, she said, is the spiders.

"There are more in the house this year than in the grass. The last time I remember that happening was in 1959, and that winter broke all records in Tennessee. We had six feet of snow during the winter."

Another fog watcher is Ida Callahan, 88, Bakersville, N.C., who told reporters she counted 30 fogs in western North Carolina in August and that means a lot of snow is due.

Geese, gray squirrels and white-tailed wasps soured Richard Crane on the winter's prospects.

Crane, an auctioneer-farmer in New Hampshire's Hillsborough County, says the white-tailed wasps are building their nests high in the trees and raccoons' pelts are thick — both sure signs of a rough winter.

"I expect quite a bit of snow," Crane said. And he's worried about the grey squirrels. He hasn't seen any. They don't hibernate, he said, so it's a mystery where they've gone.

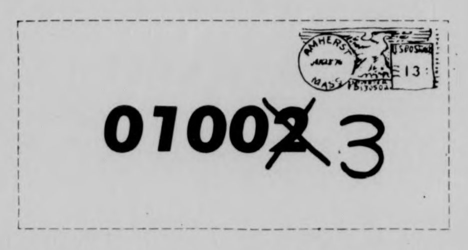
increased amount of mail being handled for UMass by that office.

The proposal had to be considered by the Postmaster General's office in Washington, be cleared sectionally and regionally, sent back to Amherst for detailed information such as the exact amount of student mail, and lastly, given final approval back in Washington.

"This actually will improve handling of UMass mail as it travels all across the state," Mahar said. "A letter mailed from a student's parents in Boston will be handled more efficiently all the way to the dormitory."

"I believe it will also give the University its own identity," he said.



Mahar said the change over to the new zip code will take "quite a while" because of the need of the UMass community to become oriented. One problem he mentioned was the necessity for new Umass envelopes to be ordered with the new zip code printed on them.

Janiee X. Bergamini, 21, a senior majoring in Hotel Restaurant Travel Administration, said she was in favor of the new zip code.

"I don't get very much mail, but the little bit I do get I will probably get faster now," she said.

sufficient amount of faculty teaching it.

"I don't think it's going to have a great impact on them when they are seniors," said Martus.

"What I would like to see is a mandatory freshman composition course and a waiver for students who pass a literacy test proving their writing ability", Martus said.

Martus also said that he would like to see speech as an optional course. "I don't see speech as an integral part of a student's education," said the SGA president.

Martus said that the Faculty Senate is not responding to the problems of the Rhetoric Department and that they are postponing any discussions of the problem.

"Right now, the Rhetoric problem is in limbo because the Faculty Senate keeps on delaying it. This is just another example of the Faculty Senate feeling that we, as students, having the ability to have a say in our education, are encroaching on their power. And by delaying, they are suppressing academic reform, said Martus.

Secretary Burke denied that the Faculty Senate is delaying the rhetoric problem. Burke said that two years ago the rhetoric proposal was given to a committee to investigate the reorganization of the rhetoric department and the rhetoric requirements.

"Their findings," said Burke, "are to be discussed before the entire Faculty Senate some time before the present semester is over."

Pro-lite rhetoric

To the Editor:

David P. Lang's reply to Ms. Sains article on abortion is typical of "pro-life" rhetoric. Sains had commented on the class discrimination implicit in the prohibition of legal abortion since the wealthy retain recourse to illegal but professional services, while the poor woman is forced to carry her fetus to term, or more likely, to resort to a "back street," potentially dangerous abortion.

It is true, (as Lang points out), that this is hardly an earth-shattering revelation; but it is important to emphasize in a situation when medicaid for abortion purposes is to be denied, which means legal abortion becomes unavailable to indigent women. Is Lang's own hypothesis that if "the poor" were to rank according to preference commodities now priced beyond their grasp, that abortion would not head the list, meant to shatter the earth? Who are these poor to whom he refers, and what sex are they? Perhaps he should talk to pregnant, overwhelmed and desperate welfare mothers before he elevates his contention to a fact for our consumption.

No one, he contends, is demanding control over women's bodies. Yet in the next sentence he depicts "women and doctors" as the destroyers of "unborn children," "the most helplesss and defenseless" members of our society, and denounces the 1973 Supreme Court decision. But the denial of the right to eliminate a fetus from their own wombs is exactly what some feminists perceive as an infringement of personal integrity. It is clear, this position involves a proprietory attitude to one's one (female) body. But before Mr. Lang criticizes he should undertake some research into the origins of the vnotion that female bodies are property to be owned, controlled, used and abused. He would find that his own sex played a not insignificant part in the evolution of this perspective. Can he then denounce women for asserting their prior rights?

Similarly the feminist attitude to abortion as Women's Rights to control her own reproductive system may be seen as atomistic and individualistic. But our society is one that promotes atomistic behaviour and deifies individualism. Feminists are only reflecting the dominant values of partriarchal industrial capitalism.

This brings us to another and most important point. Abortion can only be understood in its social context, a fact that Lang ignores in his anxiety to depict women and the medical profession as culpable and murderous. Abortion is a sad affair, potentially dangerous, and unlikely to be thought a pleasant experience even by my heartless sex. I have never known a woman speak lightly of it. But what are our alternatives?

When I see Mr. Lang out there campaigning for decent income security programs; when I hear his voice raised in support of extended opportunities regardless of sex; when I know him as a participant in the childraising process, giving only only cash, but "the strength of his arms and the hours of his life" in this, not always rewarding job; and when his unstinting battle to secure the provision of income guarantees and support services for women and families so that childrearing does not annihilate my sister's emotional and economic potential, is evidenced to me; then I will listen to him.

In the good society abortion would be a rarity. But I suggest, Mr. Lang, you fight to get us closer to that ideal rather than making life more miserable for others now. In our existing sexist, classbound society it seems to me that you and your felows want power without responsibility, which I was taught in my misogynist classes was the prerogative of the harlot throughout the ages.

Records confidentiality maintained

To the Editor:

On October 5, I received a call from a Collegian staff reporter, Jerry Rogers, regarding medical records being stored in other areas of the campus. I did say that I knew of some records that were stored in another building under lock and key. This information was given to me by various staff members at University Health Services who stated the records were packed in "stax-on steel containers, clearly marked, locked and inaccessible."

I did not state or imply that records have left UHS "as recently as two weeks ago." Since my employment in June, no records have left the building to be stored elsewhere.

It is the policy of the UHS to maintain the confidentiality of all health records here. All records are stored in secure areas.

Balloon man falls but won't try again

LISBON, Portugal [UPI] — American adventurer Ed Yost, dunked in the ocean less than 600 miles short of his goal on the European mainland, said yesterday he would not try to become the first man to cross the Atlantic by balloon.

"I was just happy to stay in the air," Yost said in a ship-to-shore radio interview with UPI's Bonn bureau.

"I have no intention of trying to cross the Atlantic again and I have bettered the endurance and distance records."

Yost, 57, fell 580 miles short of a successful crossing.

Scooped from the sea Sunday about 200 miles east of the Portuguese Azores islands by a Persian Gulf-bound West German freighter, Yost was hoping the owners of the ship would allow him to be dropped off in Gibraltar.

The captain of the "Elisabeth Bolton" said the vessel could arrive in Gibraltar about 10:30 a.m. 5:30 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

Meanwhile, the wife of the Sioux Falls, S.D., resident was driving from Lisbon to the British colony on the southern tip of Spain in hopes of joining her husband. She was accompanied by Harry Repak, 36, at Trans World Airlines pilot from Richfield, Conn., who had helped monitor the ballonist's movements throughout his flight.

Charmian Yost flew to the Portuguese capital Sunday, since it was closest to her husband's splashdown point, but decided to go on to Gibraltar by car when she learned he would probably land there.

The balloonist, unharmed and reported in good spirits, said since liftoff Tuesday from Milbridge, Maine, he had a trouble-free flight except for minor problems with cloud cover. He was forced to ditch because he ran out of ballast by dumping it to gain altitude.

"The problem was that the weathermen told me I had to keep climbing higher in order to get favorable winds, but they never came," Yost said.

Instead of getting winds that would carry him east to Europe he got southerly winds.

"Although I could have carried on for another two days, I planned on setting down on Oct. 10," Yost said.

An Americaa Air Force C130 military transport with rescue gear aboard was dispatched from Woodridge, England, to assist in the rescue effort and guided the West German freighter to the spot where Yost splashed down.

The Atlantic project cost the balloonist $100,000 of his own money and took a year and a half to prepare.

His two-ton "Silver Fox" was specially adapted as a catamaran-type sailboat in the event of a watery setdown and its balloon was made of durable nylon fabric with a urethane coating to seal in the helium.

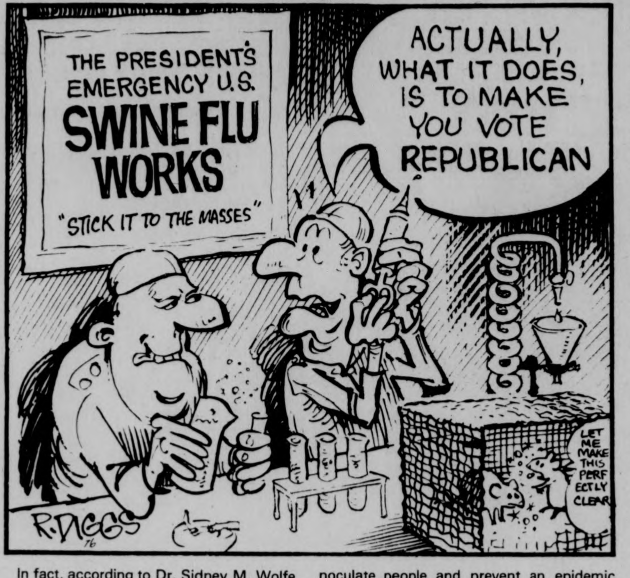
Swine flu and pork barrel politics



THE PRESIDENT'S EMERGENCY U.S. SWINE FLU WORKS
"STICK IT TO THE MASSES"
ACTUALLY, WHAT IT DOES, IS TO MAKE YOU VOTE REPUBLICAN
LET ME MAKE THIS PERFECTLY CLEAR
R.DIGGS '76

Shortly after President Ford lost a primary race to Ronald Reagan last Spring, he bestowed his latest blessing on the American people: mass swine flu shots.

Since then, a lot of people have been wondering if the cure is worse than the disease. The $135 million program, now in its initial stages in Massachusetts of innoculating the entire adult U.S. population within a three month span.

Almost as soon as Ford announced his plan, it came under attack. Medical authorities questioned the effectiveness both of the vaccine and of the immunization program. Insurance companies didn't want to be liable for the countless complications that could arise, ranging from faulty or contaminated vaccine to severe reactions such as high fever and convulsions that could result from even the purest batch.

Various branches of the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare worked overtime convincing the public that the innoculation campaign was a farsighted and necessary step. The Center for Disease Control, which helped identify the virus, and the Division of Biological Standards, which is supposed to monitor the safety and effectiveness of vaccines, provided the scientific brochures.

But when the Ford administration starts talking about taking care of our health, there's reason for suspicion.

Among other things, it has rendered ineffective the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the agency that really could do a serious job of preventing illness and 100,000 on-the-job deaths a year in the U.S. It has refused to increase Medicaid and has cutback many other kinds of social service benefits.

It has, in short, done everything in its power to make preventive medicine inaccessible for most people.

In fact, according to Dr. Sidney M. Wolfe, director of Ralph Nader's Public Citizen's Health Research Group, a worldwide outbreak of swine flu this winter is highly unlikely.

Even if the flu does break out, Dr. Wolfe and others claim that antibiotics are available that can successfully treat the complications that are the most serious effects of the flu, and there would be enough time to innoculate people and prevent an epidemic after the first few cases show up this winter. They suggest that the preventive vaccine be stockpiled (at about 35 cents a dose), and that the expensive vaccination program (as much as $2 per innoculation with administrative costs added) go into effect only when necessary.

Moreover, the effectiveness or the vaccine itself is under scrutiny. In testimony before the House Health Subcommittee, the Nader group claimed that most of the vaccines are of limited use, and that recent tests with swine flu vaccines indicate that the risks outweigh the benefits. Dr. Martin Goldfield, one of the first doctors who identified swine flu, estimates that 15 per cent of all innoculated adults will experience a disabling illness, meaning they will miss work or school.

The insurance industry is maintaining the attitude that also led to last year's crisis in medical malpractice insurance — if the risk is small and it looks like they can make a buck, okay; otherwise, no deal. Their price for participating in the program has been legislation assuring that the government will assume liability for anything that goes wrong (though the Feds can try to collect from the manufacturers if they are proven to be at fault).

It seems that the public will not flock to get shots of a medicine no one wants to insure, to prevent a disease no one is sure exists.

So who is behind the big scare? Some point to the four drug companies manufacturing the vaccine; they are assured millions in unexpected profits. Another obvious candidate is also running for President. What a great way to show the American people Ford really cares.

How are we going to decide how to protect ourselves from this real or imaginary threat? Unfortunately, each of us must seek out medical advice and make our decision on that basis.

The only guidelines are that people with special medical problems particularly a susceptibility to respiratory illnesses, need to be more cautious about all flus.

Reverse oppression

To the Editor:

I write in response to Charlotte Allen's "lesson on female sexuality". Allen argues that woman is the natural species, "in the beginning we were all created female (xx chromosomes) ... male development is a deviation triggered by hormones". This is a facile argument, equating primacy with superiority. We (women) wee first, you men are deviates.

The question may be asked, the first what? Perhaps the first stage, like a caterpillar that preceeds the butterfly. I agree that such an example is a ridiculous metaphor for men and women. Is Allen's argument any less glib or any more consequential? What is first, hence natural, does not matter. It is moot.

Pascal is right to ask "But what is nature? Why is custom not natural? I greatly fear that this nature is in itself only a first custom, as custom is only a second nature". People argue natural laws and first causes for mere speculation, or when they are going to do anyways.

Criticism of Allen's argument serves a good point if it reminds us that the doctrines of male superiority were also unreasonable, were self serving and given by apologists of a fundamentally unjust philosophy. Her editorial is useful as a case study of this in reverse, but in itself is unjust. We should be discarding this line of reasoned superiority with its corresponding oppression rather than continually revising it.

Stephen P. Sheehan

To the Editor:

In reply to Charlotte Allen's article in Wednesday's Collegian, "Custom Made Woman Blues", I'm disappointed. I thought the general attitude among social and political progressives around here was that of the oppressed struggling to join together in some sort of solidarity to do battle against the oppressor — the sexist, racist, ageist, capitalist system under partriarchy. You, on the other hand, seem to be using that highly successful tactic of the oppressor — keep the oppressed at each other's backs — by alienating all males, those in struggle as well as those not. I take issue with two statements:

1.) In reference to, "male development is a deviation triggered by hormones," the deviation does not occur physiologically, nor exclusively to males, but occurs sociologically to both young men and women when, after birth, they are made to be much less than their human potential through a systematic process of exploitation, oppression, domination and the most subtle killer of children, expectation. (Thanks to Su Negrin, Begin At. Start.)

2.) Concerning, "...sexually, the male is put a pale imitation of us.", why do you so dehumanize sexuality by only defining it in terms of physiological, 'capacities', and 'peaks'? What you say is not false but ignores all but the most superficial level of sex.

Also, let's give credit to where credit is due; the book Free and Female where you derived your information. I guess what you're doing is fighting fire with fire, but you're burning alot of struggling, potential allies in the process.

At Mike's bar: Cause or coincidence?

To the Editor:

I am compelled to write this letter, in response to the letter to the editor from the Panhellenic Council of October 8. I feel that they have taken my reference to Greeks out of context.

First off, my article did not say the Greek women present at Mike's bar were checking out the frat guys." Men and women check each other out, which is a common phenomenon. I did in no way write or insinuate that Greeks are the only people who do this.

As for the beer drinking, Greeks were not the only people at the bar that night and it follows that they were not the only one's drinking beer. It is common sense that when people stay at a bar, beer sales go up.

I am well aware of the good things the Greek community works for and have participated in a few activities myselft in the past. I praise your hard work and energies as does most of the community.

My frustration of that particular evening of the first Presidential debate stems from personal hassles I encounter living across the street. I have observed many changes in the bar in the past months. This summer when most students were away, Mike's was a quiet place to go to work, talk and watch TV. Since the start of the semester, more people have been coming in and most of them are Greeks. I understand that this bar has been traditionally a Greek hangout.

It is no longer as easy to go to Mike's for a quiet evening. The noise level on "Greek party nights" not only reverberates across to my house to give one the impression that there is a live band in my living room, but it more importantly disturbs the elderly people who live in the area.

The litter problem has become obnoxious! Since the beginning of the semester and the return of "Greek party night", the surrounding area has become covered with broken glass, beer cups and bottles, articles of clothing and general trash.

Every "Greek party night" results in 2 houses' driveways being blocked so that in the event of an emergency it would be impossible to get out, or in.

The noise level is not limited to music. Fights, screams and hysterical drunken laughter permeate the night air, often until 2 a.m., after the bar has closed.

That evening of the Presidential Debate, a friend of mine had the misfortune of being grabbed and hassled by a stranger, who was a Greek. When she protested his actions, he said he had the right to do whatever he pleased to her and poured a beer on her head. This man had the misfortune of grabbing the wrong ass — she proceeded to throw a beer on him.

The above named problems are curious to me, as they have just come into light since the Greeks have frequented there. Cause or coincidence?

A worthy hero

If ever I had a childhood hero, it must have been Ralph Nader. At that time Nader seemed to represent all the things Americans were supposed to be hardworking, self-sacrificing, and interested in correcting various social ills. And thus despite the fact that I no longer revere the man as I once might have, I still take advantage of every opportunity to hear him speak, I still take advantage of every opportunity to hear him speak, and I still cringe a little with anger when I read of those who would have him discredited and-or disgraced.

Nader is the Goliath-killer. He is the man who faced GM with a few dedicated staffers and a large degree, and demanded that our cars be safe. He gave Americans a few new thoughts to contemplate; consumer advocacy, consumers' rights, and consumers movement. And though he is often criticized for his obsession with the legal process by those who would seek more profound change outside of it, one need only compare his rate of success with that of his critics to justify his methods.

Nader's most recent crusade has been against nuclear power an as energy source. At first I was skeptical of the effort — most statistics available in the press showed the safety of nuclear plants to be good, if not infallible. Perhaps Nader's time would be better spent continuing his attack on the auto industry, I thought.

But the legitimacy of Nader's gripe became quite clear. Regardless of the safety question there remains the blatant fact that the public has been kept in the dark about nuclear power and the alternatives to it. Decision-making on investment in and location of reactors as well as regulation of their safety is largely in the hands of those with the greatest interest in nuclear power. And perhaps more distressing is the way in which studies on and information about nuke safety have been successfully controlled by the same interests.

Nader spoke on this subject at last week's Nuke Teach-in, and his message was clear. We cannot isolate the anti-nuke effort as a response to an unusual or freakish industry industry. Rather, the nuke stuggle must become a model for our dealing with the present economic system. Nader noted that the nuclear power industry is not atypical — that consumer and broadscale economic decisions in this country are made for use by mammoth corporate interests and banks. It is the same frightening observation that so many others are making these days.

Nader's solution is fairly simple — bring the deomcratic process back into the economic system. He spoke of a citizens' movement; an effort on the part of the people to get back the power that has so gradually and subtly been usurped from them. He never actually told the large audience what the final product of this movement might be called, but I would label it "socialism", for lack of a better term.

Nader is not a revolutionary as such — he did not mention a working class overtaking the government and-or economy, and his speech was neither very romantic nor very rhetorical. Nader was addressing "citizens", those plain old Americans who pay taxes and buy things, including electricity. He talked of the Constitution and corporate charters, of rights and freedoms.

Despite all this, Nader's movement seems one of the few plans for radical change that is getting anywhere in this country. I have not real objections to communist parties and revoluntionary brigades and their like except that their absurd "idealism" leads nowhere. Only people like Nader and his co-workers, with their teach-ins that educate rather than dictate, and activate rather than alienate — will lead America to an equitable and democratic way of life.

Porno and censorship

By PAUL SHEPARD

Editor's note: The following is the first in a two-part series on the subject of pornography and censorship. The second part will appear in tomorrow's Collegian.

The issue of censorship has been raised on this campus in connection with Baroque Enterprises and the showing of "pornographic" films. In the continuing debate over the subject it has become evident that there is more than minimal support for some form of censorship on campus and in society at large. Since the implications of a policy of censorship are so momentous and extend far beyond the limits of the campus, I believe the issues raised deserve examination in some detail.

The debate actually concerns itself with two fairly distinct issues. The first issue, and the one to receive the most attention thus far, concerns the problem of pornography. The second issue, perhaps more deserving of attention, is whether or not censorship is a solution to that problem.

Firstly, what constitutes the problem of pornography? It is said to be offensive but that is hardly grounds for consorship. No one advocates that all things offensive should be censored. But pornography is also said to be exploitive. In her Collegian column Charlotte Allen charges that "pornography exploits men's and women's bodies for the sole purpose of making money." That, however, is a charge that can also be leveled at nearly any corporation. Shall the censor's power extend beyond the printed or visual media to corporate policies as well? Shall we ban the portrayal of exploitive relationships without banning actual exploitive relationships as well? What are to be the limits of the censor's power, if any? Do we confine that power to sexually explicit material? Once instituted , how is censorship to be confined at all?

It should be remembered that to submit to censorship is to admit that we are incapable of judging for ourselves what is good for us. If we are willing to surrender judgment in this most personal area of sex, how are we to claim better judgment in some other area such as determining what ought to be the limits of censorship? Of course I suspect that the advocates of censorship do not envision themselves as surrendering power at all. I rather suspect that they envision others as surrendering power to them.

Perhaps the most damning indictment of pornography is the charge that it causes or encourages violent criminal behavior. Ms. Allen suggests that "statistics prove that the recent proliferation of porno is directly related to the increasing number of rapes and assaults upon women." However, there are also statistics to show that a rise in the human birth rate is related to an increase in the stork population of certain areas. We do not therefore conclude that storks bring babies.

James Nollet, in his column, tells us that "a demented sailor shot up a bar full of pimps and prostitutes after having seen Taxi Driver, a movie about a psychotic New York cabbie who performed a similar act." Are we to infer that merely viewing the movie caused this sailor's actions? Was the sailor demented before he saw the movie or was he demented as a result of seeing the movie?

It is entirely possible that some persons have committed crimes after viewing sexually explicit films. It is also probable that some persons have committed crimes after seeing the evening news. It is also true that the vast majority of persons do not commit crimes after watching such material. Are we to institute an entire system of censorship because someone somewhere committed a crime after viewing a movie?

It is not clear to me how a film is thought to casue behavior. We are asked to believe that the majority of us are such monkeys as to be compelled to mimic whatever behavior we see on a screen. Ms. Allen asserts that "porno influences the ways in which people think about each other and consequently, act." Mr. Nollet suggests that pornography can "compel some men to attempt living up to a dominant, macho ideal, and some women to accept it as a norm." If it is true that we are actually compelled, however mysteriously, to imitate whatever we see on a screen then the conclusion is obvious. We must allow only approved behavior to be seen. This will involve no only censorship but propaganda and indoctrination as well. We must ban nearly all existent films and T.V. programming. The evening news must be drastically revised to show only approved behavior.

What about the printed media? Are we similarly affected by the printed word? If so, then we must destroy most of the literature of the past and replace it with officially approved descriptions of good behavior. And what about theater? Are we to see only morality plays? Or painting and sculpture? Must we not logically extend our censorship to the arts and use them to encourage only officially approved behavior? If this sounds extreme it is because censorship is extreme. There are no logical limits to censorship.

If it is true that we are somehow compelled or encouraged to imitate what we see on a screen then I have a practical suggestion to make. I suggest that Albert Sparks and Baroque Enterprises be funded by Southwest to produce a sexually explicit movie showing persons engaged in making gentle, caring, tender love and otherwise relating in non-sexist, non-oppressive ways. If the only objection to showing sexually explicit films on campus is that they depict and therefore encourage sexist and oppressive attitudes then it is only logical to encourage better attitudes in a film which shows sex in a more enlightened and satisfying way. On what logical grounds could anyone object unless all sex is inherently and hopelessly sexist and oppressive. In which case I suggest that we all give up.

Getting off the rocker

We live in a strange environment. A strangeness that is an integral part of the life we have chosen for ourselves. Look around you. What do you see? You see people of all social classes (more of some than others), race, sex, and sexual perference. But what you don't see in this unnatural system is a lot of old people. Oh, you see professors and University employees with grey hair. You see the artists and natives of the community in the center of town. But how many old people have you spent time with in the recent past? How many old people do you talk to, sounding out their views on topics you are having trouble with?

For a lot of older peoole, your lack of them in your lives has a very bad effect. They feel unwanted; useless baggage in a world that seems to move a lot faster than it used to. But still, there are others who go on doing what they have been doing all their lifes — living it to the fullest. Some of them have formed groups and make apoint of being useful. If you watch TV, you must have seen the commercials sponsored and put together by the Society for Retired Persons. They are only one of many groups that are actively taking part in your life.

What do you want for yourself when you get old? Will you die before you "become a burdon to those close to you" or will you linger in a nursing home bed, put away from those who cannot bear to see you pain.

We have made old age something to fear in our culture. There are rosy dreams of marrying and growing old together, sharing the golden years with the children all grown. But these are not realistic dreams.

You will grow old, starve on Social Security "benefits," and feel like you leech everytime you use those medicaid "benefits." Your children will think of excuses not to see you. "Oh, Mom, it's so far and the kids aren't really old enough to travel." You will die in a strange hospital bed, not in our own, because that is the way things are done these days. And most likely you will die alone.

But for now, while you are young and in the "carefree year," that's something you can ignore. It seems such a long way off. But now is the only time you have to change the way older people are treated before you become one of them.

look at it this way; if you teach yourself not to respect the experience that comes with age, you will teach this to the children around you. And they, in turn, will find ways of not thinking about you. And that doesn't look so good. However, if you make it a point to learn about your grandparents and their peers, you will be enriching yourself as you change the cultural pattern.

But you say that it is such a pain to hear them nag and complain about the way things are, and you really don't have the time.

Maybe you're right. But maybe, if you spent some time with these people, who are now non-people, and respect them and show them your love, they will have so much less to complain about and gain back some of the self respect we have stripped them of. It will be hard thing. I know this and you know this. But I think it will be a good thing, all the way around.

You don't get much of a chance to hang around the Senior Set, but there must be an answer somewhere. Think about it. You have plenty of time. Now. There is so much we are missing.

Saxe jury attempts to break deadlock

BOSTON [UPI] — Formal deliberations resume today in an effort to break a deadlock among the jurors on the Susan Saxe armed robbery-felony murder trial.

After a six-hour session Saturday, Superior Court Chief Justice Walter H. McLaughlin sent the six-man, six-woman group back to its hotel, giving it a two-day weekend away from the case.

There were no indications the panel was any closer to a verdict in the case than it was at noon Thursday when it was given the case with McLaughlin's advice: "Guilty, or not guilty. It is as simple as that."

Ms. Saxe, 27, a Brandeis University honors graduate, faces two counts of armed robbery for allegedly taking part with four other persons in the 1970 theft of $26,585 from the Brighton branch of the State Street Bank and Trust Co.

She also faces a felony murder charge because Patrolman Walter A. Schroeder was shot by William A. "Lefty" Gilday, one of the participants. Schroeder died the next day.

Ms. Saxe faces five years to life on each of the robbery counts and life without parole for the murder charge.

Speculation about cause of the deadlock revolves around the jury's understanding of the felony murder statute. Also at issue are the question of "reasonable doubt" and the credibility of the state's two star witnesses — Robert J. Valeri and Michael S. Fleisher. Both are admitted accomplices who secured reduced sentences in exchange for their testimony against Gilday and Ms. Saxe.

McLaughlin told the jury it could not convict Ms. Saxe of murder if it ruled the holdup had been completed, and the robbers had safely escaped when Gilday shot Schroeder. Testimony has set the time between the escape and the shootings between 30 seconds and five minutes.

McLaughlin twice has reiterated his charge to the jury, both times in response to specific questions jurors to specific questions jurors have asked concerning Valeri and Fleisher.

Valeri, who pleaded guilty to armed robbery and manslaughter, is the only witness who said Ms. Saxe was in the bank. None of the three bank employes, who were three to five feet away from where Ms. Saxe allegedly guarded them with a .30 caliber carbine, could identify her. A photograph showing a heavy set woman in the bank moments before it was robbed is blurred and fuzzy.

Fleisher said he was present the night before the robbery when Ms. Saxe, Valeri, Gilday, Stanley R. Bond and Katherine Ann Power allegedly planned the robbery. Bond died in an explosion at Walpole State Prison and Ms. Power is still being sought.

Lawmakers back; look to finish by end of week

BOSTON [UPI] — Law makers return to Beacon Hill today after a four-day Columbus Day weekend in hopes of concluding the nine-month long 1976 session by the end of the week.

But with several major bills still awaiting action, legislative leaders say it is possible the target adjournment date of next Saturday may not be met and the legislature may have to recess or meet informally to allow legislators to campaign for the Nov. 2 election.

Topping the list of items unresolved are three budget bills with a combined price tag of nearly $180 million as well as several items on the priority list of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The main budget bill, a $102.3 million capital outlay or construction budget, is scheduled to be debated in the House today.

The package, worked out by a six-man, House-Senate conference committee, includes funding for more than 50 separate projects including $7 million for renovations of the Gloucester Fish Pier and $15 million for renovation and construction of mental health facilities.

More than $30 million is included for environmental projects including $6 million to reimburse cities and towns for the state share of land bought for conservation.

Action on the capital outlay bill was delayed late last week when House Republicans demanded more time to review the package.

The second budget, a $24.2 million supplementary package, is headed for a House-Senate conference committee where, among other things, a $10,000 pay hike for the governor may be dropped.

Pay raises for the five other constitutional officers are expected to be retained.

MATHEMATICS AND LANGUAGE MAJORS . . .

Think about your future.

THE PQT COULD BE THE KEY TO YOUR FUTURE.

If you are receiving a degree in Mathematics or Language before September 1977, the National Security Agency's Professional Qualification Test (PQT) can be the key to a rewarding career.

You must register by November 6 in order to take the PQT on campus—it will not be given again during the school year. By scoring well on this test, you will qualify for an employment interview. During the interview, an NSA representative will discuss the role you might play in furthering this country's communications security or in producing vital intelligence information.

The PQT helps to measure your aptitude for career areas such as:

LANGUAGES—Foreign languages are valuable tools for research, analysis, and documentation projects. Advanced training in your primary language or perhaps a new language can be expected.

COMMUNICATIONS—Developing and testing logical designs for global communications is a unique pursuit. It follows that your training programs in this area will be both extensive and esoteric.

PROGRAMMING—Our vast communications analysis projects could not be effectively managed without the latest computer hardware/software and people who know how to use them.

PICK UP A PQT BULLETIN at your college placement office. It contains a registration form which you must mail prior to November 6 in order to take the test on November 20.

Electronic Engineering, Computer Science, Slavic, Mid-Eastern and Asian language majors may interview without taking the PQT.

Citizenship is required.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Graphic exhibit to be shown at State House

Depicting this nation's battle for freedom, a graphic "Story of the Revolution" may be viewed at Doric Hall in the State House starting today.

A series of original Currier & Ives lithographs issued during 1876 by the famed American artists will be on exhibition through October 28 in an offering from the Travelers Insurance Company collection.

Governor Michael S. Dukakis will formally open the display at noon while extending thanks of the Commonwealth to Travelers Senior V.P. Frank E. Walton. Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission legislative chairmen Sen. Chester G. Atkins (D-Harvard) and Rep. Vincent J. Piro (D-Somerville), and MBC Exec. Director Susan E. Schruth will participate in the formal opening.

The exhibit is open free of charge to the public between 10 and 4 p.m. daily through October 28.

Tickets now on sale for Cole concert

Tickets go on sale today for the Natalie Cole concert which will be held at 8 p.m. Oct. 26 in the Fine Arts Center.

The tickets will be sold at the Fine Arts Box Office for $2,$3, and $4 for students and $4,$5, and $6 for non-students.

Tickets will also be available at all Ticketron outlet box offices.

First communion class to commence today

First Communion classes will begin tomorrow at the Newman Center, 472 North, Pleasant Street at 2 p.m. Classes are open for first grade children of students, faculty and staff.

Persons desiring further information should call 549-0300.

Open meetings to select new professor

Tomorrow and Thursday the Bilingual Bicultural Education Search Committee will be interviewing Ms. Daisy de Jesus for a faculty position in the School of Education.

The University community is invited to attend the open meetings to be held on Wednesday night at a meeting of AHORA, Campus Center 804, or at the Bilingual Collegiate Program, 5th floor Goodell Library if there is no AHORA meeting, and from 9-11 on Thursday in Room 128, School of Education.

Jobs available for student organizers

The Student Organizing Project (SOP) presently has available both work-study and non-work-study jobs for student staff to work as organizers during the coming year.

SOP exists as a resource, research, and organizing center for student unionization efforts on campus. These efforts include a variety of activities, all designed to advance collective welfare as students.

Special emphasis this year will be on facilitating the formation and development of union councils in dorms, departments, and community interest areas. The SOP also assists groups working to increase students' power and to improve educational and living experience at UMass through various other means.

Student staff members of the Student Organizing Project each take organizing responsibility for a specific group of dorms or departments, coordinating the SOP's efforts to assist and resource councils in these respective area. Emphasis in hiring is placed on initiative, eagerness to learn, and a willingness to take responsibility.

Throughout the year, students will participate with full-time staff in skills-sharing workshops designed to offer training in methodologies and skills related to community and institutional organizing. We thereby seek to insure that each person's experience with the project is educational as well as productive.

Third World and women applicants are particularly encouraged.

For more information, contact: The Student Organizing Project, Student Union Bldg. No. 426, 545-2415

Swiss University professor to lecture

Doctor Michael Douglas, of the University of Basal, Switzerland, will speak on "The Genetics and Biochemistry of Yeast Membrane Proteins" today at 4 p.m. in room 203 Graduate Research Center Tower A.

Coffee will be served at 3:45. The UMass Department of Biochemistry is sponsoring Douglas' talk.

Gethers-Brown group to hold meeting

Wednesday there will be a meeting of the Earl Brown-Craemen Gethers Defense Committee at 7:30 p.m. The meeting will be held on the second floor of New Africa House.

The meeting will emphasize the different strategies that will be used to free Craemen and Earl.

The community is invited to attend this important meeting.

University Ensemble to host Open House

The annual Gala Theater Open House, presented by the University Ensemble Theater, Department of Theater, will be held tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. in the Curtain Theater of the Fine Arts Center.

All students — theater majors and minors, and anyone who loves and is interested in theater — are invited to attend an afternoon of entertainment, refreshments, and information about the University Ensemble Theater's 1976-77 season and how students can get involved.

The colorful set for the current production "What the Butler Saw" will be the backdrop for the afternoon's events. The faculty, staff, and students of the Department of Theater are pooling their resources to provide those attending the Open House exciting ideas on how to participate in the most cooperative of the cooperative arts.

A scene from the Joe Orton frantic farce "What the Butler Saw" will be performed, following the presentation of information on the shows for the year, upcoming auditions, and department programs. The faculty and staff will be introduced.

Refreshments will be served in the lobby of The Curtain, and the department staff will be available to answer questions and give further information.

Applications being taken for exchange

Scandinavian Seminar is now accepting applications for its study abroad program in Denmark, Finland, Norway, or Sweden for the academic year 1977-78. This living-and-learning experience is designed for college students, graduates and other adults who want to become part of another culture while acquiring a second language.

An initial 3 weeks language course, followed by a family stay whenever possible, will give the student opportunity to practice the language on a daily basis and to share in the life of the community. For the major part of the year the student is separated from his fellow American students, living and studying among Scandinavians at a "People's College" (residential school for continuing adult education) or some other specialized institution.

All Seminar students participate in the Introductory, Midyear and Final Sessions, where matters related to their studies, experiences and individual progress are reviewed and discussed. The focus of the Scandinavian Seminar program is an Independent Study Project in the student's own field of interest. An increasing number of American colleges and universities are giving full or partial credit for the Seminar year.

The fee, covering tuition, room, board, one-way group transportation from New York and all course-connected travels in Scandinavia is $3,800. A limited number of scholarship loans are available.

For further information write to Scandinavian Seminar, 100 East 85th Street, New York, N.Y. 10028.

News program run by Teens

Ralph Erenzo of the Children's Theater of Maine is making plans for a television news program would be run entirely by teenagers.

Public Cable Co., which serves 9,000 homes in Portland and South Portland, has agreed to provide facilities and show the program, if Erenzo comes up with the $7,000 he says he needs to pay three staff members. He has applied for grants.

Erenzo, of Scarborough, says there are similar programs in the United States and abroad, but none entirely produced, written and filmed by young people.

"We'll be there to help, not to run the thing," Erenzo says of himself as producer-director and two adult production assistants.

Eighth and ninth graders would participate in the project, which would involve spot news — predominantly local — background stories, sports, weather and editorials.

"Because the kids will be writing and broadcasting the news, they'll be doing it in a way their peers can easily understand," Erenzo said. "And you shouldn't think that because kids will be doing it here won't be anything more than kids' news. They'll cover whatever is newsworthy."

The Light of Truth

By KIT WALKER

Today it's a Gemini moon, and still a Libra sun. These are both air signs, giving us a boost to be social today, and to relate on a mental-spiritual level. At 4:40 this morning the moon passed the middle of the sun's 8th house in a dark and difficult sesquiquadrate. This is a time when our desire-to-get is tempered by the realization that true sharing involves giving first.

So if we felt depressed last night, or a little backwards in the head, the energy is there to open up and pull ourselves out of it this morning through communication in our relationships. Our minds have much more power than we may give them credit for; and we can either let that power control us, or we can put it to good use.

Mercury rules Gemini and the mind. Mercury is the spirit in the bottle, like the genie in Aladdin's lamp. He will be a faithful servant if we don't allow him to trick us into letting him escape, but we let our minds drag us around every which-where, we become the slave. So remember; our minds only go so far, and there is so much more beyond its outer limits — and that is a space free from tension. All tensions and conflicts are created by our dualistic minds, and in order to rise above it, all we need to do is part the curtains of either-or, and enjoy the spaces of nothing between our racing thoughts.

Tonight the moon will oppose Neptune (compassion) in Sagittarius (Wisdom) and trine Pluto in Libra, between 8:15 and 8:30. This will be a favorable time to communicate with those close to us, if we can bring ourselves out of our armor-plated fear, and sense our spiritual brotherhood with each other. Pluto is the transformer, who scorches our souls in an attempt to bring out the Light that's embedded in the darkness. Pluto is the fear that keeps us running from our shadow as if we could get away from it.

Pluto is in Libra, the sign of relationship. It is telling us that old ways of relating will no longer work, by forcing us into certain karmic stalemates. If you feel like a hand has grabbed you by the shoulder and is making you face certain perhaps unpleasant issues, chances are it's Pluto at work. He goes deep into our unconscious and brings up some frightening creatures. But these creatures, like everything else, are nothing but a play of shadows that vanish when the sun comes out.

If you feel enveloped in darkness, and beset at every turn by horrid little tricksters; kindle the Fire! The monsters shy away from Light, because it negates their existence — so don't bother to try to fight them — darkness came before light, and is always there when the lights go out. Rather light your torch, and carry it with you always. The light of Truth penetrates into the darkest corners, and reveals the most fearful of demons to be nothing but fleeting shapes.

Bradshaw lost for two weeks; Bartkowski lost for season

PITTSBURGH [UPI] — Pittsburgh Steelers' coach Chuck Noll said yesterday that Terry Bradshaw will be lost for two to three weeks and indicated he is in the market for another quarterback.

Bradshaw remained hospitalized, recovering from injuries suffered in Pittsburgh's loss to Cleveland Sunday.

Before the season began, Noll gambled, first cutting Joe Gilliam and then veteran backup quarterback Terry Hanratty. The decision has come back to haunt Noll.

He said Bradshaw will be back in "two to three" weeks and that leaves the Steelers with only rookie quarterback Mike Kruczek of Boston College.

Bradshaw suffered what were reported to be minor neck and back injuries when sacked by Cleveland defensive end "Turkey Joe" Jones in the Steelers' 18-16 loss.

"He has had a lot of trauma from being dropped right on his neck," explained Noll. "The prognosis is much better than we originally thought. The trauma was in his neck, which scared the hell out of everyone for awhile, but it doesn't look like there's any permanent damage."

Until Bradshaw is well enough to return to battle, Kruczek is the most likely candidate to start.

"I was encouraged very much with Mike," Noll said. "He had two big plays — the pass to (Lynn) Swann on the scramble and, of course, when he ran for the touchdown."

Meanwhile the Atlanta Falcons received a stunning blow to their already bleak prospects Monday when they learned they've lost quarterback Steve Bartowski for the remainder of the season.

Bartkowski injured his right knee Sunday, late in the second period of a 30-0 loss at New Orleans, when he was sacked by Saints' defensive end Andy Dorris. As Dorris was pulling him down by his face mask, another Saint landed on his leg.

"Steve is in surgery, he's having a ligament tightened," Haggard Falcons' coach Marion Campbell reported late Monday morning.

Campbell, rumored to be on the way out himself now that the Falcons are 1-4 and struggling, said that was a personal assessment. "The doctors said an operation of that sort, while it is not considered major surgery, usually means about eight weeks convalescence. I don't see how he can come back this season.

Falcons dump coach

ATLANTA [UPI] — The Atlanta Falcons fired head coach Marion Campbell yesterday, a few hours after learning that starting quarterback Steve Bartkowski was lost for the remainder of the season, and turned the task of reviving the faltering NFL team over to general manager Pat Peppler.

Peppler, who has never coached in the pro ranks and did his last on-the-field coaching as an assistant at Wake Forest 14 years ago, made it clear that he was only filling in for the remaining nine games of the season.

"I will wear the hats of head coach and general manager for the balance of the season," Peppler said. "At the conclusion of the schedule, I expect to return to the fulltime role of general manager with the responsibility at that point of assisting the new 1977 coaching staff in building the Falcons' fortunes on the football field."

The 54-year-old Peppler, who previously worked in the front offices of the Green Bay Packers and the Miami Dolphins before joining the Falcons 20 months ago, takes over a team which sank to a 1-4 record after Sunday's 30-0 loss at New Orleans, and lost its No. 1 quarterback in the process.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, October 12 — Born today, you are inclined to be self-conscious, so much so that you often will not even attempt to accomplish a task or to attain a goal for fear of failing in it. Your understanding of your own behavior in this regard makes it possible for you to overcome your negative impulses in favor of your positive ones. Thus in the face of the most fearsome inability to act, you ultimately will take action -- when you are ready, when your understaning is complete and your ability to cope with your fears highly developed. This may take years; this may, indeed, not come to pass until you are well into your middle years. But in the end, you will know yourself and you will win out over your own nature.

Not one to succumb to flattery, you know yourself too well to think that the good opinion of others must be correct when weighed against what may well be a poor opinion of yourself. Although you are not an original person insofar as your work is concerned, you are one who appreciates originality, who chooses the singular over the common, the one-of-a-kind over the mass-produced. Others often bring their original work to you, whether it be in the form of an idea or an actual object of a material nature. You always do your best to find some outlet, some commercially feasible plan of action for such work.

A determined person, you little understand those who are not resolute in their own ambition.

Wednesday, October 13

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Any Libra who is a student of human nature will be able to win laurels before day's end. Don't turn others against you unwittingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Unbounded enthusiasm may not be quite the right road to take if you are after success by day's end. Try a little careful consideration.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The adversity of another may be the good fortune you have been waiting for. Fate plays an ironic trick on both of you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — So long as your aspirations remain well in hand, you are not likely to go overboard to your own detriment. Control your ambition.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Trifles cause more upset than they are worth this morning. Make yourself available to one in difficulty.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Sympathy may be all that you can offer another; if so, offer it willingly and give it time enough to work before paasing judgment.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Your interest in another's personal affairs may cause you more than a little embarrassment today. You would do well to remain silent.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — What you lack in foresight you make up in courage and determination today. Don't be afraid to blow your own horn in the afternoon.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your exceptional taste should keep you from making the kind of social blunder that leads to personal loss and regret. Think twice!

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You are a person of high temperament; employ it to your advantage today. You need not take a single step backward at this time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Conditions favor a new friendship. Don't be afraid to offer your hand to another in need of help. Be of good cheer during evening hours.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Unless you can fulfill the promise of a matchmaker, you would do well to mind your own business rather than another's when it comes to romance.

Rose hints he may seek trade as contract negotiations stall

CINCINNATI [AP] — Pete Rose, Cincinnati's 10-time All-Star, is unhappy with preliminary salary negotiations with the Reds and has told close friends he might ask to be traded to the Philadelphia Phillies, The Associated Press learned Monday.

Such a shocking trade of the Cincinnati fans' favorite player and one of baseball's biggest drawing cards would send the 35-year-old third baseman-outfielder to the team which he has tormented most both during the season and the current National League playoffs.

A source close to Rose said the Cincinnati firebrand is tired of the club brass telling him by their contrast offer that he is just a singles hitter and not worth the kind of money they are paying sluggers Johnny Bench and Joe Morgan.

Bench and Morgan, reportedly making $250,000 a year, are the two highest paid players on the defending world champions.

The Reds have reportedly offered him $200,000 a year for a two-year contract. Bench is the only Cincinnati player to ever receive a multi-year contract.

Rose is currently making an estimated $190,000 a year and is said to be seeking a two year contract worth $500,000.

Peter Rose may be leading the Cincinnati Reds to another world championship. However, off the field contract negotiations have stalled, and it's rumored he may ask to be traded at the end of the season. (UPI)

Glory halts Pats?

FOXBORO, Mass. [UPI] — National attention seems to affect the New England Patriots like a pepperoni pizza before bedtime.

For the second time in three years, both major news magazines flocked to Pontiac Stadium in Michigan Sunday to glorify the accomplishments of the Patriots. And for the second time, the Patriots responded by losing.

In 1974, Jim Plunkett's picture was suppose to appear on the cover of the National Publications. But a string of six losses in seven games caused the two magazines to cancel their plans after stories already had been written.

The cover boy this time was to be Steve Grogan, who led the Patriots to stunning wins over Miami, Pittsburgh and Oakland. But Grogan threw five interceptions Sunday as the Lions upset New England, 30-10.

"A good team bounces back after a loss like this," Grogan said. "If we're a good team, we'll come back and win the next game."

"It's one thing to win the big games," said Veteran Safety Bob Howard. "But if we want to make the playoffs, we have to win the games we're suppose to win and that includes the Jets."

The Patriots meet theNew York Jets next Monday night in a nationally-televised game.

New England came away from the Detroit loss in good health and are in better shape than in 1974 when their season turned around after a rash of injuries struck.

"Well, all we can do now is go back to practice and start concentrating on our own division," said fullback Sam Cunningham, one of the many casualties

"Well, all we can do now is go back to practice and start concentrating on our own division," said fullback Sam Cunningham, one of the many casualties of the 1974 campaign. "You don't want to have a bad game, but you can't afford two in a row."

The Patriots have beaten the Jets just once in five games at Schaefer stadium and have lost the past four home games to Joe Namath and crew. In the past nine games with the Jets, New England has lost eight times.

Stickers split weekend pair

By JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

Cheryl Meliomes scored two goals in two games, enabling the UMass women's field hockey team to split a pair of games played over the holiday weekend.

Yesterday, the team travelled to Hartford to take on the University of Connecticut. The trip was well worth the Minutewomen's while, as they snapped a three game losing streak, by downing the Huskies 2-1.

"Today we put it together for 70 minutes", commented Coach Judith Davidson after the victory.

UMass drew first blood in the opening half with a goal by Sue Kibling, and took a halftime lead to the locker room for the fourth staight game. However, this time the Minutewomen held on to the lead. After the Huskies tied the game at 1-1, on a breakawy goal midway through the second half, a goal by Cheryl Meliones late in the second half gave the stickers from UMass the victory.

On Friday, however, the Minutewomen suffered defeat for the third consecutive time, losing a close one to Cortland State.

"We were the stronger teaa in the first half", Davidson said, "But in the second half we came out flat."

In that first half, UMass scored twice, one by Meliones, and the other by Cindy Hartstone. But for the third straight time the Minutewomen suffered te first half jinx, as Cortland scored twice in the second half to take the game, 3-2.

"they didn't have to work hard for their goals", commented Davidson, "They weren't hard shots."

After the game the team held a meeting to discuss the problems it was having. According to Coach Davidson, "the meeting was designed to bring us together."

At the meeting players aired their views on the team's problems. Coach Davidson felt the meeting had positive results, and was glad it took place.

STICK SHIFTS...Judy Kennedy re-injured her back during pre-game warmups yesterday. She will see UMass athletic physician Dr. Snook, and will be out indefinitely...The J.V. stickers whitewashed UConn 4-0...The next varsity match will be this Wednesday, when the Minutewomen travel to Bridgewater.

Women poloists debut today

By PENNY NOYES

The women's Water Polo Club members open their season with a trip to Boston today. To help cut down on travel xpenses the club has scheduled a double header with Wellesley at 4:30 P.M. and with Boston College at 8:00 p.m., which will call for an amazing amount of endurance.

The starting squad will include Debbi Hoxsie, Penny Noyes, Adrienne Feddy, Nancy Campbell, and Alix Denhartog. Newcomers, Becca Reggio and Chris Johnson will also be starters for the team. With exams and papers due, several club members are uaable to attend, which will leave those seven players in the water, without subs, throughout both games. Therefore the team strategy will have to be taking it fairly easy in the Wellesley game, as the UMass women defeated them 19-1 last spring, and saving energy for the BC game, which is sure to provide much stiffer competition.

As far as the men go, the MIT tourney a week ago awarded them third place. In their first game they were efeated by Bowdoin, 9-8, but came back the next day to win their match with Trinity. This win put them in the pool with URI, who had earlier beaten MIT and lost to Southern Conn. UMass' victory over URI gave them third place to Southern (1st) and Bowdoin (2nd). Top scorers throughout the tournament were Duncan Lomas and Russ Yarworth, with Bob Corb, Barry Eisenberg, and Rick Mansfield adding several goals each. Ben Crooker and a few women players provided excellent defense.

The men's next game, with Brown, is at home this Saturday at Boyden Pool at 11:00 a.m. This should prove to be a tough one since Brown was recently seeded first in New England to UMass' sixth. Hopefully, Brown will send their women up with their men to add one more game to our women's schedule.

well established in front and held on from there.

Coach Ken O'Brien had nothing but good things to say about the win. "The kids felt good when running and looked great as well. They still seem to be running well within themselves and are continually improving which is what we want at this point," O'Brien said.

Other positive aspects of the meet were the fact that there was only a gap of 31 seconds between the first five runners on the squad. Also, the first five were all within a minute of Marina Buckley, who is without a doubt the number one runner in New England.

The women will have their next meet at home on Wednesday when they take on Dartmouth and Wesleyan over the orchard course. This will give UMass sports fans one more chance to see the top team in New England in action before the New England championship October 23.

Heyl and Sharton went three sets with their URI opponents to win the third doubles competition 6-7, 6-4, 7-5.

Barnhart and Kalan were ousted by their URI counterparts 7-6, 6-4.

Green whipped UNH's Harrison 6-1, 6-2 to take the second singles division while Sharton beat his UNH opponent 6-4, 6-4 to win the fifth singles division.

Kalan lost to Peterson of UConn 6-2, 4-6, 6-3, while Barhart lost to UNH's Taylor 6-4, 6-4. Both losses were first round matches.

The results of the championships, which make up the final standings of the season, are: UNH first, followed by UMass, URI, UVM, UConn, BU, and UMaine.

J.V. gridders tie Big Green as field goal attempt fails

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

If a tie is really like kissing your sister, then last Friday's UMass-Dartmouth junior varsity football was the most exciting time anyone ever had doing that.

The Minutemen marched 47 yards with less than a minute to play, only to have a 43-yard field goal attempt by Mark Curley blocked with four seconds remaining, forcing the game to end in a 20-20 tie.

Dartmouth came into the contest with a 15-game undefeated streak to protect, and it appeared that the Big Green was going to have an easy time chalking up number 16 in a row. It went on a grinding, 16-play touchdown march the first time it handled the ball, with fullback Greg Jenkins diving in from two yards out for the touchdown. However John Gogolak's extra point attempt was wide, one of two he would fail on in the game.

UMass, though, came right back with a scoring drive of its own. Big 24 and 11-yard runs by halfback Cliff Pedrow plus a 10-yard jaunt by fullback Steve Milkiewicz brought the Minutemen into field goal range, whereupon Curley booted a 34-yard three-pointer to bring UMass a little closer.

The Minutemen held Dartmouth the next time it got the ball, forcing the Big Green to punt. But UMass' Jay Fredkin fumbled the kick and Dartmouth capitalized on the miscue to score a second time. The touchdown honors went to Jenkins again, as he gathered in a 10-yard pass from quarterback Buddy Teevans and slithered into the end zone. Gogolak's kick was blocked, however, making the score 12-3.

The score stayed that way until midway in the third quarter, when UMass got on the board a second time. McEvilly fired an 8-yard touchdown pass to Pedrow, who made a super one-hand, behind the back catch as he stopped dead in the end zone to haul it in. A big play in the dirve was a pass interference call on Dartmouth's Chico Denison on a third and 17 play. It gave UMass a first and goal on the Big Green's one.

UMass took the lead by a point the next time it had the ball. McEvilly hooked up with flanker Kevin O'Connor on a 64-yard pass play to bring the baal deep into Dartmouth territory, and then Curley kicked another field goal, this time from 38 yards out.

The Minutemen took the lead early in the fourth quarter, as McEvilly once again hit O'Connor with a perfect strike for a 36-yard TD pass. Another pass interference call hurt the Big Green on third and long in the drive.

Dartmouth tied things up with a play-action pass from Teevans to wide-open split end Phil Arant, who galloped in from 40 yards out. Teevans then hit halfback Kelvin Hardy in the end zone for the 2-point conversion.

The Big Green had two other chances to score in the game. But UMass cornerback Brian Heyworth killed off one with an interception at his own five-yard line in the second quarter, and just prior to Curley's last-second field goal attempt, halfback Rob Robinson was stopped for a one-yard loss on fourth and two at UMass' 18.

McEvilly completed nine out of 20 passes, including five to O'Connor, for 191 yards. He had one intercepted. Teevans was nine of 19 for 145, and also had one picked off. Robinson led all rushers with 114 yards in 18 carriers, while Pedrow gained 51 in nine for UMass.

"I have to commend the whole team," said UMass coach Tom Mullen. "They never died, they stuck with it. The offensive line did a great job allowing Dartmouth out," he added.

Mullen also credited Heyworth for his interception, and safety John Czerapowicz for his hard hitting.

UMass, whose record is now 0-0-1, travels to West Point on Friday for a game against Army.

JV harriers overpowering

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

The JV counterparts to the varsity harriers continue to dominate JV teams all across New England with victories over Plymouth State, Colby, Castledon State, and Worcester State in the Plymouth State Invitational meet held in Plymouth, Mass. this past weekend.

UMass scored 24 points while Plymouth State was next in line with 45 points. Colby, Worcester and Castledon State followed with 77, 96, and 110 respectively.

UMass won the meet by taking the second through the seventh positions.

Jim Clark of Plymouth State won the meet with a five mile course time of 24:46. But UMass then controlled the next five out of six places with Rick Walls leading the UMass attack with a second place time of 24:52.

Steve MacDougall took fourth with a time of 25:09 and was challenged closely by teammates Bruce Wenner and Steve Hilyard. Hilyard's time was 25:11.

Don Norton and Glen Lyle completed the UMass scoring placements in the top ten with Lyle finishing at 27:57.

Considering the weather conditions of hard rain, high winds, and very slippery footing, coaches Arnie Morse and Ken O'Brien were very pleased with the team's first five-mile course of the year.

Beacon Hill slides past ruggers in slop

By BRIAN KELLEY
Collegian Staff

Abominable weather conditions and powerful Beacon Hill turned vengefully upon the UMass Rugby Club and left them surprisingly satisfied with its performance despite three successive setbacks Saturday. The normally boggy Boyden playing fields became a sea of oozing mud, a veritable quagmire of sadly soaked sod, if you will, as monsoon showers saturated the scenic Amherst area.

The Minutemen A, B, and C sides were whitewashed 15-0, 11-0, and 4-0 respectively as the physically superior forward lines of the visitors battered the undermanned ruggers. The undersized home squad was at a disadvantage due to the pitifully sloppy field conditions as they were unable to find sufficient traction to offset the significant size differential.

Venerable mentor Robert "Doc" Lawrence commented, "I'm very pleased with our overall performance. We made an incredible showing — our backs tackled like demons. Considering the impressive calibre of the opposition we have every reason to be enthused. They mauled its first three opponents 77-6 with the previous closest score being 24-6. We played them much closer than the 15-0 margin indicates. Their enormous pack was dominant whereas ou backs thoroughly outclassed theirs — unfortunately today was a pack's game".

Gusts of wind, often a gale force, raised havoc with the kicking aspect of the game as field position became inordinantly important. When UMass had the wind to its advantage in the initial stanza the ruggers threatened three different times to score but couldn't capitalize on these opportunities. The immense Beacon Hill scrum pushed the pigskin over the goal line but once in the first half to gain a 4-0 lead. Frank Kenney suffered a sprained ankle, (not believed to be serious) and was replaced by reliable tackler Forrest McCluer after intermission.

The Boston based visitors with the vital influence of the ferocious wind proved to be virtually unstoppable in the second half. Twice its huge pack pounded the ball over the goal line for scores. With less than a minute remaining in the contest All-New England fly half Artie Anderson drop kicked a 20-yard field goal to complete the scoring. Outside center Keley Atteridge, dauntless defender Jeff Stefani and hustling second row man Dan Georgiana all performed spectacularly to no avail. Powerful prop Rick Fioravanti was solely missed. Fioravanti, president and acting captain of the club has suffered reoccuring head pains and may be lost for the campaign.

Henry Brown ranged from sideline to sideline making countless tackles in the B game but despite his inspirational efforts the home side dropped a grueling 11-0 decision. Bob Wronski and rookie fullback Jim D'Amico also played well. The sizeable Beacon Hill B pack controlled the smaller red and white clad ruggers as they continually gained possession — scoring two tries and adding a penalty kick.

In our opinion...

Metawampe's Grid Picks, a Collegian column found on the sports pages every Friday, has been discontinued by the paper's Board of Editors.

Realizing that the column attracted a large amount of readers, the paper's policy-making board also decided to run a similar column, but a column that would not offend any portion of our diverse student community.

As was recognized by the Editorial Board, Metawampe, as portrayed in the column, may have offended Native Americans.

The Collegian hopes that by terminating the stereotype which prevailed in Metawampe will erase any animosity that may have resulted from our mistake and build, once again, a strong relationship with all those we serve.

We hope our action is viewed by all students as one group's attempt to heighten its audience's awareness and sensitivity of the plight of all American's minorities.

We sincerely hope other groups and individuals will join in the struggle to wipe out racism on our campus, in this country, and in our world.

Netwomen drop Springfield match, 5-4

By RICHARD MOORE
Collegian Staff

The women's tennis team came out on the short end of a 5-4 score yesterday, as Springfield College dumped the Minutewomen in a match rescheduled from Saturday's rainout.

Coach Ken Rubin had to move all his singles players up one slot, as nubber one player Jennifer Ranz was unavailable for the match.

Dawn Minaai played in the number one position, and lost to Springfield's Robin Rich by scores of 1-6, 4-6. Number two player Carolyn Mooney lost her match to Kate Purcell, 1-6, 1-6. Kathy Sullivan won the only singles match for the UMass women, playing in the third position. She defeated Sprinnfield's Marty Dickerson 6-3, 4-6, and 6-3. Martha Awiszus played in the number four position and lost to Gail Danbra 3-6, 1-6. Caron Tsapatsaris also went down to defeat at the hands of Jan Renzi 2-6, 4-6. Debbie Halpern played in the sixth position and lost her match 1-6, 3-6.

The losses suffered by Awiszus and Minaai were their first of the season. Sullivan has now run off three consecutive victories.

The women were unbeatable in doubles winning all three matches. The number one doubles team of Karen Holt and Nancy O'Neil won for the second straight time, defeating Springfield's Helen Mria and Linda Wolf, 7-6, 6-2. Jeanette Flynn and Leslie Howell, lost their first match 5-7, and then came back to score 6-3, 6-0 wins. The team of Sue Store and Susanne Boissevan took their match 7-6, 4-6, and 7-5 from Springfield's Jill Peterson and Cam Damloft.

Rubin was extremely pllased with the team's doubles play. "Our girls won in doubles because of their strategy," he said. "We've been working a lot on doubles strategy in practice, and it's paid off, as we've won our last five doubles matches in a row."

The women's record now stands at 2-3. The women are at home tomorrow afternoon for a 3:30 match against Brandeis.

Spikers take double sting, Springfield, UConn prevail

By LAURIE WHITING
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's volleyball team dropped its fourth and fifth matches in a row to dominating Springfield and UConn squads last Saturday.

As UMass' first opponent in the tri-meet, Springfield made short work of the best-of-three match, winning easily in the first two games, 15-7 and 15-8. According to UMass coach Dianne Thompson, Springfield shouldn't have won by such a big margin.

"Springfield isn't that strong of a team," (as strong as the score seemed to have indicated) commented Thompson. "We really weren't playing as well as we're capable of. We served too many long balls (out of bounds), were indecisive lots of times, and the team definitely had a lack of communication," Thompson said.

UMass' second match against UConn was pretty much the same story. UConn grabbed two games in a row, 15-8 and 15-3. Besides communication difficulties, the UMass women were not "opening up" to teammates for direct line-ups on the serve, according to Thompson.

But something did go right. UMass' Shelly Soules and Deb Kuzdeba had good games. Kuzdeba's blocking was outstanding, and Soules played her "best game ever".

"I was really pleased with the way Deb and Shelly played," said Thompson. "Shelly played the best game she's played all season. She was heads up and hustling all the way. Deb's blocking really improved, but she's getting caught in the net a bit."

Subs Joan Wotkowicz and Lynn Decosmo saw some play in Saturday's game, but were limited because Coach Thompson wanted the starting six to play more uninterrupted, cohesive sets to gain some "momentum".

Sue Sabia, back from a shoulder injury got time on the court. Not having played for the past several matches, Sabia was out of the usual line-up and had "an off day" in addition. Starter Jayne Greenberg was also slowed down a bit after sustaining a knee injury in a collision while practicing.

"Winning and losing is losing importance at this point," says Thompson. "Now the main thing we want to achieve is just playing a good game. We've got talent on this team. The hardest part for us is putting it all together. I can see that in the lack of communication and indecisiveness."

UMass JVs lost a three-out-of-five match with Springfield, 15-4, 10-15, 9-15, 15-13 and 8-15. According to Coacc Linda Wetherby, serving was the team's downfall. "We just served too many out balls. In the fourth game we started to rally again, though, but we still didn't serve well and we weren't getting any good ups.

The women's next game is today with Eastern Nazarene and Salem State, at Eastern Nazarene.

IM football favorites develop

By MICHAEL SHULMAN
and JEFFREY WEINER
Collegian Staff

Intramural football divisional and league favorites have surfaced following the third week of "gridiron" competition. Some of the league leaders in their respected divisions are: The Hamlin Hawks of the Residence League who sport an undefeated record. Beta Kappa Phi stands alone in the Trojan Division, B.K.'s fine offensive machine had scored 129 points while defensively it has given up a stingy 17 points.

Other leagues that have undefeated teams coming down the stretch are Field North and the McNamara Mustangs of the Sylvan Division. Both teams are holding on to respectable 3-0 records. The Orchard Hill Division is lead by the Kennedy Kannabills and the A.C.U. Jacks. The John Adams' Wildmen and the Kennedy Uppers both stand on top in very close East Tower Division, while Central Division has its share of co-leaders, the Chadbourne Maroons and the Fukowees. The Fukowees have not allowed a point thus far in intramural play.

The fine spirit and competition of the intramural program was in evidence last Thursday, as the Bucs knocked off the Skinless Weasles from the ranks of the unbeaten. The victory knotted the two teams for first place in the Atlantic Division of the Independent League.

The Bucs dominated the first half and at intermission lead 15-0. Chip Sakakeeny floated a halfback option pass to Andy Scheffer for the first score, and Bill "Momentum" Hayes ran for the second touchdown. However the second half proved to be a different story as Weasels' quarterback Ken Pincolini found his favorite receivers Len Caffery and Dave Lautman for numerous completions downfield. With 1:00 remaining the Weasels found themselves on top by the score of 19-15. Quickly, the Bucs marched downfield led by quarterback Skip Alprin. With the ball on the Weasels' three yard line and twenty seconds on the clock, Alprin rolled left and found Bob Oskar in the end zone for the winning score and the share of first place.

Booters gain bite, Terriers only bark as UMass rolls

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The Minutemen soccer team overcame the loss of three starters and treacherous weather conditions Saturday as it shot down Boston University, 3-0. The victory was the first in the Yankee Conference for UMass, lifting its overall record to 2-4.

Head coach Russ Kidd was obviously elated after his team's finest performance thus far. "We really needed that one," he exclaimed. "We got all the breaks today. We had a dry crease in the first half and a strong wind behind us in the second half. They folded in the second half. They just couldn't cope with the wind."

The weather played a significant role in the game. The hard driving rain and gusting wind acted almost as another team against UMass and BU. It helped UMass in that they were able to take advantage of the strong wind. The slippery field did keep forward Dave Tagliavini out of the game, however, as he didn't want to risk reinjuring a recently sprained ankle. Ed Niemiec (sprained ankel) also sat out the game, as did Tony Biladeau after tearing knee ligaments in Friday's practice.

The Minutemen, with their revamped line-up, charged at the BU defense immediately after the opening whistle. Forwards Mike Shannon and Mark Abbott, seeing more action due to the injuries, had quick shots saved by BU goalie Howie Friedman. Bob McChesney, playing center halfback, looked brilliant at times in setting up the forwards. Even fullback Mike Parsons, who made several clutch defensive plays, took a couple of long shots which were barely saved.

The pressure finally paid off. Parsons drove up the field past a couple of defenders and lofted a nice lead pass into the middle. McChesney raced toward the ball and directed a low shot into the net past the charging Terrier goalie.

BU made its strongest effort of the game at the outset of the second half. Although Andy Moore scared BU goalie Friedman with two long, accurate shots, it was the Terriers who were applying the most pressure. BU forwards Tony Clair and Mike Pilger teamed for a couple of open shots, but the combination of the slippery footing and Mark Hanks' acrobatics in goal thwarted any goal opportunities.

As the rain and the wind became stronger, so did the Minutemen. An Irish setter, enjoying the storm more than anyone, stole the show for a while, but the Minutemen settled down to control the pace of the game. Long passes and shots over the struggling BU defense set up numerous scoring situations. It was just a matter of time as to when BU goalie Friedman would fall victim to the rainstorm and the storm of shots on goal.

The Minutemen finally connected at 24:21 of the half. Mark Vasington passed to Mike DeCosta, who fired a low hard shot into the net for his first goal of the season. About twenty minutes later Mark Abbott shot into the upper right corner of the net to put away the Terriers.

UMass assistant coach Arthur Quinton concisely summed up the team's performance; "We adapted to the condition better by hitting the ball rather than trying to play short."

Russ Kiss noted that the rain hurt BU more than UMass. "They are a running team," he said, "so they were slowed down, but today we were tough. Once you get ahead on a day like today, it's hard for the other team to catch up."

Kidd went on to praise his players, "Bobby McChesney played his best game ever at UMass, and he was playing in a new position. Mark Abbott played his best game here, and Hanks was just outstanding in goal. I've never seen him kick the ball better. It was a strong, gutsy team effort."

Booter Banter: UMass has almost a week to recover from injuries, as they play next against a strong URI team in Kingston Friday. UMass outshot BU 48-15 and had six corner kicks to the Terriers' four BU is now 4-5, and 1-3 in the Yankee Conference.

Harriers sail over opponents as UMass soph takes honors

In the second enactment of Noah's Ark and the tornado scene in the Wizard of Oz, the men's cross country team beat Connecticut, Manhattan, and Syracuse following with 52, 60, and 77 points respectively.

Running in what UMass coach Ken O'Brien termed as the tail-end of a hurricane, the Minutemen increased their season record to 8-1. Conditions were described as a torrential rain storm with 50 mph winds, six inches of standing water, and limited visibility.

UMass sophomore Mike Quinn won the individual competition as he scored his third consecutive meet victory with a time of 26.23 over the treacherous five mile course.

Other UMass runners contributing to the team total of 41 were Chris Farmer—4th, Louis Panaccionne—5th, Cliff Staples—15th, and John Scheer—16th.

UMass was without two of its top three runners, John McGrail and Frank Carroll, as the senior captain took his law boards on the day of the meet and Carroll had a mild cold. Both are expected to run this Friday as UMass will take on Vermont and New Hampshire in Vermont.

After pushing and shoving his way through the first mile of the race, Quinn and freshman Manhattan runner Lewis Ostalazager set themselves as pace leaders. Quinn, at the two mile mark took off on Ostalazager and at the three mile stage increased his lead on the Orangeman runner to 15 seconds and 30 yards and never relinquished the lead again.

Ostalazager was the most recruited high school runner on the east coast behind Wayland, Mass's Alberto Salazar.

Closely contesting Ostalazager was UConn's number one runner Bruce Clark who finished third with a time of 27:02. UMass's second and third runners, Chris Farmer and Louis Panaccionne, were closely behind Clark with Farmer being 27:05 and Panaccione holding down the fifth position at 27:09.

A combination of Syracuse, Manhattan, and Connecticut runners comprised the 6th to 14th positions. But a UMass quartet of Staples, Scheer, Kevin McCusker, and Matt Wolff controlled the 15-18 positions with Staples' and Scheers' finishes clinching the meet for UMass.

According to coach O'Brien, the conditions of rain, winds, mud, and limited visibility were the worst conditions he has ever seen for a cross country meet.

"In all my years of coaching, these were the worse conditions I have ever seen. I have run with four inches of snow on the ground with 28 degree temperatures but snow doesn't even come close to Saturday's conditions," said O'Brien.

O'Brien noted that many runners fell at least two times during the meet and that everyone had a mudcaked uniform. O'Brien said that many of the runners were spiked and had cuts and bruises on their legs and hips.

UMass freshman Jay Legere received the most serious injuries of the day with a twisted wrist, a chipped tooth, and several hip bruises. Legere, however, is expected to run again this Friday.

"These runners looked more like injured football players than anything else. We could have been at Boston University playing UMass and received as many injuries," said O'Brien.

UMass runner Mike Quinn said the meet was the most challenging he has run all year. "In a way, it was interesting, but I will take a dry course any day of the week. I do, however run best on a wet course," said Quinn.

Previously Manhattan was undefeated with a record of 3-0 and Syracuse and Connecticut had 4-1 records. Connecticut surprised UMass with its strong showing.

"We knew," said O'Brien, "that UConn would be tough with one of New England's best runners — Bruce Clark. Generally the UConn kids ran a great race because they ran together. I would rate them as one of New England's ten best teams," O'Brien said.

Women romp again as harriers top field

The UMass women's cross country team continued its dominance of the New England scene over the weekend as it easily defeated a field of eight teams in the Brandeis Invitational.

The final team totals had UMass with 22 points, MIT, 91, Bowdoin 98, Southern Connecticut 109 and Brandeis 110. Four other teams did not finish enough runners to qualify for the team standings.

Amherst's Marina Buckley proved again that she is the class of New England as she finished first by a wide margin. Her time of 17:32 over the three-mile course broke her own record which she set last year as a high school senior. The previous record was 17:59 which indicated great improvement on Buckley's part.

Julie Lafreniere continued her season long improvement as she broke through to place first for UMass and second in the race. Her time of 18:03 represented a major improvement over last year and portends better things to come as the season progresses.

Trailing Lafreniere by only two seconds was Maggie Crowley, who has also been improving steadily all season and seems to be peaking at the right time.

In a switch, usual front runner Johara Chapman ran fourth with a time of 18:12. She was closely followed by Donna Randle of Brandeis. Sue Swartz and Barb Callahan rounded out the top five for UMass as they finished sixth and seventh respectively. swartz, who has consistently run at the front all year, ran a time of 18:21. Callahan, showing a lot of promise for the future, as well as this season, finished with a time of 18:34.

Also breaking into the top ten and completing the top seven for UMass was Anne Bradshaw in ninth and Jane Welzel, who finished tenth. This completed the dominance that the women displayed from the starters gun. It's pack of seven runners went right to the front in the first mile, as they are won't do, and maintained their iron grip on the meet from that point on.

Buckley, as is also her habit, went to the front of the pack of 48 harriers at the gun and ran away with the whole show. After a mile loope around the school, she was

UMass 'reigns', 33-6

Wind-swept, driving rain, which forced 15 fumbles at the UMass-Boston University game and turned the New Hampshire-Maine contest into a roll in the mud, helped set up a confrontation this coming weekend between the only two remaining undefeated Yankee Conference teams.

Maine, previously winless in YanCon play, took advantage of the quagmirish conditions at Durham, N.H. Saturday to upset UNH and hand the Wildcats their first conference loss.

The artificial surface at BU's Nickerson Field prevented such a mess, however. Footing was hardly a problem — holding onto the footbal was.

Eleven of those 15 fumbles squirted out of BU hands Saturday, and UMass gave a textbook example of capitalizing on the opponents' mistakes, scoring four second-half touchdowns to slide by the Terriers, 33-6.

It was the second conference victory without a loss for the Minutemen, who face Rhode Island (idle last week, 1-0 in the YanCon) this Saturday at Kingston, R.I.

Because of the rain and the slippery football, both UMass and BU had to alter their usual offenses. The option plays and veer attack regularly employed by both teams were far too risky, as was any attempt at passing by either team.

As a result, the first half had all the makings of a tedious scoreless tie, until UMass running back Rich Jessamy decided to pull out his walk-on-water routine from a year ago, and zipped 78 yards for a 6-0 UMass lead which held until halftime.

Mistakes told the whole story of the Minutemen's domination of the rest of the game. BU's Ron Verrilli was forced to punt seven times in the first half, yet not at all in the second. Instead, the Terriers found new ways of giving the ball to the Minutemen.

BU's first four possessions of the second half resulted in fumble, fumble, fumble, interception. And UMass turned each turnover into a touchdown.

"I thought we did a great job with only a 6-0 lead and avoiding making mistakes that could have got us in trouble," said UMass coach Dick MacPherson after the game. "That's not easy on a day like today."

BU, on the other hand, couldn't avoid those mistakes, due in part, no doubt, to the absence of running backs Roger Strandberg and Mike Morrison, and quarterback Greg Geiger, who injured his shoulder in BU's loss to Harvard a week before.

Saturday's game obviously turned on one play. Down 6-00. BU was forced to punt early in the second half, but the snap from center skipped across the puddles through Verrilli's legs. Verrilli recovered the ball on his own one-yard line.

Three quarterback sneaks later, UMass' Brian McNally nudged the ball over and, with McNally scoring the two-point conversion on a quarterback draw, the Minutemen had a 14-0 lead, commanding considering the conditions and the play of the UMass defense.

From there, UMass just jumped on every BU mistake. Middle guard Phil Puopolo smothered a fumble by BU quarterback Art Smedberg. Three minutes later McNally heaved a floater towards tight end Kevin Cummings, who gathered it in and tiptoed around the left flag for the score.

"Kevin Cummings is just a helluva receiver, that's all there is to it," said MacPherson. It was the third touchdown reception on the year for the reserve receiver.

On BU's very next play from scrimmage, Smedberg fumbled and John MacDonald recovered for UMass. Six plays later, Mike Fallon, replacing McNally, scored from two yards out for a 27-0 lead.

The Terriers actually mounted a drive on their next possession, travelling from their own 28 to the UMass 26. but Dave Croasdale then picked off a Smedberg pass, which soon resulted in a 60-yard TD run by Dennis Dent.

"Hank Sareault threw a great block," said Dent in the excited UMass locker room after the game. Dent followed the fullback's block through the line and ran untouched for the score.

A pass interference call at the UMass one-yard line handed BU its only score with only three minutes left.

Defensive end Dennis Fenton was given the game ball by his UMass teammates, which only goes to show that statistics can lie. The official game stats credit Fenton with no solo tackles and only two assists.

"Dennis Fenton is the most dedicated and conditioned football player we've ever had," said MacPherson.

DEFENSIVE LINES ... Co-captain and linebacker John Toner was in the lineup for the first time this season, and was credited with five solo tackles on the afternoon. "It's nice to have your co-captain back in the lineup," said MacPherson. ... Steve Telander, who has also been out all year, hopes to be back at his rover position for the UConn game, a week from Saturday. He just started running last week, and is being extra cautious with his knee ... The official estimated attendance was 1000 Saturday, which evoked howls of laughter from those in the press box. A more realistic guess would have been 250 ... Jessamy's 98 yards brought him within 97 yards of the all-time UMass rushing record.

Netmen finish second in YanCon tourney

By MIKE SMOLENS
Collegian Staff

The UMass men's tennis team's occasional spectacular play could not match UNH's consistent performance as the Minutemen finished second behind the Wildcats in the Yankee Conference Championships held at UMaine last weekend.

UMass won four of the nine divisions of competition at the championships, more than any other team. However, the Minutemen could not win the needed points in the other divisions to overcome UNH's total score.

Alan Green, Rickey Sharton and Steve Heyl won their respective divisions while the team of Sharton and Heyl came out on top in the third doubles competition.

"Some spectacular tennis was played", said UMass coach Bill Brown. "However, we got hit hard in the first round."

Barnaby Kalan and Jimmy Barnhart were knocked out of the championships early after losing their first round singles matches and then as a team by losing their opening doubles match.

Perhaps the greatest disappointment for UMass was Adam Rosen's 3-6, 5-7 loss to UVM's Peter Cooper in the first singles division. Cooper, who had lost to Rosen in regular season play, went on to win the division.

Rosen did pick up points fir the MInutemen with his doubles partner Alan Green by reaching the finals in the first doubles competition. In the finals the two Minutemen lost to the UNH team of Aarts and Harrison, 6-3, 3-6, 6-1.

Early losses proved to be UMass' downfall, despite its numerous divisional victories. UNH, winning only two divisions, proved that staying alive in all divisions was more important than winning divisional titles.

"UNH was strong where it counted," said Brown. "Their consistency was the key."

"In the championships each win is worth one point," he explained, "It's the same for a final match as it is in the first round. It was in matches, otherthan finals, where UNH picked up the points."

Brown was pleased with his teams performance, despite their second place finish. "We wanted that top spot," Brown said, "but I'm not disappointed. Over all we played very well. Steve Heyl played his best ever."

Heyl received the revenge he sought as he beat URI's Morris, an opponent he lost to in the regular season.

After dropping the first set 2-6, Heyl battled back to take the second set 7-6 by winning the tie-breaker 5-4. He won the third set 6-0.

YanCon title is up for grabs

The Yankee Conference football race, to put it mildly, is all bollixed up.

After five weeks of the season, just two undefeated teams remain. And surprise, surprise, the University of New Hampshire is not one of them.

On a field more resembling the ingredients for your kid brother or sisters' best mud pies than a football gridiron, the Wildcats were upset by Maine (1), 10-0, last Saturday.

While New Hampshire was attempting to pull its feet out of the muck, the UMass gridders were swimming in the Charles River (oops!) Nickerson Field and drowning their counterparts from Boston University by the tune of 33-6.

As it stands now, UMass has a YanCon record of 2-0, while Rhode Island (shock number three) is 1-0. The Rams are fortunate to be even playing this year, let alone winning. Taking a cue from Vermont, URI also became the second Conference school to drop football from its athletic department. After last season, its trustees made the decision to keep the pigskin in play. As it is, the Rams only play eight games, but there they are undefeated.

Running down the rest of the members' records, New Hampshire slipped to 2-1 with its loss, Maine is now 1-2, while UConn is 0-1 (0-5 overall) and Boston University ranks last at 0-2.

OK, OK, so it's early. But don't be surprised if 1976 in the Yankee Conference ends up resembling totally messed-up 1974.

That year saw Massachusetts wipe out Maine, 42-0, only to wind up sharing the Beanpot (emblematic of YanCon supremacy) with the Black Bears in one of the most totally strangest set of circumstances you'd ever want to run across.

One week, Massachusetts would wipe out Maine. The next, Maine would beat Connecticut. Another, UConn would nip UMass, 10-9. And then Vermont, of all people, would beat UMass, 25-22. It finally came to be that the Minutemen and Black Bears had identical 4-2 YanCon records, and each went home half-happy.

The last time UMass took undisputed possession of the Beanpot was in 1972, also the last time the Minutemen went to a post-season bowl game. In all, UMass has either won or shared the Beanpot eight times.

This year appears to be UMass'. That muddy loss New Hampshire suffered on Saturday may critically injure its chances. But, then again, upsets do occur. So UMass had best beware when it travels to Kingston this weekend to battle the Rams. And although UConn is winless in six total tries, the Huskies are still only 0-1 in the Conference, with its loss coming to UNH.

At this point in time (and where have I heard that phrase before), the only teams that appear to be out of it are Maine and BU. The Terriers even more so than the Black Bears, because on good days (not even counting Saturday) their offense resembles a cross between Amherst Regional High School's and the Hartford Knights.

So should all go as planned in the Yankee Conference between now and November 13, the clash between UMass and UNH won't be as it was last year. Instead of meaning an outright title between the two contestants, it will mean either a solo crown for the Minutemen or a tie for the Wildcats. The suspense won't be there like it was last year in Durham, and the game probably won't be carried on public television, either.

But first, UMass, watch out for Rhode Island and Connecticut. Please?

Blacks and the Economic Crisis

By J. S. Rep. RONALD V. DELLUMS

Whenever there is economic crisis, the black community feels the worst of it. Whenever we hear talk of economic retrenchment, we know that we are going to get retrenched more than anybody. Whenever we hear cries about cutting federal spending, we know these cuts will not come in the huge subsidies to special interests and industry, but in programs vital to the people. Thus, we have a greater motive than most people to find out the basic causes of our present economic mess and do something about it. Other people can be content with half-measures, because that always means that we get half of what we have been getting before. For our own good, we are going to have to take the lead in solving this country's problems.

People are beginning to notice that while politicians are always talking about the government taking "bold new steps" to solve our problems, the government never seems to do anything, good or bad, smart or foolish. I discovered one basic reason for this soon after I came to Congress. The government does not seem to have any money. Most people will not believe this when they look at the size of the federal budget and notice how much of their paycheck gets sent to Washington each year. And yet it is true; all that money is hauled over in wheelbarrows to a building in Virginia and poured down a rathole. The building is called the Pentagon, and its stranglehold over the American government is the most important problem facing our politics. Our domestic programs will remain the half-hearted, ineffective gestures that most of them are now until we tackle one of the basic causes for the domestic failure of government — the military budget.

In part, it is a simple matter of money. The military takes up by far the greatest percentage of resources available to government. If we consider past, present and future wars, we see that 59 per cent of the budget goes to the military — 40 per cent for current military expenditures and 19 per cent for veterans benefits and interest on the national debt (which resulted mainly from massive spending in wartime). And more importantly, if we look just at money not already committed in some fashion (for example, social security) and therefore still under the control of Congress for current problems, we see that the pressure of military spending is even higher. Obviously, there has been no decrease to reflect the end of the Indochina War; so for the first time in American history we find ourselves without extra resources to attack the backlog of problems that inevitably grow up during wartime.

Perhaps more importantly, the military leviathan diverts from our limited supply of energy and commitment. Military issues take up far too much time and creativity of our political leaders — from the President on down. As anyone who has worked in Washington knows, the Pentagon bureaucracy is the only one with the staff and the money to get its job done completely. The Pentagon has an astonishing total of more than 4¼ million employes, including both military and civilian personnel. This should be compared to the largest civilian department, Health, Education and Welfare, which has a total employment of nearly 150,000. And the civilian economy is depleted by the technical talent used for military hardware — which is one reason foreign countries are outperforming us economically.

A number of us have been trying very hard to awaken the House to these realities — despite opposition from the excessively subservient House Armed Services Committee. However, I believe that in the 94th Congress that convened in January, the situation will be more favorable to our struggle. For example, the reactionary F. Edward Hebert was deprived of the chairmanship of the House Armed Services Committee by the new Democratic Caucus.

There are many places where the defense budget can be cut without affecting overall military efficiency, but I would like to call specific attention to the question of reducing our overseas military manpower. Although more publicity goes to the huge and wasteful weapons systems, the real bulk of military spending is related to these troops. Debate on these overseas commitments is now the central military budget issue in Congress. Unless changes are made here, the shape of the military budget will stay substantially the same.

At present, public debate about overseas troops concentrates too much on Europe. For large numbers of our troops scattered all over the world, there is not even the once-valid strategic rationale that the European-based troops have. These many deployments have long outlived whatever usefulness they might have had, and are kept in existence only through bureaucratic inertia, because of the lack of attention given to them — and it should be imphasized that no specific level of troops anywhere is determined by treaty commitment.

Let's take a look at some of this deployment. In Japan, the strongest country in Asia, we have 52,000 troops. In South Korea, we have 40,000 troops, even though the South Korean army, with plenty of experience, is much larger than the North Korean army, which hasn't seen combat since the Korean War. And there are considerable deployments in Thailand and the Philippines. In Europe, the largest deployment by far is in Germany, with 207,000 troops — not counting civilian employes and dependents. But even if we leave this to one side, we still have to wonder about the 12,000 troops in England, and so on almost indefinitely. And there are dozens of small deployments in Africa, Asia and South America where helpful reductions could be made.

The Pentagon uses the threat of cutting off its domestic spending as a way of shoring up political support for a group that most citizens are beginning to see as parasitic. But overseas spending does no one over here any good, and yet that spending is never cut. The Pentagon gets away with this because the overseas spending is not visible — until we start asking ourselves, "Where does all the money go?"
